That Mr. Antrobus was also to call our attention to the fact that by the Cyprus Extradition Order in Council, dated the 15th of July, 1881, a draft of which was approved by the Law Officers on the 20th of May, 1881, power was given in pursuance of the provisions of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act to hand over persons who had been accused or convicted of offences committed in foreign countries to the respective Governments of those countries.

That Mr. Antrobus was to request us to take these matters into our consideration, and to advise you—

1. Whether, in the event of Agreements being made between the authorities of British and Foreign Protectorates for the mutual surrender of fugitive criminals, it would be within the power of the legislative authority of such British Protectorates to make laws similar to the Extradition Acts to provide for the arrest, detention and surrender of such criminals.
2. Generally.

---

* Nos. 200, 255, 259, and 302 in Vol. III.; 112A and 114A in Vol. IV.; 29A, 46, 59, 74, 115, and 126 in Vol. V.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, in the case of Protectorates where His Majesty claims general jurisdiction, and not merely over British subjects, and by virtue of the prerogative assumes or delegates legislative authority, it would be competent for the legislative authority of the Protectorate to make laws similar to the Extradition Acts, so as to give effect to Agreements with other countries for the mutual surrender of fugitive criminals.

We have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

List of Papers.

Colonial Office to Foreign Office	.. .. April	6, 1901.
Foreign Office to Colonial Office	.. .. "	30, "
Colonial Office to Foreign Office	.. .. May	30, "
Law Officers to Foreign Office	.. .. April	29, 1879.
Law Officers to Colonial Office	.. .. May	20, 1881.
Ditto	.. .. July	11, "
Ditto	.. .. November	24, 1883.
Law Officers to Foreign Office	.. .. March	3, 1888.
Ditto	.. .. "	14, "
Ditto	.. .. "	1, 1893.
Law Officers to Colonial Office	.. .. November	21, "
Ditto	.. .. April	18, 1894.
Ditto	.. .. August	24, "
Ditto	.. .. "	12, 1896.
Ditto	.. .. February	3, 1897.
Order in Council	.. .. May	9, 1891.
Ditto	.. .. July	30, "

No. 8 B. [Colonial Office.]

[October 3, 1901.]

Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, October 3, 1901.

Sir,

Jurisdiction of Natal Courts over people carrying on business in the Colony.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. H. Bertram Cox's letter of the 23rd August last, stating that he was directed to request us to take into consideration, and to favour you with our Report on a proposal which had been made by the Durban Chambers of Commerce to strengthen the jurisdiction of the Natal Law Courts over persons carrying on some part of their business in that Colony but residing elsewhere.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to transmit to us a despatch dated the 15th January, 1901, from the Governor of Natal, together with copies of an extract from a Report adopted at a General Meeting of the Durban Chamber of Commerce on the 20th November, 1900, a Minute by the Acting Chief Justice of Natal, dated the 10th December, 1900, and other papers accompanying the despatch referred to.

That on the 27th February those papers were laid before the Board of Trade, with a request that you might be furnished with their observations thereon.

That on the 2nd August the Board forwarded their observations, transmitting therewith copies of an opinion by Mr. Muir Mackenzie, dated the 22nd April, a Memorandum by the Inspector-General in Bankruptcy, dated the 25th April, and a further opinion by Mr. Muir Mackenzie, dated the 29th May.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to request us to take the above-mentioned papers into our consideration, and to Report:

1. Whether we concurred generally in the Board of Trade's observations, and the opinion of Mr. Muir Mackenzie.

1901

2. Whether legislation of the character proposed by the Durban Chamber of Commerce was desirable.

3. If the answer to the last question was in the affirmative, upon what lines such legislation should proceed.

4. Generally.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to—

Report—

1. That we concur generally in the observations of the Board of Trade, and in the opinion of Mr. Muir Mackenzie, so far as it is material to the questions raised by the despatch of the Governor of Natal.

2. We do not consider that further legislation is necessary at present to remedy the evils complained of by the Durban Chamber of Commerce. If proper Rules on the lines of Order XI, and the draft Rules proposed by Mr. Muir Mackenzie, are framed under section 69 of "The Supreme Court Act, 1896, of the Colony of Natal," the plaintiff will be able to bring the defendant before the Courts of Natal, and to obtain Judgment in those Courts against him (Ashbury v. Ellis, 1893, A. C., p. 339). Whether that Judgment will be enforced by the Courts of another country must always be a question for the Courts of that country to determine; and, at any rate, the resident in Natal will be in no worse position than the resident in England with regard to the bringing of an action in a foreign country on the Judgment he has obtained in England or Natal, as the case may be.

3. We are of opinion that the proposal of the Acting Chief Justice, that all foreigners should be required by Statute, before they carry on business in Natal, to file in some proper office a document expressly agreeing to submit to the jurisdiction of Natal Courts, would tend to operate in restraint of trade, and would not be desirable. It will always be open to persons resident in Natal, when entering into a Contract with foreign persons or Corporations, to make it a term of the Contract that the Natal Courts shall have jurisdiction.

4. We think the draft Rules prepared by Mr. Muir Mackenzie should be submitted to the local authorities for their observations thereon.

We have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

No. 9.

[October 11, 1901.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

War in South Africa: Appeal of Boer Delegates to the Hague Tribunal.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, October 1, 1901.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers, as noted in the accompanying list, on the subject of the competence of the Administrative Council of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at the Hague to deal with a letter which has been addressed to them by the Boer Delegates in Europe soliciting their intervention in regard to various questions arising out of the war in South Africa.

It appears to Lord Lansdowne that Articles XXVI and XXXI of the Final Act of the International Peace Conference, in accordance with the terms of which the question would have to be considered, make it necessary that both the parties to a dispute and not one only should in such a case apply for arbitration; and that the attempt made by the Boer Delegates to overcome this difficulty by a reference to Article XXVII cannot be considered to the point since not only is that Article applicable to the Signatory Powers of the Final Act alone but even in their case only applies to disputes which seem likely to break out (où un conflit aigu menacerait d'éclater), and not to such as have already done so and been actually followed by war.

I am to request you to be good enough to take this letter and its accompanying papers into your consideration and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to the correctness of the above view of the question, and also with any other observations in regard to it which may occur to you.

I am to add that his Lordship would be glad of an early reply on the subject as a sitting of the Administrative Council to consider the question is expected shortly to take place, and the tenour of the instructions to be given in regard to it to His Majesty's Minister at the Hague will naturally greatly depend on your answer to the present letter.

A copy of the Final Act of the Peace Conference is inclosed for convenience of reference pp. 284 et seq. of Miscellaneous No. 1, 1899.

I am, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

Sir H. Howard, No. 38, Africa, 1901.
" " No. 132, Africa, 1901.
Miscellaneous, No. 1, 1899 [C. 9534].

Report.

We agree with the view taken by your Lordship as stated in the letter of reference. There is nothing in the Hague Convention to authorise the Signatory Powers or the Permanent Court to take any steps with a view to arbitration under the circumstances existing in the case of the war with the late South African Republics (now the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies).

Article XXVI has no application unless the belligerents agree to have recourse to the Permanent Court, and Article XXVII only applies to disputes between any of the Signatories, and, even in that case, is not relevant once hostilities have broken out.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
October 11, 1901.

Annex.

Extract from the "Indépendance Belge" of September 13, 1901.

LES Délégués Plénipotentiaires de la République Sud-Africaine et de l'État Libre d'Orange ont envoyé l'adresse suivante au Conseil Administratif de la Cour Permanente d'Arbitrage à La Haye:—

"La Haye, le 10 Septembre, 1901.

"Les Soussignés, Délégués Plénipotentiaires de la République Sud-Africaine et Délégués Plénipotentiaires de l'État Libre d'Orange, agissant au nom de ces deux États, ont l'honneur de soumettre à votre attention les communications et les considérations suivantes:—

"En date du 9 Avril de cette année le Président de votre Conseil a porté à la connaissance des Représentants des deux États susmentionnés que la Cour Permanente d'Arbitrage avait été constitutée à La Haye.

"En leur faisant cette communication, le Président de votre Conseil fixait plus spécialement leur attention sur la stipulation de la Convention de La Haye du 29 Juillet, 1899, pour le réglement pacifique de litiges internationaux, en vertu de laquelle la juridiction de la Cour Permanente peut s'étendre à des litiges existant entre des Puissances non-Signataires ou entre des Puissances Signataires et des Puissances non-Signataires.

"En accusant la réception de cette communication on a fait savoir—au nom des Gouvernements des deux États dont les Soussignés sont les Représentants autorisés—à son Excellence le Ministre qui, à cette époque, était Président de votre Conseil que, si une sentence arbitrale de la Cour pouvait mettre fin à la guerre Sud-Africaine, leurs Gouvernements en seraient fort heureux.

1901

"Aujourd'hui que cette guerre dure depuis près de deux ans, et que rien ne permet d'en prévoir la fin, à moins que, pour la terminer, on n'ait recours au moyen que les Puissances, il y a si peu de temps, ont reconnu être le moyen le plus efficace, et en même temps le plus équitable, de régler les litiges internationaux—à savoir une sentence arbitrale—il est naturel qu'une telle solution pacifique du conflit soit reconnue de plus en plus comme étant désirable pour les deux parties.

"C'est pourquoi les États, dont les Soussignés sont les Représentants autorisés, croient devoir réitérer la proposition qu'ils ont déjà faite avant que la guerre eût éclatée, mais qui fut repoussée alors par l'Angleterre, à savoir, que le réglement des litiges qui ont amené la guerre soit soumis à la décision d'une sentence arbitrale.

"En rappelant cette ancienne proposition, et en la renouvelant aujourd'hui, ils songent tout spécialement, entre autres points, à la question de savoir si l'Angleterre est ou non dans le vrai lorsqu'elle prétend que les deux Républiques ont commis dans actes dont le but aurait été de réprimer l'élément Anglais dans l'Afrique du Sud ou de le chasser du pays, et si, d'une manière générale, les Républiques se sont rendues coupables de tel acte qui aurait pu donner à l'Angleterre, d'après les principes internationaux, le droit de leur enlever leur indépendance.

"Ils renouvellent cette proposition avec une assurance d'autant plus grande que la Cour Permanente d'Arbitrage a été créée sur l'initiative de l'Angleterre elle-même, et que le Président de votre Conseil a bien voulu fixer leur attention sur la stipulation susmentionnée, formulée dans l'Article XXVI de la Convention de La Haye.

"A ce qu'ils viennent d'exposer les Soussignés désirent ajouter encore ceci :

"Dès le début de la guerre l'Angleterre a violé, et depuis que la guerre dure elle n'a cessé de violer, les règles universellement reconnues, reconnues par l'Angleterre elle-même, comme devant être observées, dans les guerres entre peuples civilisés, règles que la Convention de La Haye du 29 Juillet, 1899, concernant les lois et usages de la guerre sur terre a solennellement ratifiées, notamment les Articles IV, V, VH, XIV, XV, XVI, XXIII (les paragraphes (c), (d), (e), (f), et (g) de cet Article), XXV, XXVIII, XXXII, XLIV, XLV, XLVI, XLVII, L, LII, LIII, et LV du dit Règlement. En outre, l'Angleterre, par le fait de la Proclamation lancée par le Commandant-en-chef des ses armées dans l'Afrique du Sud, le Maréchal Lord Kitchener, donnée à Prétoria, et datée du 7 Août, 1901, a annoncé ouvertement son intention de se mettre, dans peu de temps, en flagrant désaccord avec l'Article XX du dit Règlement.

"Les Gouvernements des États que représentent les Soussignés sont entièrement disposés, dès que l'occasion leur en sera fournie, de confirmer en tous points ce qu'ils viennent d'avancer, d'en spécifier les détails, et d'en apporter les preuves complètes.

"Comme il plaît à l'Angleterre de nier que le droit de la guerre soit perpétuellement violé par elle, les États que représentent les Soussignés estiment que cette négation constitue un nouveau litige, au sujet duquel ils croient pouvoir faire également appel au jugement de la Cour Permanente d'Arbitrage, et solliciter une sentence arbitrale.

"Les Soussignés et leurs Gouvernements n'ignorent pas que, pour obtenir une sentence de cette nature, le consentement de l'Angleterre est indispensable.

"Aussi prennent-ils la liberté d'inviter votre Conseil à demander ce consentement, ou à essayer de l'obtenir, soit par votre médiation directe, soit par celle des Gouvernements que vous représentez.

"Ils se sentent d'autant plus encouragés à vous adresser cette demande qu'elle concorde parfaitement avec le grand et noble principe qui se trouve à la base de l'Article XXVII de la dite Convention.

"Si l'Angleterre répondait à cette démarche par un refus, ce refus prouverait qu'elle n'ose pas se soumettre à la sentence d'un Juge consciencieux, bien informé, et impartial.

"Elle continuera en même temps, par le fait de ce refus, à porter l'entière responsabilité du prolongement de cette guerre atroce et inutile, et elle aura reconnu tacitement que la façon dont cette guerre est faite est en opposition et en contradiction formelle avec les conditions d'humanité et de civilisation qu'elle a ratifié elle-même.

"C'est dans l'espoir qu'il vous plaira de donner suite à leur demande, et d'accorder votre intervention ou de prêter votre concours dans cette affaire si grave que les Soussignés vous prient d'agréer, &c.

"Les Délégués Plénipotentiaires de la République (Signé) "W. J. LEIJDS.
Sud-Africaine:
"A. FISCHER.
"A. D. W. WOLMARANS.

"Les Délégués Plénipotentiaires de l'État Libre d'Orange:
(Signé) "A. FISCHER.
"C. H. WESSELS.

"Au Conseil Administratif de la Cour Permanente d'Arbitrage à La Haye."

No. 10.

[November 14, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, October 8, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Boers taking refuge in and British conveyed as prisoners of war into German territory.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers, as marked in the accompanying list, respecting the conduct of the German authorities in Damaraland in regard to (1) Allowing Boers or, it may be, rebels from Cape Colony to trek into their territories without, as is alleged, taking proper measures to prevent their returning to engage His Majesty's forces; and (2) Improperly receiving at the hands of the Boers British soldiers who had previously been made prisoners by them, and subsequently interning them, or otherwise dealing with such British soldiers as though they were belligerents who had voluntarily taken refuge within neutral territory.

With regard to the first point, you will see from the inclosed Memorandum by Sir J. Ardagh that while it is possible that the persons composing the trek were rebels, it is by no means certain that such was the case, and that the men of the party were disarmed on entering German territory. It is no doubt asserted that it was possible for them to buy arms and ammunition at Warmbad, a town about 35 miles distant from the frontier, and that in these circumstances, having placed their families and flocks and herds in safety, they could return to engage His Majesty's forces, but there is no pretence that anything of this kind has so far occurred.

With regard to the second point, viz., that the German authorities in Damaraland have received British prisoners at the hands of the Boers and have subsequently interned them, or otherwise improperly dealt with them, it appears that in one case two officers of His Majesty's forces, Captain Feltham and Lieutenant Joubert, were sent across the frontier on parole and were then informed by the German authorities that they were prisoners of war, while in another two troopers were taken by some rebels, placed in a boat, conveyed across the Orange River, and finally handed over to a German trooper as prisoners of war.

I am directed by the Marquess of Lansdowne to request you to take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and to furnish his Lordship with your opinion—

1. Whether the proceedings of the German authorities in connection with the Boer trek into their territories call for any representations on the part of His Majesty's Government, and, if so, what should be the nature of such representations; and

2. Whether His Majesty's Government should make any representation to the German Government in regard to the proceedings of the German authorities in connection with Captain Feltham and Lieutenant Joubert, as also in connection with the two troopers above alluded to; and if so, what form such representation should take, and, further, whether in any case His Majesty's Government would be justified in demanding the surrender of Lieutenant Joubert, who, so far as is known, is still a prisoner.

In regard to this point, I am to draw your special attention to the fact, which you may possibly consider as having a material bearing on the point at issue, that the persons who originally captured the four prisoners above referred to were rebels and not recognized belligerents.

I am also to invite your special consideration to the opinion of Mr. (now Sir J.) Rose-Innes, the then Attorney-General at the Cape, that if a belligerent conducts or transports a prisoner of war into neutral territory the prisoner becomes at once free and should not be detained, and to inquire whether you concur in that view.

Lord Lansdowne would also be glad to be furnished with any observations which you may have to offer on the case generally.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

1901

List of Papers.

Colonial Office	October 3, 1901.
Ditto	August 20, „
Ditto	August 29, „
Ditto	September 6, „
Ditto	September 28, „
Memorandum (Sir J. Ardagh)	September 17, „

Report.

1. WE are of opinion, upon the facts before us, that the proceedings of the German authorities in connection with the Boer trek into their territories do not call for any representations on the part of His Majesty's Government. There is nothing to show that these proceedings were in any way inconsistent with the duties of neutrality.

2. In our opinion, His Majesty's Government may properly make representations to the German Government in regard to the proceedings of the German authorities in the case of Captain Feltham and Lieutenant Joubert and in the case of the two troopers referred to in the despatch now under answer, and would be justified in demanding the surrender of Lieutenant Joubert.

It is the duty of a neutral to intern any troops of one of the belligerents which take refuge on the territory of the neutral, and there is a preponderance of authority for saying that this duty applies also in the case of isolated members of a belligerent force.

This duty springs out of the obligation of the neutral not to assist one belligerent by allowing the neutral territory to be used for the purpose of warfare by procuring a respite from the operations or forces of the other belligerent. The duty is one the performance of which is due to the other belligerent, and it attaches whenever belligerent troops or individuals have of their own initiative taken refuge in the territory of a neutral. It does not, and cannot, arise when the entry into neutral territory has taken place at the request of the other belligerent, or where the troops or persons in question have been brought into the neutral territory by him. To intern troops or persons entering the neutral territory in such circumstances would be, in fact, to violate the duties of neutrality, and to give help to one of the belligerents by virtually keeping his prisoners for him.

In the case of the troopers who were handed over by the Boers to the German authorities, it is clear that they ought at once to have been released by the Germans. We entirely agree with the opinion of Sir J. Rose-Innes, that if a belligerent conducts or transports a prisoner of war into neutral territory the prisoner becomes at once free, and should not be detained.

We do not think, for the present purpose, any valid distinction can be drawn between the case of these troopers and the case of Captain Feltham and Lieutenant Joubert. The latter did not take refuge in German territory from the pursuit of the Boers. They entered German territory at the instance of the Boers themselves, and in fulfilment of the parole which the Boers exacted from them as a condition of their release.

We observe that, in the despatch under answer, it is stated that the German authorities detained all these persons as prisoners of war; but we assume that the German authorities will allege, and rightly allege, that they were merely interned as combatants who had crossed the frontier. For the reasons we have above given, we do not think that the German authorities were justified in interning these persons; but it must, of course, be remembered that, in the case of Captain Feltham and Lieutenant Joubert, the German authorities might not know, or feel sufficiently assured of the fact, that it was at the instance of the Boers themselves that these officers had crossed the frontier.

We do not think that any reliance can, for this purpose, be placed upon the fact that the Boers in question were rebels, and not subjects of the late Republics, as they appear to have been, for practical purposes, belligerents.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
November 14, 1901.

No. 11.

[December 16, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Oath of Neutrality: Position of Aliens fighting with Boers.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 10, 1901.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers as marked in the accompanying list respecting a question which has been raised by the German Government as to the right of foreigners who, after fighting for the Boers, have taken advantage of Lord Roberts' Proclamation of the 31st May, 1900, to be treated on equal terms with such Boers as may have acted in a similar manner.

The War Office, on being consulted on the point, replied that the exceptional treatment accorded to burghers of the South African Republic by that Proclamation was not intended to apply to foreigners who were made prisoners of war while serving, or on account of having served, with the Boer forces; and that such foreigners were neither required nor permitted to take the oath of neutrality.

In these circumstances, they suggested informing the German Government in this sense, and adding that His Majesty's Government could not admit that aliens who had taken active part in a quarrel in which the neutral State to which they belonged was in no way concerned could claim any mitigation of the laws of war applicable to combatants.

Practically, the same view is expressed by Sir J. Ardagh, late Director of Military Intelligence, in his Memorandum of the 3rd October last.

I am to request you to take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and to advise Lord Lansdowne whether it is within the discretion of one belligerent Power to differentiate between prisoners who are bonâ fide subjects of the other belligerent Power and those who are aliens; or whether such belligerent is bound to treat all prisoners on an equal footing.

A copy of Lord Roberts' Proclamation of the 30th May, 1900, is annexed for convenience of reference.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

Memorandum (German Embassy)..	February 26, 1901.
To War Office	March 25, „
War Office	April 24, „
To ditto	May 17, „
War Office	June 22, „
To ditto	July 25, „
War Office	September 25, „
Memorandum (Sir J. Ardagh)	October 3, „

Report.

In our opinion, it is within the discretion of a belligerent Power to differentiate between prisoners who are bonâ fide subjects of the other belligerent and those who are aliens.

Any relaxation of the rights of the belligerent to retain prisoners of war in confinement while the war lasts is matter of grace. As a matter of international good feeling a distinction should not be made capriciously, but it is obvious that there were excellent reasons for confining to burghers the relaxation offered by the Proclamation of the 31st May, 1900. It might well be supposed that burghers were likely to return to their homes and settle down, and that this was not so likely in the case of aliens who were serving in the Boer forces.

We are unable to see that the German Government have any ground of complaint in this matter. The distinction was made on reasonable grounds.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
December 16, 1901.

Annex.

Proclamation.

(No. 1 of 1900.)

To the Inhabitants of the South African Republic.

WHEREAS the forces of Her Majesty the Queen under my command have entered the territory of the South African Republic, and whereas false and malicious reports are being spread abroad as to the treatment which the inhabitants may expect from Her Majesty's troops, I, Frederick Sleigh, Baron Roberts, of Kandahar and Waterford, K.P., G.C.B., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., V.C., Commander-in-chief of Her Majesty's Forces in South Africa, am authorized by the Government of Her Majesty to make known, and do hereby make known, as follows:—

1. Subject to the terms and provisions of this Proclamation, personal safety and freedom from molestation are guaranteed to the non-combatant population.

2. All burghers who have not taken a prominent part in the policy which has led to the war between Her Majesty and the South African Republic, or commanded any forces of the Republic, or commandeered or used violence to any British subjects, or committed any acts contrary to the usages of civilized warfare, and who are willing to lay down their arms at once, to bind themselves by an oath to abstain from further participation in the war, will be given passes to allow them to return to their homes, and will not be made prisoners of war.

3. It is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to respect all private property of the inhabitants of the South African Republic, so far as may be compatible with the operations of war, provided that the inhabitants on their part abstain from wanton damage to property.

4. If, however, wanton damage is done to property, not only will the actual perpetrators of such acts and all directly or indirectly implicated in them be liable to the most severe punishment in person and property, but the property of all persons, whether in authority or otherwise, who have permitted or have not done their utmost to prevent such wanton damage, will be liable to be confiscated or destroyed.

5. All persons are, therefore, exhorted in their own interest to prevent such wanton damage.

[God Save the Queen.]

Given under my hand and seal, at Johannesburg, this 31st day of May, 1900.
(Signed) ROBERTS, Field-Marshal,
Commander-in-Chief, South Africa.

BORNEO.

No. 12.

[May 31, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, April 27, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Brunei Order in Council.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to submit to you the accompanying draft Order in Council (Paper A) which has been prepared by Mr. Albert Gray, under instructions from this Department, to provide for the exercise of His Majesty's extra-territorial jurisdiction within the dominions and territories of the Sultan of Brunei.

You are aware that an Order in Council for Brunei was passed in 1890, but that the technical steps necessary to bring it into operation were never completed, and that

---

AFRICA.

No. 11*.

[December 31, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, November 7, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Marriages in Protectorates of non-British subjects: As to provision for

IN connection with the preparation of a draft Order in Council for regulating the exercise of the King's jurisdiction in Uganda, the question has been raised whether provision should not be made for the intermarriage in that Protectorate of persons neither of whom is a British subject under forms and ceremonies which would be either themselves prescribed by, or would be recognized as valid in contemplation of, English law. At the same time a similar question has come up for discussion with regard to North-Eastern Rhodesia and the British Central Africa Protectorate. "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," and Foreign Marriages Orders in Council of 1892 and 1895, which are, in terms, of application to all places outside His Majesty's dominions, provide for marriages only in which one or both parties are British subjects, and, consequently, do not meet the class of cases now under consideration.

The matter has formed the subject of correspondence with Mr. Albert Gray, who has now submitted the suggestion that the points arising should be referred to you for your opinion and advice. As Mr. Gray's letter gives a clear and succinct statement of the questions at issue and of the circumstances in which they have arisen, it will be convenient to quote it here in full:—

"In his letter of the 17th June last with reference to the draft Uganda Order in Council, Sir Clement Hill called my attention to the question of the solemnization of marriages in Uganda, observing that there is no provision under 'The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892,' for marriages between persons neither of whom is a British subject, and requested me to submit any suggestions I might have to offer as to providing facilities for the intermarriage in Uganda of persons neither of whom is a British subject under forms and ceremonies which would be either themselves prescribed by, or would be recognized as valid in contemplation of, English law.

"2. At the same time Sir Clement Hill sent, for my perusal, two despatches of Sir Arthur Hardinge and a Report from the Law Officers of the Crown (8th August, 1900), as to the application in East Africa of 'The Indian Christian Marriage Act, 1872.'

"3. Since then Sir Clement Hill has favoured me with the perusal of another set of despatches in which practically the same question is raised, first with regard to North-East Rhodesia, and secondly with respect to British Central Africa.

"4. Among the papers last mentioned was another Report from the Law Officers (2nd June, 1899), with respect to the marriage question in Southern Rhodesia.*

"5. All the five Protectorates mentioned are administered under Orders in Council passed under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, and in all there are powers of subordinate legislation for 'peace, order, and good government.'

"6. As the Southern Rhodesia question has been settled, it may be well to take it first. Orders in Council under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act had applied the law of Cape Colony. Marriage Officers, erroneously appointed by the Administrator, had solemnized marriages. On the advice of the Law Officers the High Commissioner, by Proclamation, duly appointed Marriage Officers in accordance with Cape law, and the marriages previously solemnized were specially validated by an Order in Council (14th August, 1899).

"7. In North-East Rhodesia there is no application of either Cape or Indian law, it being intended that Cape law shall not extend beyond the Zambezi. In British Central Africa, East Africa, and Uganda there is a power to apply Indian law.

"8. Under the power to apply Indian law Sir Arthur Hardinge asked leave to apply the Indian Christian Marriage Act. He submitted (15th August, 1898) that 'the Foreign Marriage Act is entirely unsuitable to a territory such as the East Africa

---

* This was a Report to the Colonial Office.

1901

Protectorate, and that the time has come to introduce here for all Europeans, or at least persons other than natives, subject to the East Africa Order in Council, some such measure as the Indian Christian Marriage Act, and perhaps even to extend it to native Christians.' For the reasons stated in his despatch of the 10th January, 1899, Lord Salisbury was not then prepared to take any steps in the direction indicated. Sir Arthur Hardinge, however, again advanced his request (20th December, 1899), referring to the fact that 'there are thousands of Goanese Catholics, besides numerous Greeks and Italians, up country since the railway has reached Nairobi who cannot contract civil marriages with one another,' and suggesting that the Indian Christian Marriage Act would probably be the best means of attaining the object desired.

"9. This despatch occasioned a reference to the Law Officers, who, in their Report of the 8th August, 1900, advised (a) that there is power to apply the Indian Christian Marriage Act to the Protectorate; (b) that the introduction of a law of divorce is not a necessary consequence; (c) that it would be very anomalous and inconvenient to have the Foreign Marriage Act and the Indian Act existing side by side, as the former presupposes a foreign country, and the latter a country under the dominion of the Crown; (d) that it is difficult to see on what principle, if we provide by territorial legislation for marriage, we should not provide for divorce or judicial separation; (e) that the question was part of the larger one whether Her Majesty's Government is prepared to assume the sovereignty of the territory, and that, 'if it is still to be regarded as a country in which the Foreign Marriage Act is in force,' the balance of convenience is, in their opinion, against the application of the Indian Act; (f) that, while as regards British subjects (who can employ the Foreign Marriage Act) there is no present hardship, the Governments of other countries can make provision for the marriages of their respective subjects; and (g) that, on the whole, legislation should be deferred until the British Government assumes nominal as well as virtual sovereignty.

"10. Neither in this Report, nor in that of June 1899, is any opinion stated that the Foreign Marriage Act must necessarily be operative in a British Protectorate. If it was operative in Southern Rhodesia when the Cape law was brought into force, the coexistence of the two marriage laws would have been 'anomalous and inconvenient.' But, in fact, the Law Officers do not appear to have considered the Foreign Marriage Act to be a factor in the Southern Rhodesia case, and the Colonial Office state that it is not used in any Protectorate administered by that Department.

"11. The Foreign Marriage Act in one sense extends to all places outside His Majesty's dominions, but it is not, in fact, operative in a Protectorate until Marriage Officers have been appointed. It appears, in fact, to be an Act merely to facilitate the marriage of British subjects in foreign parts. Section 23, as the Colonial Office point out, shows that the procedure of the Act is not to be regarded as exclusive, and I may add a reference to section 2, which begins: 'In every case of a marriage intended to be solemnized under this Act.'

"12. If the Foreign Marriage Act can be dispensed with altogether in the Colonial Office Protectorates by the non-appointment of Marriage Officers, it can be got rid of in the Foreign Office Protectorates by the withdrawal of the Marriage Officers' warrants.

"13. I agree that the Foreign Marriage Act, applying only to cases where one party at least is a British subject, must be sufficient for (a) countries where His Majesty has no jurisdiction, such as France, and (b) countries where his jurisdiction is confined to British subjects, such as Turkey or Zanzibar; in these places no further law is required. But I feel bound to agree with Sir Arthur Hardinge in regarding it as altogether unsuitable to East Africa and Uganda, where plenary powers of legislation are exercised under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act over all persons, British, foreign, and native.

"14. I think the British Government is under some obligation to provide a general marriage law in these Protectorates. Having assumed jurisdiction over all persons therein, we should not confine the privilege of marriage to British subjects. It may be true, as the Law Officers suggest, that Foreign Powers might make marriage arrangements for their own subjects, but they could not do this without the appointment of Consuls—a condition of things which, I understand, would be regarded with some disfavour by the Foreign Office. Moreover, this expedient would not make matters better for native Christians, who are not technically British subjects.

"15. If there is to be legislation, the question arises whether the law should be a general civil marriage law as under the Marriage Acts of the United Kingdom—such a law, indeed, as was introduced into Southern Rhodesia—or a law of Christian marriage as opposed to Hindu and Mahommedan marriage, such as is provided by the Indian Christian Marriage Act. The matter would require some consideration with regard to the circumstances of the different Protectorates. I am inclined to suggest that the Indian Act should be applied to East Africa and Uganda, where the bulk of the law is Indian, and there is already a large Hindu and Mahommedan population whose marriages would require different treatment, and that in British Central Africa and North-East Rhodesia the law should be adapted from the Cape law or from English law as may seem fit.

"16. I am inclined to think that, in the case of North-East Rhodesia and British Central Africa (if the Indian Act is not applied in the latter), the legislation should be directly by Order in Council, and not by King's Regulations.

"17. The argument that a general marriage law would necessitate a divorce law is negatived by the Law Officers; but whatever objections there may be to such a law, it would seem better to provide facilities for marriage denying divorce than to promote concubinage by thwarting marriage.

"18. My own view is that there should be a divorce law as well as a marriage law. According to a recent decision of the Privy Council, the Court in such a place as Mombasa would not have jurisdiction to dissolve an English marriage, but it ought to have jurisdiction to dissolve marriages contracted in the Protectorate between natives or parties domiciled there.

"19. I would suggest that a further reference be made to the Law Officers. If they should be of opinion that His Majesty has power to legislate in regard to marriage in these Protectorates, dispensing with the Foreign Marriage Act, I respectfully submit that such a marriage law as is provided in a Colonial Office Protectorate ought not to be denied to a Foreign Office Protectorate, and that legislation should not be postponed in respect of any Protectorate until it becomes part of the British dominions—a condition which possibly may not be fulfilled for many years."

The correspondence referred to in Mr. Gray's letter, and specified in the accompanying list, is transmitted herewith.

I am directed by the Marquess of Lansdowne, in laying these papers before you, to state that his Lordship concurs with Mr. Gray in considering the present position of the question of marriages in the African Protectorates to be both anomalous and productive of serious inconvenience. It has been suggested, not for the first time, that the whole of the difficulty, as well as many others of a similar character, would at once be eliminated if the King thought fit to assume nominal as well as virtual sovereignty over those Protectorates; that is to say, if the latter were incorporated in His Majesty's dominions by annexation, and this possible solution was clearly present to your minds when you previously reported, on the 8th August, 1900, on the question of the advisability of applying the Indian Christian Marriage Act (Act 15 of 1872) to the East Africa Protectorate. This larger issue may require to be seriously considered and discussed hereafter; it is, however, improbable that a solution in such a direction of the marriage difficulty can be hoped for at an early date. In the meantime, Lord Lansdowne agrees with Mr. Gray that the question of the application of the Indian Act to Uganda and the East Africa Protectorate—to which might, perhaps, be added the Somaliland Protectorate, in which Indian law is also largely applied, and in which a considerable number of British Indian subjects are settled—and of direct legislation in the case of North-Eastern Rhodesia and the British Central Africa Protectorate deserves reconsideration.

I am accordingly to request that you will inform his Lordship whether, in the light of the observations submitted by Mr. Gray, you are of opinion that the King has power to legislate in regard to marriage in the several Protectorates referred to, dispensing with the application thereto of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," and, if so, whether you would approve of the method of dealing with the question in respect to each of those territories which Mr. Gray suggests. Lord Lansdowne would also be glad to be favoured with any remarks of a general character which you may desire to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) MARTIN GOSSELIN.

1901

List of Papers.

(A.)—East Africa.

1. Sir A. Hardinge	(No. 10. Consular)	August	15, 1898
2. Mr. Gray (Memorandum)		December	7, „
3. To Sir A. Hardinge	(No. 1. Consular)	January	10, 1899.
4. Sir A. Hardinge	(No. 213)	December	20, „
5. Law Officers		August	8, 1900

(B.)—North-East Rhodesia.

6. British South Africa Company		September	3. 1900.
7. To Colonial Office		„	12, „
8. Colonial Office		November	3, „
9. To ditto		December	19, „
10. Colonial Office		January	21, 1901.
11. Ministers' Mission Union		February	6, „
12. To Mr. Sharpe	(No. 45)	April	1, „
13. Mr. Sharpe	(No. 108)	May	20, „
14. Ditto	(No. 146)	July	1, „
15. To Colonial Office		August	3, „
16. Colonial Office		„	29, „

(C.)—Uganda.

17. To Mr. Gray	June	17, 1901.

Report.

We are of opinion that the King has power to legislate in regard to marriage in the several Protectorates referred to, dispensing with the application thereto of "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," and we should approve of the method of dealing with the question in respect of each of those territories which Mr. Gray suggests.

The practice pursued in the Colonial Office Protectorates in South Africa is an important factor in determining the course to be taken in such matters in Foreign Office Protectorates, and the course proposed by Mr. Gray has the advantage of harmonizing the policy pursued in these two classes of Protectorates, and appears to us to be in itself desirable.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
E. CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
December 31, 1901.

---

the Order was repealed last year for the reasons stated in the letter from this Office of the 18th December, 1899, a copy of which is inclosed for convenience of reference (Paper B).

Sir J. A. Swettenham, His Majesty's Consul-General for Borneo, subsequently drew attention to the inconvenience that might arise if no means were provided for the exercise of the jurisdiction vested in His Majesty by the Agreement of the 17th September, 1888, with the Sultan of Brunei (Paper C), and this view was later indorsed by Mr. Hewett, His Majesty's Consul for Brunei.

Measures were at that time in contemplation which would have altered the political conditions of the Sultanate, and rendered an Order in Council unnecessary; but these measures have been abandoned for the present, and Sir J. A. Swettenham, who had been requested in that event to state his views as to the necessity for an Order in Council, has adhered to the opinion he originally expressed (Paper D).

In forwarding, for your consideration, the papers noted in the accompanying list, I am to draw your attention specially to clause 61 of the draft Order, conferring Admiralty jurisdiction on the Court established under its provisions, and to the remarks on the subject contained in Mr. Albert Gray's letter of the 28th February last (Paper E).

I am also to draw your attention to the explanations given by Mr. Gray in his letter of the 19th instant (Paper F) with regard to the reasons which have led him to omit from clause 14 the words as to request and consent which appeared in Article 12 of the Order in Council for Brunei of 1890 (Paper G).

I am to request that you will be so good as to state whether the draft Order in Council, in the terms of which the concurrence of the Secretary of State for the Colonies has been obtained, may properly be laid before the King in Council for His Majesty's approval, and that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with any general observations which you may have to offer with regard to the Order as drafted.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.) Draft Order in Council.
(B.) To Law Officers (in print)		December	18, 1899.
(C.) Agreement with Brunei ["Borneo No. 1 (1888)"]*		September	17, 1888.
(D.) Sir J. A. Swettenham (in print)	(No. 44)	August	8, 1900.
(E.) Mr. A. Gray		February	28, 1901.
(F.) Ditto		April	19, „

(G.) Brunei Order in Council, 1890.†

Report.

We approve of the draft Order in Council herewith, subject to the following observations:—

We suggest that difficulty might arise under Article 14 in its present form, as there might be two Courts exercising, or attempting to exercise, original jurisdiction. This difficulty might be met by the insertion as a proviso on sub-Articles (2) and (3) of some such words as those we have inserted in red ink‡ in Article 14.

We think that Article 61 should be struck out. It does not seem desirable to confer Admiralty jurisdiction when it could not be exercised against foreign ships.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
E. CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
May 31, 1901.

---

* Parliamentary No. 3261.

† Confidential No. 6003*.

‡ Printed in italics.

1901

Annex.

BRUNEI.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS, by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, His Majesty the King has power and jurisdiction within the dominions and territories of the Sultan of Brunei:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," and otherwise in him vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Order may be cited as "The Brunei Order in Council, 1901."

Division of Order.

2. This Order is divided into parts as follows:—

Parts.		Articles.
I	General Provisions	3–6
II	Courts	7–14
III	Criminal Matters	15–44
IV	Civil Matters	45–81
V	Evidence	82–84
VI	Foreigners	85–86
VII	Deportation and Removal	87–88
VIII	Regulations, Commencement, &c....	89–95

PART I.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

Interpretation.

3. In this Order, unless the subject or context otherwise requires—

"The Secretary of State" means one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State;

"Prescribed" means prescribed by any Consular instructions, or by any order of notification signed or authorized by the Secretary of State;

The expression "Brunei," or "the limits of this Order," mean the dominions for the time being of the Sultan of Brunei and the islands and territorial waters belonging to the said dominions: provided that the expression "at Brunei" shall be construed as referring to the town or settlement called Brunei;

"Consular officer" includes any person for the time being acting in Brunei by virtue of His Majesty's Commission, or with the authority or approval of the Secretary of State as Consul-General, Consul, Vice-Consul, or Consular Agent;

"Consul" means any person for the time being acting as Consul for Brunei;

"Treaty" includes any Convention, Agreement, or Arrangement made by or on behalf of His Majesty with any State or Government, King, Chief, people, or tribe, and any Regulation appended thereto;

"Court" means any Court or person exercising jurisdiction under this Order;

"Governor" means the Governor of the Straits Settlements;

"Supreme Court" means the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements;

"British subject" includes a British-protected person, that is to say, a person who either (a) is a native of any Protectorate of His Majesty, and is temporarily in Brunei, or (b) by virtue of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise enjoys His Majesty's protection in Brunei;

"Foreigner" means a person, whether a native or subject of Brunei or not, who is not a British subject, as above defined;

"Native" means a native or subject of Brunei;

"Person" includes a corporation or association of persons;

"Oath" or "Affidavit" includes affirmation and declaration;

"Month" means calendar month.

The plural includes the singular, and the singular the plural, and the masculine the feminine.

Expressions referring to print or to writing include either print or writing, or a combination of both.

Application of Order.

4.—(1.) The powers conferred by this Order shall extend to the persons and matters following, in so far as by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, or other lawful means His Majesty has power or authority in Brunei in relation to such persons and matters, that is to say—

(a.) British subjects as herein defined.

(b.) The property and personal and proprietary rights and obligations of British subjects in Brunei (whether such subjects are or are not within Brunei), including British ships, with their boats and the persons and property on board thereof, or belonging thereto.

(c.) Foreigners, as herein defined, who submit themselves to the Court in accordance with the provisions of this Order.

(d.) Foreigners, as herein defined, with respect to whom any State, King, Chief, or Government whose subjects or under whose protection they are has by any Treaty, as herein defined, or otherwise agreed with His Majesty for or consented to the exercise of power or authority by His Majesty.

(2.) All His Majesty's jurisdiction exercisable in Brunei for the judicial hearing and determination of matters in difference between British subjects, or between foreigners and British subjects, or for the administration or control of the property or persons of British subjects, or for the repression or punishment of crimes committed by British subjects, or for the maintenance of order among British subjects, shall be exercised under and according to the provisions of this Order, and not otherwise.

Law to be administered.

5. Subject to the other provisions of this Order, the criminal and civil jurisdiction of the Court shall, as far as circumstances admit, be exercised on the principles of and in conformity with the Statute Law and other law for the time being in force in England, and with the procedure and practice of Courts of Justice and Justices of the Peace in England, according to their respective jurisdiction and authority.

For the purpose of facilitating the application of such Statute Law, the Court may construe any enactment, with such alterations and modifications not affecting the substance as may be necessary to meet the circumstances of the said territories.

Except as regards acts which are or may be made offences by this or any other Order in Council applying to Brunei, or by any Laws or Regulations made thereunder, such acts only as would be offences if committed in England shall be deemed to be offences rendering the person committing the same liable to punishment.

Application to natives and foreigners.

6. Crimes, wrongs, and breaches of contract against or affecting the person, property, or rights of natives of Brunei or other foreigners, as herein defined, committed by persons subject to this Order, are punishable or otherwise cognizable under the provisions of this Order, with the consent of such natives or foreigners, in the same manner as if they were committed against or affected the person, property, or rights of British subjects.

PART II.—COURTS.

(1.) Court for Brunei.

Court for Brunei.

7. There shall be, and there is hereby established, in and for Brunei a Court styled "His Majesty's Court for Brunei," in this Order referred to as "the Court."

The Court shall be held by the Consul or a Consular officer, who, in relation to the Court, is hereinafter referred to as "the Judge."

The Court shall sit at Brunei, or, as occasion may require, at any other place within the limits of this Order.

The Court shall be a Court of Record.

Registrar and other officers.

8. The Secretary of State may appoint a fit person to be Registrar of the Court, but where no other person is appointed to be Registrar the Consul or Consular officer holding the Court shall be the Registrar of the Court.

The Consul may, with the approval of the Secretary of State, appoint such clerks, messengers, or other officers of the Court as may seem fit.

The Registrar and any clerk of the Court designated by the Consul may administer oaths and take affidavits, declarations, and affirmations.

Minutes.

9. In every case, civil or criminal, heard in the Court, proper Minutes of the proceedings shall be drawn up, and shall be signed by the Judge or officer before whom the proceedings are taken, and sealed with the seal of the Court, and shall, where Assessors are present, be open for their inspection, and for their signature if concurred in by them.

The Minutes, with depositions of witnesses and notes of evidence taken at the trial by the Judge or officer, shall be preserved in the public office of the Court.

Sheriff.

10. The Consul shall have all the powers and authorities of the Sheriff of a county in England, with all the privileges and immunities of the office, and as such Sheriff shall be charged with the execution of all decrees, orders, and sentences made and passed by a Court, on the requisition in that behalf of the Court, he shall not be liable to any action or proceeding for anything done, or purporting to be done, or anything omitted by him as such Sheriff.

Assessors.

11. Where the Court thinks fit to hear and determine any case, civil or criminal, with Assessors, the Court shall nominate and summon as Assessors not less than two and not more than four indifferent British subjects of good repute, resident in Brunei or belonging to a British ship; but where the Court is able to obtain the presence of one fit person only as Assessor, the Court may sit with him alone as Assessor.

An Assessor shall not have voice or vote in the decision of the Court in any case, civil or criminal; but an Assessor dissenting in a civil case from any decision of the Court, or in a criminal case from any conviction, or the amount of punishment awarded, may record in the Minutes of Proceedings his dissent and the grounds thereof; and an Assessor dissenting shall be entitled to receive gratis a certified copy of the Minutes.

1901

If any person summoned to act as Assessor fails, without lawful excuse, to attend at the trial, or at any adjournment thereof, or to continue to serve throughout the trial, he shall be liable under a summary order of the Court to a fine not exceeding 50 dollars, to be levied by attachment and sale of his goods, and in default of recovery thereby of the fine, to be imprisoned for any time not exceeding six days, if the fine is not sooner paid.

Saving for informalities.

12. No proceeding under this Order shall be invalidated by any informality, mistake, or omission, so long as, in the opinion of the Court, the essential requisites of law and justice have been complied with, or may be met by amendment.

(2.) Supreme Court.

Supreme Court.

13.—(1.) The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction under this Order.

The appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court shall be exercised by the full Supreme Court sitting in the Straits Settlements in such manner and according to such procedure as, subject to the provisions of this Order, and of any Rules made under this Order, the Supreme Court from time to time determines.

Judgments or orders of the Supreme Court, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, shall be certified by the Supreme Court to the Court for Brunei, and (subject to any appeal to His Majesty in Council) that Court may and shall execute, and give effect to the same in like manner as to its own judgments or orders.

(2.) The Supreme Court, on Petition presented to it in accordance with any Rules to be made under this Order, or in such manner as the Supreme Court directs, and alleging that any order of the Court has the effect of a refusal of justice to any suitor or complainant, may, after such inquiry (if any), as it thinks fit to direct, issue an order directing the Court to take cognizance of the matter, and may, if satisfied that such order has not been properly complied with, entertain and determine the matter of the suit or complaint, and shall certify its determination to the Court, which shall give effect thereto.

(3.) Except as provided by this Order, the Supreme Court shall not exercise any control over the Court, whether by way of mandamus, prohibition, certiorari, writ of habeas corpus, or otherwise.

Original jurisdiction of Supreme Court.

14. The Supreme Court shall, for the purposes of this Order, have original jurisdiction as follows:—

(1.) When, under this Order, a person accused of crime is sent for trial to the Straits Settlements, the Supreme Court shall have the like jurisdiction, and may proceed in the same manner as if the crime had been committed in the Straits Settlements, except that the criminality of the act charged and the punishment to be inflicted must be determined according to the law applicable under this Order in Brunei.

(2.) The Supreme Court may exercise in Brunei, in relation to any civil or criminal matter, any original jurisdiction which can be exercised by the Court, and all the provisions of this Order shall apply accordingly (mutatis mutandis), and any appeal shall be to the full Supreme Court.

(3.) The Supreme Court may hear and determine at any place within the limits of this Order any criminal case which could under this Order be sent for trial to the Straits Settlements, and for that purpose shall have the like jurisdiction and may proceed in the same manner, as nearly as may be, as if it were trying the same case in the Straits Settlements, or as if it were the Court trying in Brunei a criminal case within the jurisdiction of the Court.

Provided that the powers conferred by sub-Articles (2) and (3) *of this Article shall, except in the case of the death, absence, or incapacity of the Consular officer, be exercised only on his request.

(4.) The Supreme Court may hear and determine within the Straits Settlements any civil case arising in Brunei, with the consent of the parties and of the Consul, and for that purpose may adopt any procedure proper either in the Straits Settlements or in Brunei. In such case, any appeal shall be to the full Supreme Court.

(5.) For the purposes of the exercise of original jurisdiction under this Article, such Judge or Judges of the Supreme Court as the Chief Justice of the Straits Settlements from time to time nominates shall exercise the powers of the Supreme Court.

(6.) The Court for Brunei may and shall, according to its powers, execute, enforce, and give effect to any Judgment or order of the Supreme Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, and may and shall, for the purposes of anything to be done preliminary to a sitting of the Supreme Court (as, for instance, the summoning of Assessors or of witnesses), exercise (mutatis mutandis) all the powers which the Court has for any purpose under this Order in a case or matter pending before itself.

PART III.—CRIMINAL MATTERS.

Commencement of prosecution.

15.—(1.) A criminal prosecution is commenced by a complaint made to the Court, or by the issue of a summons or warrant by the Court of its own motion.

---

* This paragraph has been added by the Law Officers.

(2.) For the issue of a summons the complaint need not be on oath, unless the Court so requires.

(3.) A warrant may be issued if the complaint is in writing and on oath, or if the accused person does not appear on a summons, and it is proved that the summons has been served or cannot be served.

(4.) On receiving a complaint, whether on oath or not, the Court may, if it is of opinion that the complaint discloses no offence, or is otherwise unsubstantial, decline to issue any summons or warrant.

(5.) An accused person arrested on warrant shall be brought before the Court within forty-eight hours after arrest unless exceptional circumstances prevent his being so brought, and the complaint shall be heard as soon thereafter as circumstances reasonably admit. Due notice of the time and place of hearing shall be given to the prosecutor (if any), and summonses issued to the witnesses, if any.

Proceedings on appearance.

16.—(1.) When the accused is before the Court, and the prosecutor has had notice of the time and place appointed for the hearing of the complaint, but does not appear, the Court, unless it thinks fit to adjourn the hearing, shall dismiss the complaint;

(2.) If both parties are present the Court shall proceed to hear the complaint; and

(a.) If the offence is legally punishable, or if the Court thinks it would be adequately punished with imprisonment not exceeding three months, or with fine not exceeding 50 dollars, the case shall be tried summarily on the complaint;

(b.) Otherwise, the Court shall take the depositions of the prosecutor and witnesses with a view to determining whether the accused shall be tried on a charge, and, if so, whether the case shall be tried before the Court or sent to the Supreme Court.

(3.) The following offences are not triable summarily, that is to say, treason, murder, rape, arson, housebreaking, robbery with violence, forgery, and perjury.

Summary trial on complaint.

17. At a summary trial the substance of the complaint shall be stated to the accused, and he shall be asked if he admits or denies the truth of the complaint. If he admits, the Court may convict him and award punishment, but may first take further evidence if it thinks fit. If he denies, the Court shall hear the evidence of the prosecutor and witnesses, and of the witnesses, if any, for the accused, and either discharge the accused or convict him and award punishment.

Preliminary examination.

18.—(1.) At the preliminary examination of a case which must be or may, in the opinion of the Court, require to be sent for trial to the Supreme Court, the procedure shall be as follows:—

(a.) The Court shall, in the presence of the accused, take the depositions on oath of those who know the facts and put them in writing;

(b.) The accused may cross-examine each witness for the prosecution, and the witness' answers shall form part of his deposition;

(c.) The deposition of each witness shall be read over to the witness and signed by him;

(d.) After the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution has been taken, the Court shall ask the accused if he wishes to make any statement or has any witnesses to call or other evidence to adduce in his defence, and the Court shall then take his statement and the evidence of his witnesses (if any);

(e.) The accused shall be informed that any statement he may make may be used against him at the trial, and also that he may be sworn as a witness himself;

(f.) The Court having heard all the evidence, shall consider the whole matter, and if it thinks that a primâ facie case is made out against the accused, shall cause a charge, on which the accused is to be put on his trial, to be framed, and read over to the accused;

(g.) The Court shall bind by recognizance the prosecutor and every witness to appear at the trial and give evidence;

(h.) If a person refuses to enter into a recognizance, the Court may send him to prison, there to remain till the trial, unless in the meantime he enters into a recognizance;

(i.) Until the trial the Court shall either admit the accused to bail or send him to prison for safe keeping;

(j.) The accused shall be entitled to a copy of the charge on which he is to be tried;

(k.) The complaint (if any), the depositions, the statement of the accused (if any), the charge on which the Court orders him to be tried, and the recognizances shall be carefully transmitted to the Supreme Court.

(2.) At the preliminary examination of a case which may be tried on a charge before the Court, the procedure above described may be varied as follows:—

After hearing so much evidence as is, in the opinion of the Court, sufficient to raise a strong presumption against the accused and to enable the Court to frame a charge, the Court may proceed to frame a charge and appoint a day for the trial.

Charges.

19.—(1.) The charge upon which an accused person is tried shall state the offence, with such particulars as to the time and place of the alleged offence, and the person (if any) against whom or the thing (if any) in respect of which it was committed, as are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged.

(2.) There shall be a separate charge for each offence, and every charge shall be tried separately, but if the acts form one transaction, or if the offences are of the same kind, the charges may be tried together, if the Court thinks fit.

(3.) When more persons than one are accused of the same offence, or of different offences committed in the same transaction, or where one is accused of committing an offence and another with abetting or attempting to commit that offence, they may be charged and tried together or separately, as the Court thinks fit.

1901

(4.) The Court may alter any charge at any time, but if the alteration is likely to prejudice the accused or the prosecutor, the Court may adjourn the trial for such time as may be necessary.

(5.) No error or omission in stating the offence or the particulars shall be regarded as material unless the accused was misled by the error or omission.

(6.) When a person is charged with an offence, and the evidence proves either the commission of a minor offence or an attempt to commit the offence charged, he may be convicted of the minor offence or the attempt.

(7.) For the purpose of the application of any Statute law, a charge framed under the provisions of this Order shall be deemed to be an indictment.

Bail and remand.

20.—(1.) The Court may, at any stage of the prosecution, in its discretion admit to bail a person charged with any felony (except murder), or with riot, or assault.

(2.) In all other cases the Court shall admit the accused to bail, unless the Court sees good reason to the contrary.

(3.) Where an accused person is in custody he shall not be remanded at any time for more than seven days, unless circumstances appear to the Court to make it necessary or proper that he should be remanded for a longer time, which circumstances, and the time of remand, shall be recorded in the Minutes.

(4.) In no case shall a remand be for more than fourteen days at one time, unless in case of illness of the accused person or other case of necessity.

Adjournments.

21. The Court may from time to time postpone or adjourn any trial if it considers it necessary to do so in the interests of justice.

During the postponement or adjournment the accused may be committed to prison for safe custody, or admitted to bail, or suffered to go at large, as the Court thinks fit.

Search warrant.

22. Where there is reasonable cause to suspect that anything, by or in respect of which any offence, cognizable by the Court has been committed, is in any house or place within the jurisdiction of the Court, the Court may, by a search warrant, authorize an officer of the Court to search the house or place, and if anything searched for be found, to seize it and bring it before the Court for adjudication.

Execution of warrants.

23. A warrant for apprehension or a search warrant may be issued and executed on Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas Day, where the urgency of the matter so requires.

Punishments.

24. The Court may award any such punishment as may be awarded by any Court of criminal jurisdiction in England for the time being.

Damages for assault.

25. The Court may, if it thinks fit, order a person convicted of an assault to pay to the person assaulted, by way of damages, any sum not exceeding 50 dollars.

Damages ordered to be paid may be either in addition to, or in lieu of, a fine, and shall be recoverable in like manner as a fine.

Where such damages are ordered, an action cannot be brought for the assault.

Sentence of death.

26. When a person is sentenced to death, the Court shall transmit the Judge's notes and a report on the case to the Governor in Council, and a sentence shall not be carried into effect unless confirmed by the Governor in Council.

The Governor in Council may commute the sentence to such punishment as he thinks proper in the circumstances, or may pardon the convict.

Expenses of prosecution.

27. The Court may order a person convicted before it to pay all or a part of the expenses of the prosecution, the amount to be specified in the order.

The Court may, when it thinks a prosecution is vexatious or frivolous, order the complainant to pay all or a part of the expenses of the prosecution and of the accused, the amount being specified in the order.

In both cases the Court may order that the whole, or such portion as the Court thinks fit, of the expenses so paid be paid over to the complainant or the accused, as the case may be.

Appeal to Supreme Court.

28.—(1.) In each of the following cases, namely:—

(i.) Where a person is convicted before the Court, and the person so convicted declares his desire to appeal to the Supreme Court on any question or questions of law raised by the person convicted or by the Court; or

(ii.) Where the Court thinks fit to reserve for the judgment of the Supreme Court any question of law arising on the trial—

The Court shall frame a statement setting out the facts, the grounds of the conviction and sentence, the question or questions of law, and any objection alleged by the person convicted.

(2.) The Court shall annex to that statement certified copies of the summons, indictment (if any), and proceedings, and of all documentary evidence admitted or tendered, and appearing to that Court to be material, and the depositions, the notes of the oral testimony, any statement or objections to the conviction or sentence made by the person convicted, and any argument thereon that he desires to submit to the Supreme Court, and a note of the reasons why any tendered evidence which is not transmitted appears to the Court to be immaterial.

(3.) The Court shall forthwith send the statement and its annexes to the Supreme Court.

(4.) The Court shall postpone the execution of the sentence pending the appeal, and shall, as on a remand, either (if necessary) commit the person convicted to prison for safe custody, or admit him to bail, with or without security, by recognizance, deposit money, or otherwise.

(5.) The Supreme Court shall hear and finally determine the matter, after considering the statement of the Court, and hearing publicly any argument offered on behalf of the prosecution, or of the person convicted.

(6.) The Supreme Court may require the Court to make any amendment in or addition to its statement or the annexes thereto.

(7.) The Judgment of the Supreme Court shall be delivered publicly.

(8.) The Supreme Court shall either affirm or annul the conviction, or amend it, and shall either affirm or annul the sentence or vary it, and shall give all necessary and proper consequential directions.

Limitation of power of Supreme Court.

29. The Supreme Court shall not annul a conviction or sentence, or vary a sentence, on the ground—

(i.) Of any objection which, if stated during the trial, might, in the opinion of the Supreme Court, have been properly met by amendment by the Court; or (ii.) Of any error or informality which, in the opinion of the Supreme Court, did not affect the substance of the case or subject the appellant to any undue prejudice.

No appeal to Privy Council except by leave.

30. There shall be no appeal in a criminal case to His Majesty the King in Council from a decision of the Supreme Court, except by special leave of His Majesty in Council.

Prisons.

31. The Consul may by general order prescribe the manner in which and the prisons in which punishments are to be carried into execution.

Imprisonment beyond limits of Order.

32.—(1.) When an offender is sentenced to imprisonment and the Court thinks it expedient that the sentence be carried into effect within His Majesty's dominions, the place shall be either the Straits Settlements or a place in some other part of His Majesty's dominions the Government whereof consents that offenders may be sent thither under this Article.

(2.) The Court may, by warrant under the hand of the Judge, cause the offender to be sent to such place as aforesaid, in order that the sentence may be carried into effect accordingly.

(3.) The warrant shall be sufficient authority to any person to whom it is directed to receive and detain the person named therein, and to carry him and deliver him up at the place named, according to the warrant.

Fugitive offenders.

33. "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881," and "The Colonial Prisoners Removal Act, 1884," shall apply to Brunei as if it were part of His Majesty's dominions, subject as follows:—

(a.) The Consul is hereby substituted for the Governor or Government of a British possession;

(b.) The Court is hereby substituted for a Superior Court, and for a Magistrate of a British possession;

(c.) For the purposes of the said Act of 1881, and of this Article in relation thereto, the said territories and the Straits Settlements shall be deemed to be one group of British possessions.

Offences on high seas, &c.

34.—(1.) In cases of murder or manslaughter if either the death, or the criminal act which wholly or partly caused the death, happened within Brunei, the Court shall have the like jurisdiction over any person who is charged either as the principal offender, or as accessory before the fact to murder, or as accessory after the fact to murder or manslaughter, as if both the criminal act and the death had happened within Brunei.

(2.) In the case of any offence committed on the high seas, or within the Admiralty jurisdiction, by any person on board a British ship, or by any British subject on board a foreign ship to which he did not belong, the Court shall, subject to the provisions of this Order, have jurisdiction as if the offence had been committed within the said territories. In cases tried under this Article no different sentence can be passed from the sentence which could be passed in England if the offence were tried there.

(3.) The foregoing provisions of this Article shall be deemed to be adaptations, for the purposes of this Order and of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," of the following enactments, that is to say:—

"The Admiralty Offences (Colonial) Act, 1849."
"The Admiralty Offences (Colonial) Act, 1860."
"The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," section 686.

Detention of ship.

35. Where the Court issues a summons or warrant against any person on a charge of an offence committed on board of, or in relation to, any ship, other than a ship enjoying immunity from civil process, then if it appears to the Court that the interests of public justice so require, the Court may issue a warrant or order for the detention of the ship, and may cause the ship to be detained accordingly, until the charge is heard and determined and the order of the Court thereon is fully executed, or for such shorter time as the Court thinks fit; and the Court shall have power to make all such orders as appear to it necessary or proper for carrying this provision into effect.

Piracy.

36. Any British subject being in Brunei may be proceeded against, tried, and punished under this Order for the crime of piracy, wherever committed.

Levying war.

37.—(1.) If any British subject does any of the following things without His Majesty's authority, levies war, or takes any part in any operation of war against, or aids or abets any person in carrying on war, insurrection, or rebellion against the Sultan of Brunei;

Every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of an offence against this Order, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to be punished by imprisonment for any term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour, and with or without a fine not exceeding 5,000 dollars, or by a fine not exceeding 5,000 dollars without imprisonment.

In addition to such punishments, every such conviction shall of itself, and without further proceedings, make the person convicted liable to deportation; and the Court may order that he be deported from Brunei to such place as the Court directs.

(2.) If any British subject, without the authority of His Majesty (proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), takes part in any operation of war in the service of the Sultan of Brunei against any persons engaged in carrying on war, insurrection, or rebellion against the Sultan of Brunei, he shall be deemed guilty of an offence against this Order, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to be punished by imprisonment for any term not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour, and with or without a fine not exceeding 5,000 dollars, or by a fine not exceeding 5,000 dollars without imprisonment.

1901

Offences against religion.

38. If any British subject publicly derides, mocks, or insults any religion established or observed in Brunei, or publicly offers any insult to any religious service, feast, or ceremony established or kept in any part of Brunei, or to any place of worship, tomb, or sanctuary belonging to any such religion, or to the ministers or professors thereof, or wilfully commits any act tending to bring any such religion, or its ceremonies, mode of worship, or observances into hatred, ridicule, or contempt, and thereby to provoke a breach of the public peace, he shall be deemed guilty of an offence against this Order, and shall be liable, on summary conviction, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour, and with or without a fine not exceeding 500 dollars, or to a fine not exceeding 500 dollars without imprisonment.

His Majesty's Consular officers shall take such precautionary measures as seem to them proper and expedient for the prevention of such offences.

Offences against Treaties.

39. If any British subject violates or fails to observe any stipulation of any Treaty made with, or by, or on behalf of His Majesty for the time being in force, in respect of the violation whereof any penalty is stipulated for in the Treaty, he shall be deemed guilty of an offence against this Order, and on conviction thereof under this Order shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding the penalty stipulated for in the Treaty,

Support of wife and child.

40. The Court shall have jurisdiction to make an order requiring a person to contribute, in such manner as the Court directs, to the support of his wife or child, whether legitimate or not, being in the opinion of the Court under the age of 16 years. Any such order may be made in a summary way, as if the neglect to provide for the support of such wife or child were an offence against this Order, and a failure to comply with any such order shall be deemed to be an offence against this Order, and shall be punishable accordingly, and the Court may direct any penalty imposed for such offence to be applied for the support of such wife or child in such manner as the Court thinks fit.

Offences against this Order.

41. Where any act or omission is, by virtue of this Order, or of any Regulation made under this Order, an offence against this Order, and no penalty or punishment is specified in respect thereof, such offence shall be punishable with imprisonment for not exceeding three months, or fine not exceeding 500 dollars, or both.

Reports of sentences.

42. The Consul shall, when required by the Secretary of State, send to the Secretary of State a report of the sentence passed in every case heard and determined by him, with a copy of the Minutes of Proceedings and notes of evidence, and may send with such report any observations he thinks fit.

Inquests on death.

43. The Court shall have all the powers appertaining to the office of Coroner in England, provided as follows:—

(a.) Where a person is charged with causing the death, the Court may proceed forthwith with the preliminary examination;

(b.) Where no person is charged with causing the death, the Court shall hold an inquest, taking the depositions of those who know the facts. If, during or after the inquest, any person is so charged, the depositions shall be read over in the presence of the witnesses and of the accused, who shall be entitled to cross-examine each witness, and the procedure shall be as in other cases of preliminary examination. If after the inquest the Court does not see fit to cause any person to be charged, the Court shall send a copy of the depositions to the Supreme Court, together with a report as to the cause of death.

Remission of penalties.

44. The Governor of the Straits Settlements in Council shall have power, in the name of His Majesty, to remit or commute, in whole or in part, any sentence passed by a Court exercising criminal jurisdiction under this Order, and every such Court shall give effect to any such remission.

Nothing in this Order shall be deemed to affect His Majesty's prerogative of pardon.

PART IV.—CIVIL MATTERS.

Civil proceedings by action.

45.—(1.) Every civil proceeding in the Court shall be taken by action, and not otherwise, and shall be designated an action.

(2.) For the purposes of any statutory enactment or other provision applicable under this Order to any civil proceeding in the Court, an action under this Order shall comprise and be equivalent to a suit, cause, or petition or to any civil proceeding howsoever required by any such enactment or provision to be instituted or carried on.

Summary trial of actions.

46.—(1.) Every action shall he heard and determined in a summary way.

(2.) Every application in the course of an action may be made to the Court orally, and without previous formality, unless in any case the Court otherwise directs, or the Rules of Court otherwise provide.

(3.) No action or proceeding shall be treated by the Court as invalid on account of any technical error or mistake in form or in words.

(4.) All errors and mistakes may be corrected, and times may be extended, by the Court in its discretion, and on such terms as the Court thinks just.

Sittings of Court.

47.—(1.) The sittings of the Court for the hearing of actions shall be held at such places and on such days as the Court shall appoint.

(2.) The sittings shall ordinarily be public, but the Court may, for reasons recorded in the Minutes, hear any particular case in the presence only of the parties, their advisers and the officers of the Court.

(3.) Public notice of the sittings of the Court shall, as far as practicable, be given at Brunei, and if the sitting is to be held at any other place, also at that place.

Commencement by summons.

48. Every action shall commence by a summons, issued from the Court, on the application of the plaintiff, and served on the defendant (in this Order referred to as an original summons).

Action Book.

49. The Registrar shall keep a book, called the Action Book, in which all actions brought in Court shall be entered, numbered consecutively in each year in the order in which they are commenced, with a short statement of the particulars of each action, and a note of the several proceedings therein.

Force of summons.

50.—(1.) An original summons shall not be in force for more than twelve months from the day of its date (including that day).

(2.) If any defendant named therein is not served therewith, the plaintiff may, before the end of the twelve months, apply to the Court for renewal thereof.

(3.) The Court, if satisfied that reasonable efforts have been made to serve the defendant, or for other good reason, may order that the summons be renewed for six months from the date of renewal, and so, from time to time, during the currency of the renewed summons.

(4.) The summons shall be renewed by being resealed with the seal of the Court, and a note being made thereon by the Registrar, stating the renewal and the date thereof.

(5.) A summons so renewed shall remain in force and be available to prevent the operation of any statute of limitation, and for all other purposes, as from the date of the original summons.

(6.) The production of a summons purporting to be so renewed shall be sufficient evidence of the renewal and of the commencement of the action, as of the date of the original summons, for all purposes.

Non-prosecution of action.

51. If an action is not proceeded with and disposed of within twelve months from service of the original summons, the Court may, if it thinks fit, without application by any party, order the same to be dismissed for failure to proceed.

Particulars.

52. The Court may, at any time, if it thinks fit, either on or without application of a defendant, order the plaintiff to put in further particulars of his claim.

Pleadings.

53. There shall ordinarily be no written pleadings; but the Court may at any time, if it thinks fit, order the plaintiff to put in a written statement of his claim, or a defendant to put in a written statement of his defence.

Evidence.

54. The evidence on either side may, subject to the direction of the Court, be wholly or partly oral, or on affidavit or by deposition.

Discretion of Court as to practice.

55.—(1.) Notwithstanding anything in this Order, the Court (for reasons recorded in the Minutes) may at any time do any of the following things as the Court thinks just:—

(i.) Defer or adjourn the hearing or determination of any action, proceeding, or application;

(ii.) Order or allow any amendment of any pleading or other document;

(iii.) Appoint or allow a time for, or enlarge or abridge the time appointed or allowed for, or allow further time for the doing of any act, or the taking of any proceeding;

(iv.) Rehear any case and review its Judgments or orders in any case where, in the opinion of the Court, justice so requires.

(2.) Any order within the discretion of the Court may be made on such terms respecting time, costs, and other matters, as the Court thinks fit.

Costs.

56. Subject to the provisions of this Order and any Rules of Court, the costs of and incident to all proceedings in the Court shall be in the discretion of the Court.

Orders of Court.

57.—(1.) All orders of the Court shall, if not made in writing, be drawn up in writing and filed with the papers in the action.

(2.) The seal of the Court shall be affixed to every order, which shall then be part of the record in the action.

(3.) The order shall bear the date of the day of the delivery of the decision on which the order is founded.

(4.) All money ordered by the Court to be paid by any person shall be paid into the office of the Court, unless the Court otherwise directs.

Stopping ship.

58.—(1.) On proof of great urgency or other peculiar circumstances, after an action is brought, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of a plaintiff, or of its own motion, make an order for stopping the clearance of, or for the arrest and detention of, a ship about to leave Brunei, other than a ship enjoying immunity from civil process.

(2.) The Court may at any time, on reasonable cause shown, discharge or vary the order.

Submission to arbitration.

59.—(1.) Any agreement in writing between any persons to submit present or future differences to arbitration, whether an arbitrator is named therein or not, may be filed in the Court by any party thereto, and, unless a contrary intention is expressed therein, shall be irrevocable, and shall have the same effect as an order of the Court.

(2.) Every such agreement is in this Order referred to as a submission.

(3.) If any action is commenced in respect of any matter covered by a submission, the Court, on the application of any party to the action, may by order stay the action.

Bankruptcy.

Bankruptcy.

60.—(1.) The Court shall have, with respect to all British subjects in Brunei, all such jurisdiction in bankruptcy as for the time being belongs to the High Court in England.

1901

(2.) Proceedings in bankruptcy shall be originated by a summons to the debtor to show cause why he should not be adjudicated bankrupt, or by a summons issued by the debtor himself to his creditor, or any of his creditors, to show cause why he, the debtor, should not be adjudicated bankrupt.

(3.) On or after the issue of such summons the Court may stay any proceedings pending in the Court in respect of any debt provable in bankruptcy, or may allow the proceedings to continue on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

(4.) On or after the issue of such summons the Court may appoint a receiver or manager of the property or business of the debtor.

Admiralty.

~~Admiralty jurisdiction.~~

~~61.—(1.) The Court shall have Admiralty jurisdiction for and within the said territories, and over vessels and persons coming within the same.~~

~~(2.) The following enactments of "The Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890," that is to say, section 2, sub-sections (2) to (4); sections 5 and 6; section 16, sub-section (3); shall apply to the Court as if that Court were a Colonial Court of Admiralty, and as if Brunei were a British possession; and for the purpose of this application the expressions "judgment" and "appeal" shall in the enactments so applied have the same respective meanings as are assigned thereto in section 15 of the said Act.~~

Lunacy.

Lunacy.

62. The Court shall, as far as circumstances admit, have, for and within the said territories, with respect to British subjects, all such jurisdiction relative to the custody and management of the persons and estates of lunatics as for the time being belongs to the Lord Chancellor or other Judge or Judges in England intrusted, by virtue of His Majesty's Sign Manual, with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of lunatics, or as may be exercised by a judicial authority under "The Lunacy Act, 1890," or any Act amending the same.

Probate and Administration.

Probate and administration.

63. The Court shall be a Court of Probate, and, as such, shall, so far as circumstances admit, have, with respect to the property of British subjects in Brunei, all such jurisdiction as for the time being belongs to the High Court in England in cases of probate and administration of estates.

Effect of probate.

64. Probate or administration granted by the Court shall have effect over all the property of the deceased in Brunei, and shall effectually discharge persons dealing with an executor or administrator thereunder, notwithstanding that any defect afterwards appears in the grant.

Production of wills, &c.

65. Any person having in his possession or under his control any paper or writing of a deceased British subject, being or purporting to be testamentary, shall forthwith deliver the original to the Court.

Any person neglecting to do so for fourteen days after having knowledge of the death of the deceased shall be liable to such penalty, not exceeding 200 dollars, as the Court thinks fit to impose.

Intestates' property vested in Consul.

66. From the death of a British subject, in Brunei, intestate, until administration granted, his personal property in Brunei shall be vested in the Consul.

Penalty for acting without authority.

67. If any person, other than the Consul, takes possession of, or in any manner administers any part of, the personal property of any person deceased without obtaining probate or administration within three months after the death of the deceased, or within one month after the determination of any suit or dispute respecting probate or administration (if there is any such which is not ended within two months after the death of the deceased), he shall be liable to such penalty, not exceeding 500 dollars, as the Court thinks fit to impose; and in every such case the same fees shall be payable by the person so administering as would have been payable by him if he had obtained probate or administration.

Custody of property.

68. Where a British subject, not having at the time of death his fixed place of abode in Brunei, dies there, the Court shall, where the circumstances of the case appear to the Court so to require, forthwith on the death of the deceased, or as soon after as may be, take possession of his personal property within the particular jurisdiction, or put it under the seal of the Court (in either case, if the nature of the property or other circumstances so require, making an inventory), and so keep the property until it can be dealt with according to law.

Administration of small estates.

69. Where it appears to the Court that the value of the property or estate of a deceased person does not exceed 500 dollars, the Court may, without any probate or letters of administration, or other formal proceedings, pay thereout any debts or charges, and pay, remit, or deliver any surplus to such persons in such manner as the Governor in Council may approve, and shall not be liable to any action, suit, or proceedings in respect of anything done, or purporting to be done, under this Article.

Appeal in Civil Cases.

Conditions of right to appeal.

70.—(1.) Where a civil action in the Court involves the amount or value of 500 dollars or upwards, any party aggrieved by any decision of the Court in the action shall have the right to appeal to the Supreme Court against the same on the following conditions, namely:—

(i.) The appellant shall give security to the satisfaction of the Court, and to such amount as the Court thinks reasonable, not exceeding 2,000 dollars, for the prosecution of the appeal, and for payment of any costs that may be ordered by the Supreme Court on the appeal to be paid by the appellant to any person.

(ii.) The appellant shall pay to the Court such sum as the Judge thinks reasonable, to defray the expense of the making up and transmission to the Supreme Court of the record.

(2.) In any civil case the Court may, if it thinks fit, give leave to appeal on the conditions aforesaid.

(3.) In any civil case the Supreme Court may give leave to appeal on such terms as it thinks fit.

Time for appeal.

71.—(1.) After three months from the date of a decision of the Court, an appeal against it shall not lie except by leave of the Supreme Court.

(2.) After six months from the date of a decision of the Court, application for leave to appeal against it shall not be entertained by the Supreme Court.

Execution pending appeal.

72.—(1.) Where a person ordered to pay money, or to do any other thing, appeals, the Court shall direct either that the decision appealed from be carried into execution, or that the execution thereof be suspended pending the appeal, as he thinks fit.

(2.) If the Court directs the decision to be carried into execution, the person in whose favour it is given shall, before the execution of it, give security to the satisfaction of the Court for performance of any order to be made on appeal.

(3.) If the Court directs the execution of the decision to be suspended, the person against whom it is given shall, before an order for suspension is made, give security to the satisfaction of the Court for performance of such order as shall be made on appeal.

Appeal papers to be filed.

73.—(1.) The appellant shall file an appeal motion-paper in the Court.

(2.) He may at the same time file any argument which he desires to submit to the Supreme Court in support of the appeal.

(3.) The motion-paper and the argument (if any) shall be served on such persons as respondents as the Court directs.

Respondent's papers.

74.—(1.) A respondent may, within seven days after service, file in the Court a motion-paper of cross appeal (if any), and such argument as he desires to submit to the Supreme Court on the appeal and cross appeal (if any).

(2.) Copies thereof shall be furnished by the Court to such persons as the Court thinks fit.

Transmission of documents.

75.—(1.) On the expiration of such seven days, the Court shall, without the application of any party, make up the record of appeal, which shall consist of the writ of summons, statements of claim and defence (if any), orders, and proceedings, all written and documentary evidence admitted or tendered, or a certified copy thereof, and the notes of the oral evidence, the appeal and cross appeal motion-paper, and the arguments (if any).

(2.) The several pieces shall be fastened together, consecutively numbered; and the whole shall be secured by the seal of the Judge, and be forthwith forwarded by him to the Supreme Court.

(3.) The Judge shall not, except for some special cause, take on himself the responsibility of the charge, or of the transmission to the Supreme Court, of original letters or documents produced in evidence. They shall be returned to the parties producing them; and they shall produce the originals, if required by the Supreme Court, at or before the hearing of the appeal.

Powers of Supreme Court after transmission of appeal.

76.—(1.) After the record of appeal is transmitted, until the appeal is disposed of, the Supreme Court shall be in exclusive possession of the whole action, as between the parties to the appeal.

(2.) Every application in the action, as between the parties to the appeal, shall be made to the Supreme Court, and not to the Court; but any application may be made through the Court.

Day of hearing appeal.

77.—(1.) The Supreme Court shall, after receiving the record of appeal, fix a day for the hearing of the appeal, and shall give notice thereof through the Court to the parties to the appeal, such a day being fixed as will allow of the parties attending in person, or by counsel or solicitor if they so desire.

(2.) But if all the separate parties to an appeal appear in person at Singapore, or appoint persons there to represent them as their counsel or solicitors in the appeal and cause the appearance or appointment to be notified to the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court may dispose of the appeal, without being required to give notice through the Court to the parties of the day fixed for the hearing thereof.

Presence of parties.

78. The Supreme Court may, if it thinks fit, require a party to an appeal to appear personally before it on the hearing of the appeal, or on any occasion pending the appeal.

1901

Decision of appeal.

79.—(1.) The Supreme Court may, from time to time, make any order necessary for determining the real question in controversy in the action, as among the parties to the appeal, and for that purpose may amend any defect or error in the record of appeal, and may enlarge the time for any proceeding except as otherwise by this Order expressly provided.

(2.) The Supreme Court may direct the Court to inquire into and certify its finding on any question, as between the parties to the appeal, or any of them, which the Supreme Court thinks fit to determine before final judgment is given in the appeal.

(3.) The powers of the Supreme Court under this Order may be exercised by the Supreme Court, notwithstanding that the appeal is brought against part only of the decision of the Court; and those powers may be exercised in favour of all or any of the parties to the action, although they have not appealed from, or complained of the decision.

(4.) Generally, the Supreme Court shall, as among the parties to the appeal, have as full jurisdiction over the whole action as if it had been originally instituted and prosecuted in the Supreme Court by parties subject to the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

(5.) The Supreme Court may, if it thinks fit, remit the action to the Court to be reheard, or to be otherwise dealt with as the Supreme Court directs.

(6.) The appeal shall be determined by the Supreme Court according to the law to be administered under this Order by the Court.

Notices of appeal.

80.—(1.) Notwithstanding anything in this Order, an appeal to the Supreme Court shall not lie from an order of the Court, made on the application of one party without notice to the other party.

(2.) But if any person thinks himself aggrieved by such an order, he may, on notice to the other party, apply to the Court to vary or discharge the Order, and an appeal shall lie from the decision on that application.

Appeal to Privy Council.

81. For purposes of appeal in civil cases to His Majesty the King in Council, a decision of the Supreme Court on appeal under this Order shall have the effect of a decision of that Court under its ordinary primary jurisdiction.

Part V.—Evidence.

Witnesses.

82.—(1.) In any case, criminal or civil, and at any stage thereof, the Court, either of its own motion, or on the application of any party, may summon a British subject to attend to give evidence, or to produce documents, or to be examined.

(2.) If the person summoned, having reasonable notice of the time and place at which he is required to attend, fails to attend and be sworn, and give evidence, or produce documents, or submit to examination accordingly, and does not excuse his failure to the satisfaction of the Court, he shall be guilty of an offence against this Order.

(3.) A person punished under this Article shall not be liable to an action in respect of the same matter; and any such action, if begun, shall be stayed by the Court in such manner and on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

(4.) In a criminal case, where it is proved that a British subject is likely to give material evidence, either for the prosecution or for the defence, and that he will not voluntarily attend to give evidence, the Court may issue a summons for his attendance.

(5.) If he does not obey the summons, and does not excuse his failure to the satisfaction of the Court, then, after proof of service of the summons, the Court may issue a warrant to compel his attendance.

(6.) Where it is proved that he will not attend to give evidence unless compelled to do so, the Court may issue a warrant in the first instance.

(7.) In civil cases any Court may, where the circumstances appear to justify it order that the expenses of a witness, on his appearing to give evidence, shall be defrayed by the parties, or any of them.

(8.) A person attending to give evidence before the Court shall not be compelled or allowed to give any evidence, or produce any document. if, in the opinion of the Consul signified by him personally or in writing to the Court, the giving or production thereof would be injurious to His Majesty's service.

Oath.

83.—(1.) Any person appearing before the Court to give evidence in any case, civil or criminal, may be examined or give evidence on oath in the form or with the ceremony that he declares to be binding on his conscience.

(2.) Any British subject wilfully giving false evidence in any suit or proceeding, civil or criminal, or any arbitration, or in any affidavit, shall be deemed guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury.

Application of Acts relating to evidence.

84.—(1.) The provisions of "The Evidence Act, 1851" (14 and 15 Vict. cap. 99), sections 7 and 11, relating to the proof of judicial and other documents, shall extend and be applied for all purposes as if Brunei were a British Colony.

(2.) The following Acts, namely:—

"The Foreign Tribunals Evidence Act, 1856;"
"The Evidence by Commission Act, 1859;"
"The Evidence by Commission Act, 1885;"

Or so much thereof as is for the time being in force, and any enactment for the time being in force, amending or substituted for the same, are hereby extended to Brunei and the Court, with the adaptations following, namely:—

In the said Acts, the Consul is hereby substituted for a Supreme Court, or the Judge of a Court in a Colony.

(3.) The following Acts, namely:—

"The British Law Ascertainment Act, 1859;"
"The Foreign Law Ascertainment Act, 1861;"

Or so much thereof as is for the time being in force, and any enactment for the time being in force, amending or substituted for the same, are hereby extended to Brunei and the Court, with the adaptations following, namely:—

In the said Acts the Consul is hereby substituted for a superior Court in a Colony.

Part VI.—Foreigners.

Actions by foreigners.

85.—(a.) Where a foreigner desires to institute an action against a British subject, or a British subject desires to institute an action against a foreigner, the Court may hear and determine it in accordance with the provisions of this Order.

(b.) Provided that the foreigner (i) first files in the Court his consent to the jurisdiction of the Court; and (ii) also, if required by the Court, obtains and files a certificate in writing from a competent authority of his own Government to the effect that no objection is made by that Government to the foreigner submitting in the particular cause or matter to the jurisdiction of the Court; and (iii) also, if required by the Court, gives security, to the satisfaction of the Court, to such reasonable amount as the Court directs by deposit money or otherwise, to pay fees. costs, damages, and expenses, and to abide by and perform the decision to be given by the Court or on appeal.

(c.) A counter-claim or cross-suit cannot be brought or instituted in the Court against a plaintiff, being a foreigner.

Actions by natives.

86. When, pursuant to the Agreement dated the 17th September, 1888, between Her late Majesty Queen Victoria and the Sultan of Brunei, a civil proceeding is brought by a native against a British subject, an officer appointed by the Government of the Sultan shall be entitled to be present at, and to take part in, the proceedings, but shall have no voice in the decision.

Part VII.—Deportation and Removal.

Deportation.

87.—(1.) Where it is shown on oath to the satisfaction of the Court that there is reasonable ground to apprehend that any British subject in Brunei is about to commit or cause a breach of the public peace, the Court may cause him to be brought before it and require him to give security to the satisfaction of the Court to keep the peace, or for his future good behaviour, as the case may require.

(2.) Where any British subject is convicted under this Order of any crime or offence, the Court may require him to give security to the satisfaction of the Court for his future good behaviour.

(3.) In either of these cases, if the person required to give security fails to do so, the Court may order that he be deported from Brunei to such place as the Court directs.

(4.) The place shall be a place in some part of His Majesty's dominions, the Government whereof consents to the reception therein of persons deported under this Order.

(5.) The person to be deported shall be detained in custody until a fit time and opportunity for his deportation arrives.

(6.) The Consul may order that the person to be deported do pay all or any part of the expenses of, or preliminary to, his deportation.

(7.) The Consul shall forthwith report to the Secretary of State any order of deportation made or confirmed by him, and the grounds thereof.

(8.) Where any person is deported to Singapore, he shall, on his arrival there, be delivered, with the warrant under which he is deported, into the custody of the Superintendent of Prisons of Singapore, who, on receipt of the person deported, with warrant, shall detain him, and shall forthwith report the case to the Governor, who shall either, by warrant if the person is a native of the United Kingdom and if the circumstances of the case appear to make it expedient, cause the person so deported to be taken to England, and in the meantime to be detained in custody (so that the period of such detention do not exceed three months), or else shall discharge him from custody.

(9.) If any person deported returns to Brunei without the permission of the Secretary of State, or of the Consul, in writing under his hand, he shall be guilty of an offence against this Order, and shall be liable, on conviction, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding one month, with or without hard labour, and with or without a fine not exceeding 200 dollars, or to a fine not exceeding 200 dollars, without imprisonment, and also to be forthwith again deported in manner hereinbefore provided.

Removal of persons under sentence.

88.—(1). Whenever under this Order any person is to be sent, removed, or deported from Brunei, the Court shall for that purpose (if necessary) cause him to be embarked on board one of His Majesty's vessels of war, or if there is no such vessel available, then on board any British or other fit vessel.

(2.) The warrant of the Consul, or of the Supreme Court (as the case may be), shall be sufficient authority to every constable, officer, or other person acting thereunder, and to the commander or master of any vessel of war, or other vessel (whether the constable, officer, or other person, or the vessel or the commander or master thereof, is named therein or not), to receive, detain, take, and deliver up such person, according to the warrant.

1901

(3.) The warrant shall be delivered to the constable, officer, or other person acting thereunder, and a duplicate thereof shall be delivered to the commander or master of any vessel in which the person to whom the warrant relates is embarked.

PART VIII.—REGULATIONS, COMMENCEMENT, &c.

King's Regulations.

89.—(1.) The Consul may, subject to the provisions of this Order, make such Regulations, to be called "King's Regulations," as to him seem fit, for the peace, order, and good government of British subjects resident in, or resorting to, Brunei.

(2.) The power aforesaid extends to the making of Regulations for securing observance of the stipulations of Treaties between His Majesty and the Sultan of Brunei, and for enforcing any local law or customs, whether relating to trade, commerce, revenue, or any other matter, and for maintaining friendly relations between British subjects and native subjects and authorities, and for requiring Returns to be made of the nature, quantity, and value of articles exported from or imported into Brunei, by or on account of any British subject, or in any British ship and for prescribing the times and manner at or in which, and the persons by whom such Returns are to be made.

(3.) Regulations made under this Order shall not have effect unless and until they are approved by the Secretary of State, save that, in case of urgency declared in any such Regulations, the same shall take effect before that approval, and shall continue to have effect unless and until they are disapproved by the Secretary of State, and until notification of that disapproval has been received and published by the Consul.

Breach of Regulations.

90. Any Regulations made under this Order may, if the Consul thinks fit, impose penalties for offences against the same.

Penalties so imposed shall not exceed the following, namely: for any offence imprisonment for three months, with or without hard labour, and with or without a fine of 500 dollars, or a fine of 500 dollars without imprisonment; with or without a further fine, for a continuing offence, of 50 dollars for each day during which the offence continues after conviction.

In addition to or in lieu of penalties, such Regulations may provide for forfeiture of any goods, receptacles, or things in relation to which, or to the contents of which, any breach is committed of such Regulations, of any Treaty, or any native Law or Ordinance, the observance of which is provided for by such Regulations.

Publication of Regulations.

91. All Regulations made under this Order, whether imposing penalties or not, shall be printed, and a printed copy thereof shall be affixed, and be at all times kept exhibited conspicuously, in the public office of the Consulate at Brunei.

Printed copies of the Regulations shall be kept on sale at such reasonable price as the Consul from time to time directs.

Prison Regulations.

92. The respective powers aforesaid extend to the making of Regulations for the governance, visitation, care, and superintendence of prisons in Brunei, and for the infliction of corporal or other punishment on prisoners committing offences against the rules or discipline of a prison; but the provisions of this Order respecting penalties, and respecting the printing, affixing, exhibiting, and sale of Regulations, and the mode of trial of charges of offences against Regulations, do not apply to Regulations respecting prisons and offences of prisoners.

Rules of Court.

93. The Judge may, with the approval of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, make Rules of Court and prescribe forms of procedure as to all civil and criminal proceedings and the fees to be taken therein.

The Supreme Court may make Rules of Court and prescribe forms of procedure as to appeals to the Supreme Court under this Order, and may fix the fees to be taken on such appeals.

All such Rules shall be transmitted forthwith to the Secretary of State for his approval, and so far as they relate to fees, for the approval of the Treasury, and until disallowance by him shall have full force and effect.

Reports to Secretary of State.

94. Not later than the 31st March in each year, the Consul shall transmit to the Secretary of State a Report on the operation of this Order, so far as relates to judicial affairs, for the year ending the 31st December then last, showing the number and nature of the proceedings, criminal and civil, taken in the Court, and the result thereof, and the number and amount of fees received, and such other information, and being in such form, as the Secretary of State from time to time directs.

Commencement of Order.

95. This Order shall commence and take effect as follows:—

As to the appointment of any officers, the issue of any instructions, proclamations, or notifications, immediately from and after the passing of this Order;

As to all other matters and provisions comprised and contained in this Order, from and after the expiration of one month after this Order is first publicly exhibited at Brunei.

No. 12A. [Colonial Office.]

[August 1, 1901.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, August 1, 1901.

Opium seized on "Lorna Doone" at Labuan.

WE were honoured with your commands, signified in Mr. C. P. Lucas' letter of the 15th June last, stating that he was directed by you to forward, for our consideration, a letter from Sir Charles Brooke, G.C.M.G., Rajah of Sarawak, and to request the favour of our report upon certain questions of international law arising out of the circumstances described in that letter.

That Sir Charles Brooke asked for compensation for the action of the local representatives of the British North Borneo Company in Labuan in seizing opium on board the Sarawak Government steamer the "Lorna Doone," and detaining the vessel and its captain under section 9 of the Labuan Ordinance No. 2 of 1873.

That Mr. Lucas was to say that, in order to prevent the recurrence of seizures of this kind in future, you were giving instructions to the British North Borneo Company to have the Labuan Ordinance amended so as to exclude from its operation the case of a steamer merely calling at Labuan, but carrying opium consigned to another port.

That leaving the local law, therefore, out of the question, Mr. Lucas was to point out that the Rajah's claim for compensation would appear to you to depend upon the international status of Sarawak, as modified by the Agreement of the 14th June, 1888, whereby that country was placed under British protection.

That you were doubtful as to whether the "Lorna Doone" could be considered a public ship of a sovereign independent State, and, as such, entitled to exterritoriality.

That if Sarawak was to be looked upon as a sovereign or "semi-sovereign" State as regards the possession of public ships, it appeared to you that the formal statement of the Rajah that the "Lorna Doone" was such a ship was final, and that His Majesty's Government, no less than a Court of Law, would, on the authority of the "Parlement Belge" (L.R. 5 P.D., p. 219, and cases therein referred to), be bound to accept that statement without further inquiry.

That if, on the other hand, the status of Sarawak could be regarded as approximating to that of a protected native Indian State, it would clearly have no international personality at all, and would therefore be incapable of possessing "public vessels" stricto sensu.

That the matter was laid before the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 10th May, 1901, and that a copy of Mr. F. H. Villiers' letter in reply was inclosed for our information.

That Mr. Lucas was accordingly to request us to be good enough to report:—

1. What was the international status of Sarawak?
2. Was the "Lorna Doone" entitled to exterritoriality at Labuan as a "public ship"?
3. If not, was the Rajah entitled upon any other ground to compensation?

And further that, as it was believed that there was little authority or precedent upon the question of the rights of public vessels of protected States, Mr. Lucas was to ask us to favour you with a report upon the following questions:—

4. Was the public ship of an independent State under British protection entitled to the full rights of exterritoriality enjoyed by the public ships of ordinary sovereign States?
5. If not, was such a ship entitled to any limited form of exterritoriality, as, for example, in British waters, or in foreign waters, or how otherwise?
6. Or was such a ship entirely divested of its exterritorial character by the circumstance of its State being under British protection?

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That as between Sarawak and His Majesty's Government, under the Treaty, Sarawak is entitled to be recognized as an independent State subject only to the limitations mentioned in the Treaty.

1901

2. It follows from the above that His Majesty's Government ought to recognize the "Lorna Doone" as a "public ship."

3. Does not arise.

4. We think this question could be only usefully answered upon a consideration of the circumstances of any particular case in which it may arise. As the foreign relations of Sarawak are under the control of His Majesty's Government, it will be for the Government to determine in any particular case how far such a claim should be asserted.

5 and 6. We do not think that such a ship can be regarded as entirely divested of its exterritorial character, and, as already advised, we think that it ought to be treated as a "public ship" in British waters.

We have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

CHINA.

No. 13.

[March 15, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, March 14, 1901.

"Star" Newspaper v. Chamberlain. Should Kynoch papers be produced in Court?

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit herewith a letter from Messrs. Lewis and Lewis, stating that it is necessary for certain correspondence between this Office and Messrs. Kynoch (Limited) relative to letters of introduction asked for by the latter for Mr. Frank Huxham, their Secretary, to be produced in Court in connection with an action for libel which is being brought against the "Star" Newspaper Company at the suit of Mr. Arthur Chamberlain.

Messrs. Lewis and Lewis, who are acting as Solicitors for the defendant Newspaper Company in the matter, have this afternoon served the inclosed subpœna duces tecum on Mr. Campbell, C.B., of this Department, who saw their representative.

The only correspondence bearing on the matter which is, either in copy, draft, or original, in the possession and custody of this Department is inclosed for your inspection, and I am directed by Lord Lansdowne to request that you will favour his Lordship at your earliest convenience with your opinion as to whether this correspondence may properly be produced at the trial of the action by some gentleman from this Department, and with any observations of a general nature which you may have to offer on the subject.

As the case is expected to come on for hearing not later than Wednesday next, his Lordship would be greatly obliged if he could receive your Report at as early a date as possible.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

Messrs. Lewis and Lewis	March 13, 1901.
Messrs. Kynoch (Limited)	October 14, 1898.
To ditto	October 19, „
To Her Majesty's Consuls in China and Japan..	October 19, „
Subpœna duces tecum	March 13, 1901.

Report.

I do not see that there is any ground on which the production of this correspondence can be resisted.

The Circular despatch of the 9th March, 1881, which is referred to in the letter of introduction, should also be produced.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

*Royal Courts of Justice,
March* 15, 1901.

No. 14.

[March 21, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, March 14, 1901.

"Kow-shing" Arbitration Protocol: Chinese counter-amendments.

Gentlemen,

WITH reference to your Report of the 28th August last, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the proposed arbitration in the case of the "Kow-shing."

The note to the Chinese Minister (Paper K), as amended by you in your Report, was forwarded to him on the 30th August last, and a reply (Paper L) has now been received from him, making certain counter-amendments in the draft Protocol (inclosure in Paper K).

The two principal amendments consist (1) of an addition to the preamble, to the effect that the Chinese Government allege that the action of the "Naniwa" was contrary to international law, and (2) of the insertion in Article 1 of the words "having regard to the questions of international law involved and the terms of the charter-party." [The amendments are indicated under these numbers in the margin of the Annex on p. 2.]

I am to request that you will be so good as to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion in regard to these amendments; and in the event of your considering their insertion undesirable, with the grounds on which, in your opinion, the refusal of His Majesty's Government to accept them should be based.

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations you may have to offer on this case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

(A.) Lofêngluh	March 21 1900.
(B.) To ditto	April 3, „
(C.) Law Officers	April 10, „
(D.) Lofêngluh	April 12, „
(E.) To ditto	April 24, „
(F.) Indo-China Steam Navigation Company	May 19, „
(G.) To ditto	May 31, „
(H.) Indo China Steam Navigation Company	June 8, „
(I.) Lofêngluh	June 15, „
(J.) Law Officers	August 28, „
(K.) To Lofêngluh	August 30, „
(L.) Lofêngluh	February 27, 1901.

Report.

In our opinion, the proposed alterations [(1) and (2)] in the recital, and Article 1 of the draft Protocol, submitted in the letter of Lofêngluh of the 27th February, 1901, are undesirable, and ought not to be accepted by His Majesty's Government.

1901

The suggested alterations are another effort to raise the question of the legality or illegality of the action of the "Naniwa" according to international law, which His Majesty's Government has already distinctly declined to do.

The Chinese Government should be so informed, and might be referred, for the reasons of such refusal, to Lord Salisbury's letter of the 30th August.

With reference to the alteration of the word "persons" in Article 1, we think it might be agreed to exclude Chinese soldiers, which could be effected by inserting after the word persons "not being Chinese soldiers," or words to that effect.

Nothing further occurs to us.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
March 21, 1901.

Annex.

Reamended draft Protocol (see foot-note for explanation of the successive proposed alterations).

WHEREAS the steam-ship "Kow-shing," the property of the Indo-China Steam Navigation Company, was, while under charter to the Chinese Government, ~~wilfully destroyed~~, and carrying Chinese officers and troops, on the 25th July, 1894, fired on and sunk by the cruiser "Naniwa," a ship of war belonging to the Japanese Government: and whereas it is alleged by the British Government that the conduct of the Chinese officers and troops on board the "Kow-shing" led to the destruction thereof, and that the Chinese Government are responsible for the same. And whereas it is (1) alleged by the Chinese Government that the action of the "Naniwa" with respect to the "Kow-shing" was in violation of the law of nations, and that, therefore, they are not responsible for the consequences thereof, the British Government and the Chinese Government haveing thus been unable to agree as to the liability for the damage caused by the loss of the ~~said vessel~~ "Kow-shing," the two Governments do hereby agree to submit the matter to the arbitration of his Excellency the Honourable Joseph H. Choate, the Ambassador of the United States of America to the Court of St. James'; and the said Governments do further agree that the questions to be submitted to the Arbitrator, and the mode of submitting their respective cases for his award, shall be as follows:—

Article 1. The subjects to be submitted to the Arbitrator shall be:—

~~1. Whether the destruction of the "Kow-shing," a British ship, by the "Naniwa," was justifiable and in accordance with the law of nations.~~

~~2. As between the owners and the charterers of the vessel, which of them, if either, ought to bear the loss.~~

(2) Whether, having regard to the questions of international law involved and the terms of the charter-party, the Chinese Government are responsible for the loss of the "Kow-shing," and are liable to pay compensation to such owners and to the ~~persons,~~ officers, and crew on board who were injured in person or property, and to the representatives of such ~~persons~~ of them as perished.

Should it become necessary to assess the amount of the loss caused to the owners by reason of the destruction of the said vessel, the Arbitrator shall either himself assess the amount of such loss, or cause the same to be ascertained for his information in such manner as to him shall seem proper.

Art. 2. Within ~~a~~ two months from the signing of the present Protocol the British Government shall ~~present to the~~ on behalf of the owners of the "Kow-shing" and other claimants, present to the Arbitrator a statement of claim setting forth the facts on which the said claim is based, together with documents pertaining thereto, and shall at the same time present to the Chinese Minister in London a copy of such statement of claim and documents.

Art. 3. Within ~~a~~ two months from the reception of the statement of claim and documents enumerated in the preceding Article, the Chinese Minister in London shall, on behalf of the Chinese Government, present to the Arbitrator a statement of defence to the claim, accompanied by documents in reply, and shall at the same time deliver to His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs a copy of the said statement and documents for communication to the owners and other claimants.

To this defence a reply will be permitted, and to that ~~again~~ reply a rejoinder will be allowed, provided that in each case not more than ~~fourteen days~~ one month shall have elapsed since the communication to the Arbitrator and the opposing party of the statement or pleading to which it is a reply; but after the exchange of the reply and rejoinder, no written communication shall be made on either side to the Arbitrator, unless the Arbitrator shall have asked by letter for further particulars. In that event, the other party will be entitled to a copy of the answer, and such time to reply to it as the Arbitrator, in the exercise of his discretion, may be pleased to allow.

Art. 4. The Arbitrator shall hear Counsel on both sides under such conditions and at such times as he may think proper to appoint, and he shall have power in his discretion to extend the times specified in Articles 2, 3, and ~~5~~ 6 hereof, and to make such other order, or orders, on either party as, in his opinion, may conduce to the full and fair decision of this claim.

Art. 5. All questions of procedure, including the conduct of the oral arguments and the production of documents, shall be determined by the Arbitrator, and the costs shall be borne as the Arbitrator shall direct.

Art. ~~5~~ 6. The Arbitrator shall, within thirty days after the delivery of the rejoinder, proceed to examine and decide the questions hereby submitted to him, and shall give his Award as soon as possible after the conclusion of the proceedings, and shall communicate it to the Chinese Minister in London and to His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs simultaneously.

Art. ~~6~~ 7. The two Governments undertake to accept the Award, without reserve, and to give effect to it without delay.

Art. ~~7~~ 8. If, from any unforeseen cause, the Arbitrator should permanently have to desist from his functions as Arbitrator, the two Governments agree to choose another as soon as possible to decide the matter in conformity with the procedure laid down in the present Protocol.

Done at London, this   day of   , in the year 190 .

No. 15.

[June 8, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, June 3, 1901.

Gentlemen,

"Kow-shing" Arbitration: as to exclusion of action of "Naniwa" from reference.

WITH reference to your Report of the 21st March, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, a note from the Chinese Minister expressing regret that His Majesty's Government are unable to accept the modifications in the draft Protocol for submitting the question of the "Kowshing" to arbitration, which he had proposed in his note of the 27th February (Paper B).

Sir Chihchen Lofêngluh states that they were inserted in order to keep before the Arbitrator the question of the action of the Japanese ship "Naniwa," which His Majesty's Government were the first to raise in the communication called the "Memorandum" (Paper C).

His Majesty's Government asserted in that document the legality of the action of the Japanese ship, and Sir C. Lofêngluh states that, on the Chinese Government dissenting from this view, the Marquess of Salisbury suggested at an interview that the matter should be submitted to arbitration, adding that, in view of the delicate questions of international law involved in the settlement of the case, he would, if the Chinese Government should elect to do so, be prepared to submit it to the Judicial Tribunal established by the Hague Conference.

No record of this interview exists in this Department, but a note from the Chinese Minister (Paper D) is transmitted herewith, notifying the acceptance by the Chinese Government of the proposal made by Lord Salisbury at the interview mentioned above to refer the question to arbitration, and intimating that he would communicate later on the decision of the Chinese Government "as to which of the three modes of arbitration" proposed by Lord Salisbury, namely, that of submitting the questions at issue to the Hague Tribunal, to an English Judge, or to a foreign Jurist, should be adopted.

As the Law Officers of the Crown are aware, the Chinese Government selected the third alternative (Paper E), and proposed Mr. Choate as Arbitrator (Paper F).

No doubt, had the case been submitted to the Hague Tribunal, which was specially established by the consensus of all the Great Powers to arbitrate on matters involving considerations of international law, it would have been very difficult to withdraw the question of the justification of the action of the "Naniwa" under international law from the consideration of that Tribunal; but the Chinese Government

---

Foot-note.—In the above amended form of the draft Protocol the erased type and italics represent respectively the deletions and additions proposed by His Majesty's Government to be made in the original draft of the Protocol, whilst the erased type underlined and the Roman type underlined represent respectively the deletions and additions which the Chinese Minister now proposes should be made in the amended Protocol.

1901

chose arbitration by a foreign jurist who has been offered and has accepted the office of Arbitrator, and there can, therefore, be no question now of submitting the matter to the Hague Tribunal. Subject to the observations which you may be good enough to offer, it appears to Lord Lansdowne that His Majesty's Government must maintain the views which they have hitherto advanced, and decline to be a party to submitting in the actual reference to arbitration any question involving a pronouncement on the action of the "Naniwa."

In the abstract, the question whether the Chinese Government are or are not liable in damages to the owner of the "Kowshing" can be considered quite independently of the question whether the Japanese Government are or are not liable. It is not requisite for the owners of the "Kowshing," in order to establish the liability of the Chinese Government to contend that the Japanese Government are not liable, neither is it necessary for the Chinese Government, in order to satisfy the Arbitrator of their own non-liability, to establish the liability of the Japanese.

It is not disputed that, as a matter of fact, the proximate cause of the sinking of the "Kowshing" was the firing into her below water-mark of missiles discharged from the "Naniwa." The object of the Arbitrator is, however, to investigate whether the Chinese Government (or those for whose action the Chinese Government is responsible) contributed or led in any way to this result by their wrongful conduct, and thus incurred pecuniary liability in respect of such result.

I am to request that you will take Sir C. Lofêngluh's note into your consideration, and will inform his Lordship whether the opinion expressed by you on the 21st March (Paper G) as to the exclusion of the action of the "Naniwa" from the terms of the reference to arbitration, is in any way modified by the arguments advanced in that note.

I am also to request that you will be good enough to offer any observations and suggestions which may occur to you with reference to the terms of the reply which should be returned by His Majesty's Government to Sir Chihchen Lofêngluh's last communication.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

(A.) Sir C. Lofêngluh	.. ..	May 2, 1901.
(B.) Ditto	.. ..	February 27, „
(C.) Memorandum (see Annex to letter to Law Officers)	.. ..	May 22, 1896.
(D.) Sir C. Lofêngluh	.. ..	December 10, 1899.
(E.) Sir C. MacDonald	.. .. .. (Telegraphic)	January 13, 1900.
(F.) Sir C. Lofêngluh	.. ..	February 21, „
(G.) Law Officers	.. ..	March 21, 1901.

Report.

We see no reason to modify the opinion expressed by us in our Report of the 21st March last.

We think that the position taken up from the commencement by His Majesty's Government, viz., that the question for the Arbitrator is whether the Chinese Government are responsible for the conduct of their troops on board the "Kowshing," and whether such conduct led to the loss of the ship, is a correct one. We do not think that this position is in the least affected by the proposal which appears to have been made for reference to the Hague Tribunal, nor do we think that His Majesty's Government can properly introduce into the reference a clause as to the liability of the Japanese Government.

We have nothing to add to the opinions previously given by the Law Officers. It may perhaps be matter for consideration whether, in view of the very great delay which has taken place by the action of the Chinese Government, the agreement for reference should not be regarded as at an end unless the terms of reference are agreed to without further delay.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 8, 1901.

COLOMBIA.

No. 16.

[February 11, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, February 6, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Seizure of "Taboga" at Panamá

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the seizure of the British steam-ship "Taboga" by the local authorities of Panamá on the 12th November last.

The facts of the case, so far as reported to His Majesty's Government, are as follows:—

In the course of the Revolution, now proceeding in the Republic of Colombia, the town of Buenaventura, situated on the Pacific Coast of the Province of Panamá, and some 400 miles to the southward of that city, was invested by insurgents and the port blockaded. The critical condition of affairs made it imperative, in the opinion of the Governor of Panamá, to relieve the town, and in order to obtain the means of transporting troops, his Excellency entered into negotiations with the agent of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company for the use of their steamer "Taboga," a vessel of 348 tons, described by her owners as a mail-steamer, and by the Panamá authorities as chiefly used for the transportation of cattle along the coast.

The Company's agent having refused to entertain the proposal, either to charter or purchase the "Taboga," the vessel was forcibly taken possession of in the name of the Government by the local authorities, accompanied by a body of police, on the 12th November, and all foreigners among the crew were informed that they were at liberty to go on shore. The British master, officers, and engineers refused to serve on board the vessel and landed accordingly. (Paper O.)

The "Taboga" was subsequently armed with guns and sailed for Buenaventura and Tumaco with the Governor, General Alban, and a body of troops on board. (Paper P.)

On receiving from the Governor of Panamá notice of the expropriation of the vessel, Mr. Mallet, His Majesty's Consul at that place, and the Company's agent there, at once sent in protests against the forcible seizure of the vessel and her expropriation for military purposes by the Colombian authorities. (Paper M.)

With a view to the protection of British interests the Admiralty were, as soon as the facts were known, requested to send a man-of-war to Panamá, and His Majesty's ship "Pheasant" was accordingly dispatched from Esquimalt and arrived at Panamá on the 15th December.

On the previous day the Governor had returned to that port on board the "Taboga," after having routed the insurgents at Buenaventura and destroyed a rebel cruiser at Tumaco. (Papers P, Q, R.) In connection with these incidents it may be noted that it has been alleged by the insurgent General at Buenaventura that the "Taboga" when approaching that place, displayed the British Ensign, and that his defeat was largely owing to this deception.

This abuse of the British flag is, however, absolutely denied by General Alban. (Paper R.)

After remaining some twenty hours at Panamá the "Taboga" was again dispatched by the Governor on the following morning, some four and a-half hours before the arrival of Her Majesty's ship "Pheasant," with a fresh contingent of about 250 troops to be landed at Agua Dulce.

In view of the intention of General Alban to employ the "Taboga" a second time for military purposes, which was reported (Paper P) telegraphically by His Majesty's Consul, instructions were sent to Mr. Mallet on the 17th ultimo, by telegraph, to make a strong protest in the name of His Majesty's Government against the seizure of the vessel and the use subsequently made of her by the Colombian authorities. (Papers U, T.) It was added that both appeared to His Majesty's Government to be inconsistent with the principles of international law, and His Majesty's Consul was instructed to ask on the part of His Majesty's Government for a definite assurance that such conduct would not be repeated either in the case of the "Taboga" or of any other British vessel.

1901

These instructions were also communicated to His Majesty's Minister at Bogotá, who was told to inform the Colombian Government of the protest and of the assurance demanded, and to request that orders might be sent which would effectually prevent the recurrence of any such proceedings. (Paper V.)

The Governor on his return to Panamá offered to return the "Taboga" to the Company's agent, who, however, demurred to accept the vessel pending an expert examination into her condition and a settlement of the question of compensation.

The agent has since, in the exercise of discretionary powers conferred on him by his employers, come to a settlement by direct negotiation with the local authorities, who have handed over the vessel and paid 6.000*l*. as compensation, the Central Government having agreed to accept responsibility for any arrangement arrived at by the two parties. (Paper EE.)

The Governor, in handing over the vessel, at the same time complied with the demand of His Majesty's Government for a written guarantee not again to interfere with a British vessel. But in view of the importance of the interests involved, it appears desirable to obtain some more formal admission of the unjustifiable nature of the course adopted.

In these circumstances it becomes necessary to consider, apart from the question of compensation, which has, it seems, been satisfactorily arranged between the Company and the local authorities, how far the forcible seizure of the "Taboga" at Panamá for employment, not in regard to some urgent emergency at Panamá itself, but at two ports at a considerable distance down the coast was justified; how far the action complained of has afforded good ground for an official protest on the part of His Majesty's Government; and in the event of the answer to the latter question being in the affirmative on what grounds such protest should be based, and in what terms it should be couched.

With a view to the consideration of these questions, I am to call attention to the contentions of the Colombian authorities in justification of their action. The Governor of Panamá in forwarding to His Majesty's Consul at Panamá the Decree of Expropriation issued by him, explained that the expropriation of the vessel was authorized by the laws of Colombia, and did not signify any offence or transgression against foreign property in Colombia; his Excellency added that the Company would be duly indemnified.

The Decree of Expropriation cited, in support of the course pursued, the laws of Colombia Nos. 56 and 119, of 1890; and further adduced the following considerations:—(See Consul Mallet's despatch No. 24, Paper M.)

1. The Republic of Colombia is in a state of war, brought about by revolutionists who have committed acts of violence and atrocities against persons and property.

2. The revolutionists have not respected foreign property, as is proved by the fact of their having taken coal at Taboga from the English Company, and by taking possession in June last of the steamer "Cisterna," and of launch No. 26 belonging to the Canal Company, which steamers they used against the Government until the 26th July, when they were recovered by the Government forces.

3. The revolutionists have threatened to take possession of the steamers "Quito" and "Manavi," running in the Pacific and belonging to the English Company, which is subventioned by the Government; and according to the contract of 1879 has to transport troops and war material for the Government; and have prevented the steamer "Manavi" on the 9th of this month from entering the port of Buenaventura, which they attack constantly and attacked in September last and which they pretend to blockade.

4. The commercial interests of all the country and especially those of the Company demand that the ports of Buenaventura and Tumaco should be relieved soon, for which object it is indispensable to have a steamer capable of transporting sufficient troops and provisions for the enterprise.

5. The steamer "Taboga," of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, possesses all these requirements, and besides, has no fixed route as it is chiefly used for the transportation of cattle along the coast of the department.

6. The Government has proposed either to buy or to charter said ship and both proposals have been rejected by the agent of the Company and by its Directors in Valparaiso and Liverpool.

7. The laws of Colombia, like those of other civilized nations, permit the expropriation of private property, and more so the use of it for purposes of public benefit, such as opening the ports of Buenaventura and Tumaco, establish the interrupted communication of this port with the National Government and re-establish the way of communication and of mails. For these reasons and especially in view of Articles 27 and 31 of Law 56 of 1890, the civil and military Power decrees the temporary occupation of the steamer "Taboga," anchored at present and unloaded in this port of Panamá, and orders that the owners of the said ship be paid a fair price for its services during the time it may be occupied by the Government as well as for damages it may receive in the judgment of experts or by friendly agreement with the Company to which it belongs.

To resume briefly. The Decree of the Governor of Panamá contends (1) that a state of war exists.

With regard to this point, inquiry having been made as to whether the Colombian Government admitted the existence of a state of war and recognized the revolutionists as belligerents, it has been ascertained by telegraph that the Decree was made without the knowledge of the Central Government, and that they have never recognized the insurgents as belligerents. (Paper DD.)

2. That the protection of foreign interests demands the suppression of the insurrection.

3. That for this purpose steam transport was necessary for troops and provisions.

4. That the "Taboga" met the requirements of the situation.

5. That efforts to buy or charter the vessel had been rejected.

6. That expropriation of private property for the public benefit was permitted by the laws of Colombia as by those of other civilized States.

The justification thus advanced for the seizure and expropriation of the "Taboga" would appear in some sort to be an assertion of the right of angary.

The exercise of a somewhat similar authority by the Government of Uruguay in the case of certain British steamers at Montevideo in 1897 formed the subject of a reference to your predecessors in office on the 8th March of that year, and on that occasion the Law Officers stated in their Report of the 15th March (of which a copy is inclosed (Paper II) that "the right of angary has never been recognized except where there are belligerents;" they went on to state that "the proposed seizure of steamers belonging to British subjects" would not be justified because no war existed.

The report then goes on: "It" (the seizure of the steamers) "could only be justified as a measure of urgent military necessity."

A distinction would thus appear to be drawn between the right of angary and the plea of urgent military necessity, and as in view of the admitted absence of a state of war, justification under that plea cannot be maintained, it seems desirable to ascertain how far, in your opinion, this distinction may be relied upon, and whether, in the present case, justification can fairly be claimed under the latter.

In the event of its being held that a more formal and reasoned protest on the part of His Majesty's Government is warranted, it would seem expedient to consider, further, whether, apart from the general grounds of international law, a more special ground of protest is not afforded by the Conventional rights of this country under the Treaty of Commerce between Great Britain and Colombia of the 16th February, 1866 (a copy of which is inclosed (Paper KK).

Article XVI of the Treaty runs as follows:—

"The subjects and citizens of each of the Contracting Parties in the dominions and possessions of the other shall be exempted from all compulsory military service . . . . as well as from all contributions, whether pecuniary or in kind, imposed as a compensation for personal service; and finally, from forced loans and military exactions or requisitions."

Articles of a similar nature in Treaties with other countries have from time to time been appealed to, and when, in 1874, Her Majesty's Minister at Buenos Ayres inquired as to the extent to which British subjects were exempt from such exactions during the existing civil hostilities in the Argentine Republic, the Law Officers reported, on the 5th December of that year, that the words of the Treaty were express, and Her Majesty's subjects were thereby exempted from all military exactions or requisitions.

On a previous occasion, in 1866, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Buenos Ayres had raised the question as to the liability of British subjects established in or trading at that place to obey a Decree of the Argentine Government by which horses, mules, and ships were compulsorily required for military service

1901

The then Queen's Advocate (Sir Robert Phillimore), to whom the question was referred, reported as follows:—

"I am of opinion that exemption from the operation of these Decrees in favour of British subjects can be claimed under the 9th section of the Treaty of Buenos Ayres of the 2nd February, 1825, by the terms of which it is provided that British subjects shall be exempted from all compulsory military service whatsoever, whether by sea or by land, and from all forced loans or military exactions or requisitions." (24th August, 1866.)

During an insurrection which occurred at Buenos Ayres in July 1890, a launch belonging to Messrs. Shanks and Co., British subjects, of that city, was seized and pressed into the Government service by the Argentine authorities. The launch had been purchased in England by Messrs. Shanks for an Argentine customer at a cost of 1,000*l.*, and taken up the river about 12 miles above Buenos Ayres to a place called San Fernando. Here she appears to have been seized, but after ten days, the revolution being then over, she was put back by the Government authorities at San Fernando. Messrs. Shanks were aware that the launch had been returned. and had sent an employé privately to examine it, by whom it was reported to be in an unsaleable condition. But since its return had not been notified to them, they preferred to leave her where she was, and to sue the Government for her loss. They claimed 2,000*l.* They stated that they had not only lost the sale of the launch, but were about to be sued for non-fulfilment of contract by the customer for whom it had been procured.

The case was referred to the Law Officers (Sir Richard Webster and Sir E. Clarke), who reported, on the 14th May, 1892, that the claim was not one which Her Majesty's Government could properly press. The loss, they said, which was placed at an extravagant amount, was caused by the improper conduct of Messrs. Shanks themselves. On learning that the vessel had been removed they should have claimed its return, and they might then have been entitled to a nominal sum for the interference with their property. They had, however, sent in a claim for the value of the launch, and, though knowing she was at their disposal, had abandoned her.

It does not appear that the attention of the Law Officers was on this occasion drawn to Article IX of the Treaty of 1825, nor was there any reference to Treaty rights in their Report.

In the Uruguay case of 1897, which has been referred to in an earlier part of this letter in connection with the right of angary, the Law Officers reported that the seizure at Montevideo of steamers belonging to British subjects appeared not to be justifiable, and could only be justified as a measure of urgent military necessity; adding, however, that strangers resident in a country are liable to the same consequences as the native inhabitants of the country. But in the case of Uruguay there was then no Treaty to appeal to containing special exemptions for British subjects, the Treaty of the 26th August, 1842, which contained the usual Article for exemption from military requisitions, having expired on the 14th March, 1854.

A case of simple temporary detention of neutral vessels occurred during the American Civil War. In the case of the "A. G. Berry," which was prevented from leaving New Orleans for Matamoros, the Law Officers reported on the 9th February, 1864, that the principle on which this detention was justified was the urgent military necessity of the belligerent to prevent the issuing from his own ports of vessels which he apprehended would apprise his enemy of his strategic plans, and thus defeat their execution. This act of belligerent exigency, therefore, gave no grounds for remonstrance; though if the ship were indefinitely detained, that would be stretching the doctrine of military necessity beyond the usual limits, and would justify a remonstrance.

The above cases are the nearest precedents which can be discovered in the archives of this Department for the one which has now arisen in Colombia, but there appear to be none in which the circumstances have been identical with those of the "Taboga."

In the present instance it is to be noted that the Colombian Law 56 of 1890 (Inclosure in Paper M), which is specifically referred to in the Decree of Expropriation as furnishing the Government with the extradinary powers on which their action was based, contains under Article 3 the following proviso:—

"In the event of the presumption alluded to in the preceding Article (grounds of public utility for expropriation) not being refuted, the expropriation will be decreed against whomsoever it corresponds: be it a private individual, Society, Corporation, or community of any kind, or political or municipal entity save the rights, exemptions, or immunities recognized in laws or in public Treaties."

This provision would appear to rebut the plea of legality on the ground of municipal law.

In these circumstances, I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion on the questions raised in this letter, viz.:—

1. Whether the forcible seizure of the "Taboga" in the circumstances stated was justified either on the plea of urgent military necessity or on any other, and, if so, on what grounds.

2. Should your answer to the previous question be in the negative, on what grounds should the formal protest which it will in that event be necessary for His Majesty's Government to address to the Government of Colombia be based.

Lord Lansdowne would at the same time be glad to be favoured with any observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

P.S.—A further despatch just received from His Majesty's Consul at Panamá, which incloses copies of the official protest addressed by him to the local Governor on the 17th December last, and of his Excellency's reply, is also inclosed for consideration.

F. H. V.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Consul Mallet	(Telegraphic)	November 13, 1900.
(B.)	Ditto	(Telegraphic)	November 14, ,,
(C.)	Pacific Steam Navigation Company	(Telegraphic)	November 14, ,,
(D.)	To Mr. Welby	(No. 1. Telegraphic)	November 14, ,,
(E.)	To Consul Mallet	(Telegraphic)	November 15, ,,
(F.)	Pacific Steam Navigation Company		November 14, ,,
(G.)	Ditto		November 15, ,,
(H.)	Ditto (I)		November 16, ,,
(I.)	Ditto (II)		November 16, ,,
(K.)	M. Calderon		November 22, ,,
(L.)	M. Rostrepo	(Telegraphic)	November 30, ,,
(M.)	Consul Mallet	(No. 24)	November 15, ,,
(N.)	Pacific Steam Navigation Company		December 6, ,,
(O.)	Ditto		December 11, ,,
(P.)	Consul Mallet	(Telegraphic)	December 15, ,,
(Q.)	Pacific Steam Navigation Company	(Telegraphic)	December 15, ,,
(R.)	Consul Mallet	(Telegraphic)	December 16, ,,
(S.)	Memorandum (Mr. Davidson)		December 17, ,,
(T.)	To Consul Mallet (A)	(Telegraphic)	December 17, ,,
(U.)	Ditto (B)	(Telegraphic)	December 17, ,,
(V.)	To Mr. Welby	(No. 4. Telegraphic)	December 17, ,,
(W.)	Consul Mallet	(No. 25)	November 28, ,,
(X.)	Pacific Steam Navigation Company		December 21, ,,
(Y.)	M. Restrepo		December 3, ,,
(Z.)	Pacific Steam Navigation Company		December 24, ,,
(AA.)	Mr. Welby	(No. 1. Telegraphic)	December 17, ,,
(BB.)	General Reyes		December 27, ,,
(CC.)	Mr. Welby	(No. 4. Telegraphic)	December 23, ,,
(DD.)	To ditto	(No. 1. Telegraphic)	January 2, 1901.
(EE.)	Consul Mallet	(Telegraphic)	January 5, ,,
(FF.)	To Mr. Welby	(No. 2. Telegraphic)	January 8, ,,
(GG.)	Pacific Steam Navigation Company		January 21, ,,
(HH.)	Mr. Welby	(No. 1. Telegraphic)	January 12, ,,
(II.)	Law Officers' Report		March 15, 1897.
(KK.)	Treaty with Colombia		February 16, 1866.
(LL.)	Consul Mallet	(No. 1)	January 6, 1901.

Report.

1. The forcible seizure of the "Taboga" in the circumstances stated was unjustifiable. A state of war did not exist, and though military operations were in progress against the insurgents, the vessel was not seized on any ground of urgent military necessity, but as a matter of convenience for the conduct of an expedition to places at a distance from Panamá where the seizure took place.

1901

2. I think that the formal protest to be addressed to the Government of Colombia should state in general terms that His Majesty's Government regard the seizure of the "Taboga" as quite unjustifiable. It may be pointed out that the insurgents had never been recognized as belligerents, and that the Colombian Government were not justified in exercising the rights of belligerents with regard to vessels the property of a subject of a neutral Power; while, at the same time, it should be stated that His Majesty's Government is not prepared to admit that the circumstances were such as would have justified the use made of the "Taboga," even if a state of war had existed.

It should be added that, apart from a state of war, there were no circumstances which could possibly excuse the seizure of the "Taboga." I do not think it is desirable in this despatch to enter into any discussion as to the circumstances under which urgent military necessity may justify the use of neutral property apart from belligerent rights. Some instances of the exercise of such a right on the ground of necessity in the case of military operations against insurgents, although no state of belligerency exists, are suggested by Mr. Davidson in his Minute on Consul Mallet's despatch No. 24, Political, of the 5th November, 1900, and others may arise. But, while ships which have merely put into the port of a friendly Power cannot be altogether excluded from liability to such use, they are entitled to specially favourable consideration as compared with the property of neutrals on land. It is not, however, in my opinion, desirable that His Majesty's Government should, on this occasion, commit themselves to any abstract propositions on this point.

It is enough to say that the circumstances here were clearly not such as to justify the seizure.

It is not necessary for this purpose to rely upon Treaty; the position of His Majesty's Government is sufficiently established on the grounds of general international law, but I think that Article XVI of the Treaty may be fairly referred to as aggravating the conduct of the authorities at Panamá in this matter.

I think that the Colombian Government may properly be asked to express regret for what has occurred, and to give a formal assurance that British vessels will not, in future, be exposed to such treatment.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 11, 1901.

FRANCE.

No. 17.

[April 3, 1901.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, March 19, 1901.

"Waima" Collision: British Case, for submission to Arbitrator.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the accompanying draft Case on behalf of His Majesty's Government which has been prepared for submission to the Arbitrator chosen to decide on the respective claims of His Majesty's Government and the French Government in regard to the collision at Waima in 1893 and the loss of the "Sergent Malamine" in 1895.

The circumstances which have led to the drawing up of this document are briefly as follows:—

The "Sergent Malamine" was a vessel commanded by Lieutenant Mizon, a French officer who conducted an expedition up the Niger and the Benue Rivers, and whose proceedings eventually led to his recall by the French Government, and the

---

COLOMBIA.

No. 16 A.

[December 4, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, November 14, 1901.

Treatment of Frontino and Bolivia Gold Company's property. Right of angary, &c.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list, concerning the treatment accorded to the property, rights, and interests of the Frontino and Bolivia Gold Mining Company by the Agent of the Colombian Government.

The facts of the case, as stated by Mr. Barker Johnston, the Superintendent of the Company in South America, are briefly as follows:—

The Company, an English one, having its trade domicil and registered offices at 184, Gresham House, Old Broad Street, E.C., with a nominal capital of 140,000*l.*, possesses a freehold property of about 4 miles long by about 2 miles broad, containing a number of gold-bearing lodes. At present six mines are being worked, fully equipped with hoisting and pumping machinery, and mills have been erected for treating the ore. The workmen employed when the mines are in full working order number about 1,650. They are fed and housed on the Company's property, which is inclosed and fenced.

The European members of the staff are twelve in number, and absolute neutrality in the political affairs of the country has, it is alleged, been strictly observed by everyone.

At the beginning of the present revolution Mr. Johnston obtained a safe-conduct from the proper military authority for such workmen as the Company required for carrying on their mining and farming operations. This does not seem to have been respected by the subordinate authorities since it was issued, and recruiting parties broke open and stole the Company's property, fired rifle shots into the mines, endangering the lives of the British subjects there, and killing some of the native workmen. The matter has been laid before the Departmental Government, but no satisfaction or protection has been obtained.

On the 24th January, 1900, a squad of soldiers entered one of the mines and stayed at the mouth of the shaft for three hours, and in consequence of the workmen being thereby prevented from attending to their duties, a loss of 2,000*l.* was inflicted on the Company owing to the flooding of the mine.

In September 1900 a Circular (which forms Inclosure 1 to Paper A) was issued by the Departmental Government of Antioquia, instructing the local authorities to respect the persons and property of foreigners, and for some time the instructions appear to have been observed; but on the 10th July last a telegraphic order was addressed by the Colombian Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Government of the Department, a copy and translation of which form Inclosure 2 in Paper A.

This order laid down in terms that foreigners residing in Colombia were subject to the Constitution and Laws of Colombia, in the same way as natives, compulsory military service being excepted, and that, consequently, if very urgent necessities made it indispensable to seize animals of foreign private individuals for the maintenance and restoration of public order, these animals might be taken under the same conditions as from Colombians.

Very shortly afterwards, on the 26th July, ten mules, the property of the Company, were demanded to be taken on hire for war purposes. On this demand being refused, the Superintendent of the mine pleading that he had not sufficient animals for carrying on the Company's work, soldiers were sent to the Company's stables, and fourteen mules were forcibly seized and taken away.

The Company's Manager protested against this arbitrary act, and reserved a claim for damages on account of the loss accruing to the Company, which is represented as very serious, as they are deprived of their means of transport for provisions and other mining stores.

1901

The question would therefore seem to arise whether such urgent necessity can be shown to have existed as would justify this seizure and take the case out of the operation of Article XVI of the Treaty between Great Britain and Colombia of 1866 (Paper B) by which British subjects are exempted from "forced loans and military exactions or requisitions."

The terms in which the telegraphic order is couched do not therefore correctly and fully define the position of British subjects in the matter.

The application of Article XVI to cases of this kind is incidentally referred to in the Reference to the Law Officers with regard to the steam-ship "Taboga," copy of which is inclosed (Paper C), and in Mr. Davidson's Minute on Consul Mallet's despatch No. 24, Political, of the 15th November, 1900, on the subject (Paper D), when the justification advanced for the seizure and expropriation of the "Taboga" appeared in some sort to be an assertion of the right of angary.

Your opinion was then asked as to how far a distinction which appeared to be drawn in a previous case of the seizure of some British ships at Monte Video in 1897, between the right of angary and the plea of urgent (military) necessity, might be relied upon in view of the admitted absence of a state of war. The Attorney-General, in his Report of the 11th February last (Paper E) did not consider it desirable on that occasion to enter into a discussion as to the circumstances under which urgent necessity may justify the use of neutral property apart from belligerent rights.

Whether such urgent necessity did arise in the present instance would seem to depend entirely on the appreciation of the actual facts and circumstances, and the view which may be taken of the evidence.

On such facts as are at present before Lord Lansdowne there does not appear to him to have been such an urgent, immediate, and pressing emergency as justified the forcible expropriation of the mules of the Frontino and Bolivia Gold Mining Company, against their owners' protests, especially as it is not clearly established that the mules could not have been as readily obtained from natives, who might, it would seem, other things being equal, not unreasonably be selected in preference to foreigners to discharge the burdens arising through urgent necessity of this kind.

In these circumstances I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion on the question whether His Majesty's Government should or should not protest against the occasion being regarded as one of "urgent necessity."

In the event of your reply to this question being in the affirmative, Lord Lansdowne would be glad if you would further state, for his Lordship's assistance, the grounds on which you consider that such a protest can most advantageously be based.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Sir J. Dimsdale, M.P.		October 18, 1901.
(A¹.)	Mr. Johnston .. .. Two Inclosures.		August „ „
(B.)	Treaty between Great Britain and Colombia..		February 16, 1866.
(C.)	Reference to Law Officers ("Taboga")		February 6, 1901.
(D.)	Consul Mallet ("Taboga") .. .. And Minutes.	(No. 24, Political)	November 15, 1900.
(E.)	Attorney-General (Report on "Taboga")		February 11, 1901.

Report.

We are of opinion that His Majesty's Government should protest against the forcible seizure of the property of the Frontino and Bolivia Gold Mining Company, and the other acts complained of.

The protest should be rested mainly on the XVIth Article of the Treaty; what has been done constitutes a direct infringement of that Article. His Majesty's Government should decline to admit that any such "urgent necessity" had arisen as could justify the seizure even if there were no Treaty in question, and should protest against these acts as unjustifiable, even if there were no Treaty.

It should also be pointed out that the telegraphic instruction of the 10th July, 1901, addressed by the Colombian Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Departmental Government of Antioquia did not sufficiently represent the rights of British subjects, under Article XVI, to be exempted from military exactions or requisitions.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
December 4, 1901.

1901

seizure by the Niger Company of the "Sergent Malamine" and its condemnation by the Company's Tribunals. The French Government have never allowed that the condemnation was justified, and claim compensation for the owners of the vessel, which eventually sunk at its moorings, and for the merchandise on board.

The "Waima incident" occurred as long ago as December 1893.

At that time the boundary between the British and French spheres in the Hinterland of Sierra Leone had been fixed by Agreements of 1889 and 1891, but the portion of that boundary near which the incident took place had not been laid down on the spot. A predatory band of Sofas were out near the frontier, and a British force was sent to meet them. The force had encamped at Waima on the 22nd December, and before daylight next morning was attacked by a French force under Lieutenant Maritz. Before the mistake was discovered, the British had lost Captain Lendy, D.S.O., Lieutenant Liston, Second Lieutenant Wroughton, one sergeant-major, and six privates killed, and seventeen wounded.

The British had no doubt that Waima was in British territory; the fact was contested by the French, but has since been established by observations.

His Majesty's Government do not assert that Lieutenant Maritz made an attack on a British post knowing it to be such, but they contend that there was culpable neglect on his part to ascertain where he was, which justifies them in making a claim for compensation of 10,000*l.*

His Majesty's Government and that of France have, after much negotiation, agreed to submit to arbitration their respective grievances in these two affairs, such arbitration to be limited to the following two points:—

1. The amount of indemnity to be paid by the British Government for the loss of the "Sergent Malamine," the minimum to be 5,000*l.*, and the maximum 8,000*l.*

2. The amount of indemnity to be paid by the French Government for the injury to British officers and soldiers at Waima.

They have further selected as Arbitrator Baron Lambermont, the Secretary General to the Belgian Foreign Office, and a Convention is about to be signed (No. 1 of Appendix) regulating the procedure to be followed in the matter.

I am accordingly to request you to take the draft Case relating to the Waima Arbitration into your consideration, and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your views as to whether it adequately sets forth the arguments which can be advanced on behalf of His Majesty's Government in the matter, together with any further observations which you may be good enough to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) MARTIN GOSSELIN.

Report.

In our opinion the statement of the case of His Majesty's Government in the draft is quite adequate and cannot be improved.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
April 3, 1901.

Annex.

Case of the British Government in connection with the Collision at Waima in 1893 between British and French Troops.

ON the 23rd December, 1893, a collision occurred at the village of Waima (Warina or Ouéma), within the British Colony of Sierra Leone, between a French force under the command of Lieutenant Maritz and a British force under the command of Colonel Ellis. The following casualties occurred upon the British side:—

Killed in action: West India Regiment—Lieutenant Liston, Second Lieutenant Wroughton, Sergeant-Major Carraher, four privates.

Constabulary: Captain Lendy, two privates.

Severely wounded: West India Regiment—Sergeant-Major Field and fourteen privates.

Constabulary: Three privates.

1901

Two statements showing the rank, rates of pay, and surviving relatives of the killed are printed in the Appendix.

1. The Government of the French Republic having agreed to make compensation to the relatives of those who were killed and to those who were wounded on this occasion, the only question is as to the sum to be awarded.

2. The position of Waima will be found marked on the accompanying map in latitude 8° 35′ north and longitude 10° 50′ west of Greenwich (equivalent to 13° 10′ 5″ west of Paris).

3. At the time when the above-mentioned collision took place the arrangements in force with respect to the frontiers of the British, French, and Liberian possessions in this region were as follows:—

By Articles II and III of a Convention, concluded between Great Britain and Liberia on the 11th November, 1885, the line of the River Mannah (Mano on the accompanying map) was recognized as the south-eastern frontier of the Colony of Sierra Leone.

By an Arrangement signed on the 10th August, 1889, and an Agreement signed on the 26th June, 1891, between the British and French Governments, the north-western, northern, and north-eastern frontiers of the Colony had been defined by a line commencing on the Atlantic coast and terminating at Tembikunda in latitude 9° 4′ north and longitude 10° 47′ west of Paris.

By a note addressed to Mr. Egerton by M. Ribot on the 4th March, 1892, the French Government had agreed that the frontier between the British and French possessions, southward from Tembikunda to the territory of Liberia, should follow the 13th degree of longitude west of Paris.

Lastly, by an Arrangement concluded between the French and Liberian Governments on the 8th December, 1892, the country to the east of the 13th degree of longitude west of Paris, and south of the parallel passing through Tembikunda, had been recognized as belonging to Liberia.

The effect of the above arrangements is shown on the accompanying map.

4. In December 1893, Her Majesty's Government found it necessary to dispatch, under the command of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Ellis, an expedition against the Sofas, a tribe who were then raiding the country in the interior of the Colony of Sierra Leone. On the 27th November instructions were transmitted by cable to the Officer Commanding in Sierra Leone that care should be taken not to approach too near places occupied by French troops or run any risk of coming into collision with them. On the 13th December, Colonel Ellis, who was then approaching Kommendi about 25 miles south-west of Waima, addressed to the Officer Commanding in Kissi (the French post nearest to the frontier) a letter announcing his approach. This letter was sent in duplicate by different routes, but does not appear to have reached its destination.

5. Colonel Ellis reached Kommendi on the 14th December, and occupied Waima on the 21st. On the 23rd December, before daybreak, the place was attacked by a French force under Lieutenant Maritz, who had made a night march for the purpose, believing the town to be in the occupation of the Sofas. The firing lasted forty minutes. Upon its slackening the British advanced, finding seven magazine rifles and eight Chassepôts. A wounded tirailleur Sénégalais was also found, and from him Colonel Ellis first learnt by whom he had been attacked. Later in the morning Lieutenant Maritz was also found mortally wounded. Before his death (which occurred shortly after noon) Lieutenant Maritz explained to Colonel Ellis that he had been led to believe the British were Sofas. The explanation was at once accepted by Colonel Ellis, who caused the body of Lieutenant Maritz to be buried with military honours, and wrote to the French Officer Commanding at Kissi, assuring him that friendly relations would not be disturbed by the mistake. In a message dispatched the same day to the Officer Commanding in Sierra Leone, Colonel Ellis expressed his conviction that Waima was well within the British sphere.

6. The movements of the force under Lieutenant Maritz during the few days immediately preceding the 23rd December, 1893, are to be gathered from the statements of the above-mentioned tirailleur Sénégalais, recorded by Colonel Ellis, the deposition of the same tirailleur subsequently taken at Freetown before the French Consul there, and a Memorandum communicated by M. Casimir-Perier to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris on the 17th May, 1894. These documents are all printed in the Appendix to this Case.

7. It appears from their evidence that Lieutenant Maritz had earlier in the month penetrated still further into the British sphere, and had engaged the Sofas on the 5th December at Tickourema.

This place (as explained by a map by M. Desbuissous, furnished to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris with the Memorandum of the 17th May, 1894) is identical with Tekwiama, and lies some 20 miles south-west of Waima. It is stated in the Memorandum of the 17th May, above referred to, that the French Government had refrained from communicating to their officers the arrangement embodied in M. Ribot's note of the 4th March, 1892, making the 13th degree of longitude west of Paris the frontier between the British and French spheres of influence to the south of the latitude of Tembikunda.

It is plain, therefore, that the operations of Lieutenant Maritz were being conducted without regard to any frontier in that neighbourhood, and that he was not misled by any then prevailing error or uncertainty as to the geographical position of Waima or Tekwiama.

8. In the Memorandum of the 17th May, 1894, some stress is laid on the statement of the tirailleur examined at Freetown that the firing was commenced by the British sentries. Whether this is so or not is immaterial. It is not suggested that the French force was not actually moving to the attack. On the contrary, Lieutenant Maritz believed the town to be in the hands of the Sofas, and was about (as he thought) to surprise them. It is not the case of an engagement which would otherwise have been avoided being precipitated by the mistake of a British sentry. The sentry made no mistake whatever. It was not yet daybreak. He saw a force which was both apparently and really about to attack. He was justified in firing, and he would have been wrong in not doing so.

9. The geographical position of Waima was ascertained by Major S. C. N. Grant, of the Royal Engineers, by astronomical survey in January 1896.

According to his observations, it lies in longitude 10° 50′ 11″ west of Greenwich, or 3′ 38·25″ to the west of the longitude of Tembikunda, which Major Grant placed in 10° 46′ 32·75″.

At the time when Major Grant was carrying out this work an Anglo-French Joint Commission was delimiting the boundary from Tembikunda northwards, and the French members of the Commission observed for longitude at Tembikunda, and made it 10° 47′ west of Greenwich. If this datum is taken, Waima lies in longitude 10° 50′ 38·25″, or 27·25″ further west than Major Grant had placed it.

The result is that Waima is, according to the English calculations, 11·6 miles to the west of the 13th meridian west of Paris, and 12·2 miles to the west of it according to the French calculations.

These facts, embodied in a Memorandum, were communicated to M. Cambon by the Marquess of Salisbury on the 23rd September, 1899, together with a copy of the map accompanying this Case.

M. Cambon, after referring them to his Government, admitted, in a note addressed to Lord Salisbury on the 29th January, 1900, that the position of Waima within British territory was thereby fully established.

10. Before the visit of Major Grant and of the Anglo-French Commission to this neighbourhood in January 1896, it was not admitted by the French Government that Waima was to the west of the 13th meridian of longitude west of Paris. Indeed, in the map by M. Desbuissous, already referred to, and the Memorandum which accompanied it, a theory is put forward that Waima is just to the east of that meridian. It is submitted, however, that the circumstance that the position of Waima was at, and for some time after, the collision not beyond dispute, is without any bearing on the degree of responsibility of the Government of the Republic for what has occurred. As has been shown in paragraph 7 of this Case, the French officers were acting in this neighbourhood without regard to any limitations by reference to longitude. On the other hand, it clearly appears from the message sent by Colonel Ellis on the 23rd December, 1893, that he was, on his side, acting under a sense of the obligation to confine his operations to the British sphere.

The Government of His Britannic Majesty claim from the Government of the French Republic the sum of 10,000*l.*

No. 18.

[May 22, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, February 19, 1901.

Messrs. J. Holt & Co.'s trading rights in the French Congo Colony.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers, as marked in the accompanying list, on the subject of the trade of Messrs. Holt and Co., in the French Congo Colony, as affected by the Concessions which have recently been granted therein by the Government of France.

The facts of the case are as follows:—

A large part of the French Congo Colony has already been granted to French Companies, and it is probable that in time the whole Colony will be granted to such concessionnaires. The particular rights of third parties are reserved, as are also the general rights created by the Berlin Act in such parts of the conceded territories as are in the Conventional basin of the Congo. Native villages and land in the actual occupation of natives are also reserved, and provision is to be made for the fishing and hunting rights of the natives. Not more than one-twentieth of the whole Concession is reserved to the Government, who may dispose of it as they like, but not for the purpose of "forest exploitation"; nor may the persons to whom pieces of these Government lands are granted trade with natives in vegetable or animal produce.

Rights and land reserved to the natives may not be conveyed to other persons without Government permission.

1901

The system of trade hitherto followed by British firms in the French Congo Colony has been:—

1. To send traders through the country who leave European goods with the natives and subsequently collect native produce in payment. This method of trade has now been rendered impossible by the suppression of the patente ambulante.

2. To establish trading stations whence the natives fetch European goods and afterwards bring the payment in native produce. The bulk of the trade is done on credit.

This second system of trading is still nominally lawful; but the land on which the natives have hitherto collected produce for barter has been conceded by lease to the new exploitation Companies, and the natives may no longer collect it except on behalf of the Companies; while the small areas of land reserved to the natives are quite inadequate to feed the trade hitherto done by the British firms.

The question arises as to whether the system of trade followed by the British firms has given them any rights which would be a bar to the territorial Government disposing of the lands from which the produce was collected and which are now included in the Concessions.

These lands were, so far as is known, unoccupied lands, in the sense that they were not cultivated or fenced in, and the British firms trading in those territories do not appear to have acquired any rights over either the land itself or over its produce, which was, in fact, collected, not by the firms themselves, but by natives, who used it to barter with the firms; but if it may be assumed that the land formerly belonged to the inhabitants, who have for years past gathered, and are still gathering, its produce, then they had formerly, and have had ever since, the right to sell it, and the trade thus established has become a vested interest of the British firms. It is not the gathering, but the selling of this produce which is now being interfered with by the concessionnaire Companies; and it is alleged by Messrs. Holt that the French Government, in granting these Concessions, have ignored the trade created by British firms.

Messrs. Holt, however, are ready to admit that a distinction may be drawn with regard to the grant of Concessions between the interior districts of the Colony, where trade has still to be created, and those on the littoral, where a trade has already been created by themselves and other British firms.

As the extent of unoccupied land decreases by the granting of successive portions of it to exploitation Companies, the area over which the British firms can carry on the system of trade hitherto followed correspondingly decreases. New trading stations cannot be opened without the permission of the Government, but even if permission were given to open stations in the neighbourhood of lands that are still unoccupied, there is every probability that as soon as the natives have been taught the value of the produce of the land it will be conceded to a Company and the new station will become useless.

It must next be asked whether the British firms had, according to the law of the French Congo Colony, acquired any vested interest in the trade which they had created with the natives; that is, had they acquired or created any actual property in the trade quite apart from the status, changeable or otherwise, of the unoccupied land from which the natives had been accustomed to gather the produce used in barter, and apart also from any rights which the natives may have acquired in the land or its produce.

The above considerations appear to afford the elements necessary for defining, from the point of view of the municipal law of the French Congo Colony, the legal position of the trade hitherto carried on by the British firms.

It is also necessary to examine the question in its relations to the Conventional Law obtaining in the French Congo Colony.

Article I of the Berlin Act provides that the trade of all nations shall enjoy complete freedom in the Congo Basin. The question arises whether this provision prevents general prohibitions against trade by any particular individual or class, and gives a right to the natives or others to continue to collect the produce of land, which was once unoccupied, after it has been granted to individuals or Companies.

With regard to the question of trading licences, it cannot be said that Article I precludes the territorial Government from requiring a licence from traders. Such a licence is required by traders in other parts of the Congo Basin, and, as long as the conditions for obtaining the licences are not prohibitive, such licences would seem to be a legitimate source of revenue required for maintaining the police and other branches of the Administration.

Article V of the Berlin Act provides that no monopolies or privileges of any kind in matters of trade may be granted in the conventional basin of the Congo. This, however, does not appear to preclude the territorial Government from granting leases of unoccupied land (or, indeed, the fee simple) to individuals or to Companies. The Concessions have merely introduced, without notice no doubt, the state of things existing in old-settled countries. Unoccupied land must be supposed to be at the disposal of the territorial Government, and this necessarily involves the right of that Government to grant it to individuals or Corporations, provided no hindrance created by conventional (or by municipal) law stands in the way.

This summary of their position was submitted to Messrs. Holt (Paper No. 49) with a view to their adding to it any arguments which they considered might tell in their favour, and they have now replied (Paper No. 50).

Messrs. Holt contend that "any Concession which has the effect of alienating the rights of the natives to collect and sell the vegetable and other products of the country is a direct violation of the principles of equity and the rights of the contracting powers" (pp. 3 and 4); and they maintain that if the natives had the right to sell land or its products to them before the French Government acquired political influence in the districts in question, and subsequent to the Berlin Act, the right is still intact.

There is no doubt much truth in the statements contained in the last paragraph of their letter; but it may be thought that these statements afford material rather for an appeal ad misericordiam to the French Government than for submission to a legal Tribunal.

Before, however, making such an appeal to the French Government, the good effect of which, it is to be feared, would be more than doubtful, Lord Lansdowne would be glad if you would take the accompanying papers into your consideration and favour him with your opinion as to whether the circumstances of the case justify a representation to the French Government on the more solid ground of legal right, as also with any further observations on the papers herewith submitted to you.

I have, &c.
(Signed) MARTIN GOSSELIN.

List of Papers.

1.	Messrs. Holt		April	19,	1899.
2.	Ditto		May	25,	„
3.	Ditto		May	29,	„
4.	Ditto		June	21,	„
5.	Ditto		June	28,	„
6.	To ditto		July	6,	„
7.	Messrs. Holt		July	11,	„
8.	Ditto		July	12,	„
9.	Ditto		July	13,	„
10.	Ditto		July	20,	„
11.	Memorandum by Mr. Streatfeild		July	24,	„
12.	To Messrs. Holt		July	25,	„
13.	Ditto		July	31,	„
14.	Messrs. Holt		November	29,	„
15.	Ditto		December	1,	„
16.	Mr. J. Holt		January	3,	1900.
17.	Messrs. J. Holt and Co.		February	17,	„
18.	To Sir E. Monson	(No. 51. Africa)	March	3,	„
19.	Mr. J. Holt		April	10,	„
20.	Messrs. J. Holt and Co.		May	17,	„
21.	To Sir E. Monson	(No. 106. Africa)	May	30,	„
22.	Mr. J. Holt		June	18,	„
23.	Ditto		June	28,	„
24.	Ditto		July	5,	„
25.	Nil.
26.	Mr. J. Holt		July	18,	„
27.	To Sir E. Monson	(No. 129. Africa)	July	18,	„
28.	Ditto	(No. 140. Africa)	August	8,	„
28A.	Sir E. Monson	(No. 98. Africa)	August	13,	„
29.	Messrs. Holt		August	17,	„
30.	Ditto		September	17,	„

31. To Sir E. Monson	(No. 147. Africa)	August 24, 1900.
32. Mr. Lister		August 24, "
33. Acting Consul Nightingale	(No. 4. Africa)	August 25, "
34. Messrs. J. Holt		September 29, "
35. To Sir E. Monson	(No. 154. Africa)	October 5, "
36. Ditto	(No. 156. Africa)	October 8, "
37. To Messrs. Holt		October 10, "
38. Messrs. Holt		October 17, "
39. Ditto		October 17, "
39A. Sir E. Monson	(No. 109. Africa)	October 19, "
40. To ditto	(No. 162. Africa)	October 25, "
41. To Messrs. Holt		October 25, "
42. Messrs. Holt		October 31, "
43. To ditto		November 6, "
42A. Memorandum by Sir M. Gosselin		November 21, "
43A. Messrs. Holt		November 26, "
44. Mr. Herbert	(No. 127. Africa)	December 4, "
45. Ditto	(No. 129. Africa)	December 11, "
46. Ditto	(No. 130. Africa)	December 14, "
47. Memorandum (Mr. Farnall)		December 19, "
48. To Messrs. Holt		December 19, "
49. Ditto		December 21, "
50. To Mr. Herbert	(No. 185. Africa)	December 23, "
51. Sir E. Monson	(No. 3. Africa)	January 6, 1901.
52. To Messrs. Holt		January 14, "
51A. Messrs. Holt		January 15, "
52A. Ditto		January 23, "
53. To ditto		February 1, "
54. To Sir E. Monson	(No. 18. Africa)	February 7, "
55. Copy of Berlin Act*		February 26, 1885.

Report.

We cannot see any ground of legal right for representations as regards territory outside of the free-trade zone, though Messrs. Holt have, no doubt, been very hardly treated.

Any representations on their behalf in this respect can be based only on the moral claim to equitable consideration, which their past dealings may be considered to have established.

As regards territories within the free-trade zone, we think the case stands differently. It might fairly be contended that the vague rights of utilizing these vast tracts conferred by Article 1 of each of the Concessions (as printed in the "Journal Officiel" of the 21st July, 1899) are subject to the rights of trade reserved by the Act of Berlin (see the terms of reservation in Article I). But it is clear that these Concessions are construed as giving a monopoly of trade, and the right to exclude Messrs. Holt and any other British traders from trade with the natives. This construction appears to rest on the general right conferred of "jouissance et exploitation," a right which is different from that of property (see Article VII). So interpreted, it appears to us that the Concessions are in contravention of the Act of Berlin, as they confer on the grantees the right to deal with the natives for the products of these unappropriated territories to the exclusion of all others.

As regards the free-trade zone, we think that the Act of Berlin affords legitimate ground for remonstrance.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
May 22, 1901.

---

* Treaty No. 757.

No. 19.

[November 7, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

"Sergent Malamine" Arbitration: British Case.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, October 16, 1901.

WITH reference to your Report of the 3rd April, 1901, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you a copy of the Mémoire on the subject of the loss of the "Sergent Malamine" which the French Government have submitted to the Arbitrator, together with the draft of the reply of His Majesty's Government which has been prepared from the accompanying papers, under the terms of Article III of the Convention of the 3rd April last, under which the arbitration is held.

I am to request you to take the draft reply relating to the loss of the "Sergent Malamine" into your consideration, and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your views as to whether it adequately sets forth the arguments which can be advanced on behalf of His Majesty's Government in the matter.

His Lordship will at the same time be glad to be favoured with any further observations of a general nature which you may have to offer upon the papers now submitted to you.

The delay fixed by Article III of the Convention for the preparation of the reply will expire on the 16th proximo, and as the reply and annexed documents will have to be translated into French before that date, I am to request that Lord Lansdowne may be favoured with your Report with as little delay as possible.

I have, &c.
(Signed) MARTIN GOSSELIN.

List of Papers.

French Case.
Draft reply.
Papers connected with "Sergent Malamine" Case.
Case for British Government in connection with Waima Collision.

Report.

As altered in red ink* and initialled by us, we approve of the draft Case. Care should be taken that the spelling of the names in the Case corresponds with that on the map so as to avoid confusion.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
November 7, 1901.

Annex.

"Sergent Malamine" Arbitration.

Case on behalf of His Britannic Majesty's Government.

IN the Memorandum presented by the Government of the French Republic it is submitted that in order to arrive at the sum represented by the "loss of the 'Sergent Malamine'" the Arbitrator should take into consideration four elements of damage, namely:—

1. The value of the ship at the time of seizure.

---

* Printed in italics.

1901

2. The loss of the entirety of a subvention which she would have earned during a period of three months and a-half following the seizure.

3. The diminution in the subvention which the owners are alleged to have suffered from the expiration of that period to the date of the ratification of the Convention of the 3rd April, 1901.

4. A loss of cargo, assumed to amount to a sum equal to the cost, including freight, of the cargo originally put on board the "Sergent Malamine," on her departure up the Niger.

The sums claimed under these heads amount together to 540,920 fr. 13 c., a sum greatly in excess of 8,000*l.*, the maximum sum which it is within the competence of the Arbitrator to award under the provisions of the Arbitral Convention.

His Majesty's Government contend that it is only the first of these elements, namely, the value of the vessel herself when seized that should, under the circumstances of the case, be taken into consideration by the Arbitrator. Such value is placed by the French Memorandum at the sum of 125,267 fr. 80 c., being the cost price of the vessel less depreciation at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. It might well be argued that, having regard to the work on which she had been employed, this method of valuation is altogether too liberal. But, having regard to the fact that the above-named sum of 125,267 fr. 80 c. is approximately equivalent to the sum of 5,000*l.*, which the Arbitrator is in any event to award, His Majesty's Government do not think it worth while to trouble the Arbitrator in detail with considerations of this sort.

The arguments contained in the present Case will, therefore, be directed solely to the admissibility of the last three heads of damage put forward.

The expedition of Lieutenant Mizon to which the "Sergent Malamine" was attached arrived in the Niger Territories in September 1892, and proceeded to ascend the Niger and its tributary, the Benué. It was on this latter river that the events occurred which led to the seizure of the vessel.

The Benué flows into the lower waters of the Niger from the eastward, and the district which it traverses lies to the south of the line (drawn from Say on the Niger along the northern frontier of Sokoto to Barrua on Lake Chad), which, by an agreement made between the British and French Governments on the 5th August, 1890, was to divide the spheres of action of the two countries. At the date of that Agreement a large part of the River Benué was indeed already British territory, under the administration of the Royal Niger Company; and Lieutenant Mizon, himself, in letters exchanged with the representative of that Company in December 1890 (on the occasion of a visit made by him to the Niger in that year) acknowledged that the territories of the Company extended to Yola on the south bank, and 100 miles beyond Ribago on the north bank.

In August 1892, it was known that Lieutenant Mizon was again proceeding to the Niger; and on the 10th of that month the French Ambassador in London gave, on behalf of his Government, the most solemn assurance that the arms taken by this Mission were exclusively destined for the personal defence of its members, and that they would neither be given, nor ceded, nor sold to third persons. His Excellency at the same time defined the character of the expedition as being essentially scientific and commercial.

The expedition arrived at Akassa at the mouth of the Niger in September 1892. It consisted of two vessels, the "Sergent Malamine" and the "Mosca," which cleared at Akassa to pass beyond the Niger Company's territories.

No duty was charged upon the contents of the vessels on the faith of a written declaration signed by Lieutenant Mizon not to land goods or load produce, until his arrival at Adamawa, except at a port of entry and on payment of the proper dues to the Niger Company. A permit to carry arms was further given him on his assurance that they would not be used in the Niger Company's territories.

The expedition thereupon proceeded up the river, and Lieutenant Mizon at once proceeded to violate in every particular both the assurances given by the French Ambassador and those given by himself. He set up trading stations at Djiru, Mainerewa, and Koonini on the River Benué. He purported to declare a French Protectorate over the Sultanate of Muri, in which those places are situate, supplied the Sultan with arms and assisted him in attacking a neighbouring tribe. These facts appear clearly upon the evidence taken on the judicial proceedings which resulted in the condemnation of the "Sergent Malamine," and they are, indeed, admitted in a despatch from M. Casimir-Periet to the Marquess of Dufferin, dated the 9th February, 1894.

A reference to the map attached hereto will show that the Sultanate of Muri is a long way below Yola, and, therefore, by Lieutenant Mizon's own statement, within the territories of the Royal Niger Company. The district over which Lieutenant Mizon claimed to establish a French Protectorate extended from Jen to Abishi, about 200 miles, and included Ibi, the head station of the Niger Company on the Benué, where there was one of their constabulary depôts.

Upon complaint being made of these proceedings, the French Government undertook at once to supersede Lieutenant Mizon, and to direct that the expedition should evacuate Muri. Copies of a despatch and of a letter to this effect from the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the British Ambassador in Paris, were handed to Lieutenant Mizon by the representatives of the Company on the 11th August, 1893, the original having been handed to M. Nebout, who was designated as the successor of Lieutenant Mizon, at a point lower down the river. Lieutenant Mizon refused to give credit to these copies, but on the 20th August he received from M. Nebout the originals together with a telegram directed to himself from the French Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies. Notwithstanding these instructions Lieutenant Mizon purported during the course of the next few days to make a Treaty with the Emir of Yola, whom he supplied with arms, and to declare a French Protectorate in the district. These facts are not disputed. They are taken from the despatch of M. Casimir-Perier, already referred to. It may, however, be added that the arms supplied by M. Mizon to the Emir included rifled cannon of French manufacture which have since been used by the Emir against His Majesty's troops. The "Sergent Malamine" was further used for trading in Yola, payment of dues to the Royal Niger Company being refused. On the 4th September, 1893, M. Mizon addressed a letter to the representatives of the Niger Company, stating that while he proposed to start with his other vessel the "Mosca" on his return to Europe towards the end of the month, the "Sergent Malamine" would be left off Yola.

It was in consequence of these acts that the "Sergent Malamine" and her cargo was arrested by the officers of the Royal Niger Company in September 1893, and judicially condemned in legal proceedings regularly taken in the Courts of the district. These proceedings, including the evidence, are printed in the Appendix hereto.

Meanwhile, on the 26th October, 1893, the Earl of Rosebery, Her late Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, sent a despatch to Her late Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, for communication to the Government of the Republic, intimating that reparation was due for the losses entailed on the Niger Company by M. Mizon's acts. This communication was answered by M. Casimir-Perier in the despatch already referred to, dated the 9th February, 1894. In this despatch the explanations of M. Mizon, who had now returned to France, are given, and a counter-complaint is made of the seizure in Muri of the merchandize landed by Lieutenant Mizon at the trading stations set up by him in that Sultanate.

The above short statement brings the history of the matter down to the year 1894. At the close of that year, other matters of dispute being open between the British and French Governments, the proposal was made on behalf of the British Government that, as part of a general arrangement, the "Sergent Malamine" should be placed at the disposal of the French Government. It is to this proposal, as is correctly set forth in the French Memorandum, that the form of the present arbitration is to be traced, and the questions whether any sum beyond the actual value of the "Sergent Malamine" is to be awarded against His Majesty's Government.

In the first place it is submitted as clear upon the documents annexed to the French Memorandum that it cannot have been contemplated that compensation should be made by the British Government on any such basis as that which in that Memorandum is contended for.

As appears from those documents the original proposal in 1894 was that the "Sergent Malamine" should be restored, all discussion arising out of the action of Lieutenant Mizon being abandoned, including the heavy counter-claim of the Niger Company. In the despatch of Sir Edmund Monson of the 11th January, 1897, printed at p. 51 of the French Memorandum, it was stated that Her late Majesty's Government were prepared to adhere to this solution, but that owing to the loss of the "Sergent Malamine" they were unable to offer to restore her as originally intended. The despatch accordingly offered another concession on the part of Her late Majesty's Government "in view of their inability to restore the 'Sergent Malamine.'"

As is correctly stated on p. 20 of the French Memorandum, Her late Majesty's Government did not consider the offer of the restitution of the "Sergent Malamine" nor of any substitute for such restitution after it had become impossible as an admission of liability in principle. On the contrary the basis of that offer was necessarily that the discussion of the matter of strict right should be dropped, the Niger Company on the one hand, and the freighters and owners of the "Sergent Malamine," on the other, being left to bear their own losses except so far as the owners could be compensated by the material restoration of the vessel at that date.

The Government of the French Republic not feeling able, as it is stated in their Memorandum, "renoncer au bénéfice d'une situation déjà acquise," have made it a condition of subsequent negotiations that the position taken by Her late Majesty's Government in 1894 and 1897 should not be withdrawn from.

By the ~~Treaty~~ Convention of Arbitration the Arbitrator is, consequently, to determine within the prescribed limits the sum to be paid "pour la perte du 'Sergent Malamine.'" It is evident, however, that if these words were held to empower the Government of the Republic to bring into account elements of damage beyond the value of the vessel, the position taken by her late Majesty's Government will have been varied to their disadvantage. The heavy counter-claim of the Niger Company, in support of which it is obvious that very weighty considerations could have been pressed, would have been got rid of, while, on the other hand, the owners and freighters are admitted to bring into account every element of claim which they could have urged, if the conduct of the expedition had been unimpeachable.

For the above reasons it is submitted that it could not have been the intention of the parties, and that it would not be equitable under the circumstances to admit, in estimating the sum to be awarded any element beyond the value of the vessel. It is further contended that giving effect to the actual terms of the Convention, and applying the principles which regulate the amount of damage to be regarded as consequential upon the loss of a given article of property, such as a vessel, the three last heads of claim advanced in the French Memorandum are inadmissible.

So far as the loss alleged to have been incurred by the freighters is concerned, it is submitted that the Convention does not empower the Arbitrator to include this. The figure is to be assessed in respect of "la perte du 'Sergent Malamine.'" This does not refer to the seizure of the vessel by the officers of the Niger Company, but to the failure of the British Government to restore her.

1901

Supposing, however, the reference to be to the seizure, it still does not follow that her cargo should be the subject of compensation. As is well known, a vessel and her cargo are regarded as distinct object-matters both in international and municipal law, and this distinction is particularly important where, as in the present case, the ship and cargo are the property of different owners. The Compagnie des Chargeurs Réunis, who as set forth in the French Memorandum were the owners of the "Sergent Malamine" were distinct from the Compagnie Française de l'Afrique Centrale and do not appear, according to the French Memorandum, to have had any part in the enterprise in which the latter body so unhappily employed her. But the matter does not rest merely upon any narrow consideration of this kind. The seizure of the merchandize which had been embarked upon the "Sergent Malamine," or of the produce into which the merchandize so embarked had been converted by traffic with the natives, was to a large extent a separate transaction based upon different grounds, and made before the seizure of the "Sergent Malamine" was decided upon. It appears that some of the goods were seized by Mr. Wallace at the trading stations at Koonini and Mainerewa in August 1893, while on his way up the river to find the "Sergent Malamine," and a large quantity of ivory, the produce of trading at Koonini and Mainerewa, was seized on board the "Mosca," Lieutenant Mizon's other vessel, which was arrested for the purpose and afterwards released. This was after the seizure of the "Sergent Malamine." It seems impossible upon the most liberal interpretation of the terms of the Convention that the words "la perte du 'Sergent Malamine'" should include the loss of the cargo seized at Koonini and Mainerewa, still less the cargo taken out of the "Mosca," the arrest of which is not in any way referred to.

There seems, however, no distinction in point of merits between these three seizures, and the conclusion suggested is that the losses of the freighters of the "Sergent Malamine" are not to be taken into consideration. It is submitted that this view is supported both by the wording of the Convention itself and the history of the negotiations from which it resulted, and that it is consistent with the justice of the case.

There remains for separate consideration the claims in respect of the loss of subvention. It is clear that, if "la perte du 'Sergent Malamine'" refers merely to the failure to restore her, neither of these claims could be admitted. The first of the claims is in respect of the loss of subvention up to the 1st February, 1894, when the contract for the new and decreased subvention was entered into by the owners with the French Government. The second of these claims is in respect of the decrease in the subvention from that date down to the date of the Convention of Arbitration. The proposal of the British Government that the "Sergent Malamine" should be placed at the disposal of the French Government was made at the end of 1894, that is to say, after the contract for the diminished subvention. It follows, therefore, that if the proposal to restore the "Sergent Malamine" had been acted upon, the owners, while receiving back the vessel herself, would have been left to bear without compensation the losses of subvention now relied upon.

But whatever the exact signification of the phrase "la perte du 'Sergent Malamine'" may be, it is submitted that these claims for consequential damage cannot be sustained. The first claims are for the full amounts of the subvention alleged to have been lost, without any deduction for the cost which would have been entailed upon the owners of the "Sergent Malamine" in rendering the services required to earn it, and without any deduction in respect of the further depreciation of the "Sergent Malamine" in the course of rendering those services. According to the principle put forward in the French Memorandum the owners of the "Sergent Malamine" are to be credited with the presumed gross earnings of the vessel down to the date of the Convention of Arbitration, and are also to be compensated on the footing that after receiving those earnings they would still have had the vessel in their possession in as good a condition and of the same value as it was in 1893, that is, as if it had never been employed on the work of which those earnings would be the result.

This principle cannot be a just one. Indeed, if it ~~is~~ be sound it is hard to see why the loss should be regarded as ceasing at the date of the Convention of Arbitration and should not be treated as destined to continue for an indefinite period. If any consequential damage beyond the value of the vessel could have been proved, figures should have been submitted and verified, in which due allowance for expenses and depreciation should have been made, as this has not been done it is submitted that the Arbitrator should, in any case, reject these heads of claim. The probability is that no such damage was suffered. It is to be presumed that during the period when the "Sergent Malamine" was withdrawn from the postal service in order to be attached to the expedition of Lieutenant Mizon the postal service was not interrupted, but that means were found to carry on the service with another steamer, and that the services could have been so continued as well after the determination of Lieutenant Mizon's expedition as during its continuance.

~~If it could be shown that this involved greater expense than would have been incurred if the "Sergent Malamine" had been available, this could have been shown, and would have been a legitimate head of damage. In the same way, it~~ It is wholly unreasonable to suggest that the contract of the 1st February, 1894, providing for a diminished service and a correspondingly diminished subvention was caused by the loss of the "Sergent Malamine." Another vessel could have been procured and the service continued on the old footing, had the parties so desired; and if this had involved any extra expense, that could have been proved. If the only expense was replacing the "Sergent Malamine" by another vessel by the expenditure of a sum equivalent to the value of the "Sergent Malamine" that expense is made good by payment of such value.

For the above reasons His Majesty's Government submits to the Arbitrator that the sum of 5,000*l.*, being approximately the value of the "Sergent Malamine," according to the figures presented by the French Memorandum, is all that should be awarded for the loss of that vessel.

R. B. F.
E. C.

Note.—Some alterations in wording were subsequently introduced in the text of the British Case.

No. 20.

[November 29, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 28, 1901.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to inclose, for your consideration, the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the murder, on the 21st June last, at Argungu, in the British Protectorate of Northern Nigeria, of Captain C. V. Keyes, Indian Staff Corps, serving in the 1st Battalion of the West Africa Frontier Force.

Murder of Captain C. V. Keyes in Northern Nigeria.

The fullest particulars at present in the possession of His Majesty's Government with regard to this crime will be found in the second inclosure in the letter from the Colonial Office of the 11th September (Paper I). Stated shortly, it appears that, acting on instructions from the officer administering the Government of Northern Nigeria, Captain Keyes had proceeded to Argungu on the Birmir-Kebbi-Sokoto Road, in the British Protectorate, in order to arrest certain so-called traders from the adjoining French territory who had been raiding cattle in those parts. On arriving at their compound with an escort of seven soldiers, Captain Keyes demanded that their arms should be given up, which demand they refused to obey. Captain Keyes then proceeded to take the arms away from the native followers, when it is alleged that one of the party, named Buret, raised a revolver and shot Captain Keyes in the groin. He is also stated to have been shot through or close to the heart. At any rate his death appears to have been instantaneous.

It will be observed from Colonel Morland's Report that Captain Keyes was unarmed and only carried a stick, though a boy appears to have stated that Keyes fired two shots at Buret with a revolver, without, however, hitting him. Whatever the truth may be, the raiders seem to have returned within French territory after the affair.

On the 9th July the Governor of Dahomey informed the officer administering the Government of Northern Nigeria that orders had been issued to arrest the culprits if they entered the French Protectorate, and on the 23rd August, in answer to a request for information which His Majesty's Ambassador at Paris had been instructed to make, M. Delcassé informed his Excellency that three individuals had been arrested at Fillinqué and put into prison.

On the 10th September last, the officer administering the Government of Northern Nigeria, informed the Secretary of State for the Colonies, by telegraph, that the French authorities at Fillinqué had handed over to them three persons, of whom Buret was one, without any application having been made for their surrender and that they had been kept under arrest by the military authorities owing to the unsuitability of the civil prisons.

On the 15th October a further message was received from Jebba, the seat of the Government of Northern Nigeria, stating that the three men had been tried on a charge of murder, and convicted and sentenced to death by Acting Puisne Judge Pennington, and that the 4th November had been fixed as the date for their execution. This was followed by a further message on the 18th October to the effect that the Governor of Porto Novo, in the name of the French Government, had demanded the surrender of these three convicts on the ground that they had not been handed over to the British authorities in Northern Nigeria in conformity with the Extradition Treaty of 1896 between the United Kingdom and France. A copy of the Treaty is inclosed.

On the 21st October the French Minister at this Court made a similar representation at this Office (Paper M), and this was followed on the 26th ultimo by a more formal requisition (Paper Q) for the restoration of the prisoners, supported by a list of precedents. This was supplemented on the 23rd instant by the communication of documents to prove the identity and French nationality of the men.

1901

I am next to invite your attention to the letter addressed on the 22nd October, by Lord Lansdowne's direction, to the Colonial Office, and to the instructions which have been sent, in accordance therewith, by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the officer administering the Government of Northern Nigeria, to postpone the date of the execution of these men without admitting that there is any reason for questioning the propriety of the sentence (Paper N).

I am further to call your special attention to the report of the trial, of which a copy is inclosed in the letter from the Colonial Office of the 26th instant (Paper Z).

As you are aware, in the view taken by His Majesty's Government the Extradition Act and Treaties are of no application in the case of British Protectorates, which are not considered to be an integral part of the British dominions.

No formal arrangement at present exists for the surrender of criminals between the British Protectorates on the West Coast of Africa and the adjoining French and German Colonies or Protectorates, but having regard to the opinion expressed in your Report to the Colonial Office of the 29th June, 1901, His Majesty's Government contemplate suggesting local agreements based on the Extradition Treaties between the United Kingdom and those countries, both of which preclude the surrender of nationals.

The matter is, therefore, one which could not, in the view taken by His Majesty's Government, have been dealt with under the Extradition Treaty at present subsisting between Great Britain and France. At the same time, however, it is clear, having regard to the special reservation in the Treaty and to the existing practice between the two countries with reference to the non-surrender of nationals, that the French Government, with full knowledge of the undisputed facts of the case, neither would have surrendered, nor could have been reasonably expected to surrender under the Treaty or by some substituted extradition process of a less formal and regular kind, three persons who were French citizens.

At the same time, these offenders were not brought within the jurisdiction of the Northern Nigerian Courts in consequence of any demand or request made by the British authorities.

They came within that jurisdiction through the voluntary, if misconceived, action of a French official, for which no British authority was even indirectly responsible, and, being found within the jurisdiction, they were thereupon arrested, committed for trial, tried, and convicted in due course of law. It was, unfortunately, not until after verdict and sentence had been actually pronounced that any representation from the Government of the French Republic reached His Majesty's Government on the subject.

In these circumstances a juridical position of no little difficulty and delicacy has arisen, in dealing with which Lord Lansdowne would be glad of your assistance and advice.

A Memorandum by the Legal Adviser to the Department, briefly summarizing the more salient points of difficulty in connection with the case and offering such suggestions for their solution as have occurred to him, is inclosed for your consideration (see Annex).

Having regard to the peculiar nature of the case, it has been thought preferable not to submit specific questions for your opinion, but to request you to advise generally on the matter.

I am to add that this letter has been submitted to the Secretary of State for the Colonies for his approval and that Mr. Chamberlain concurs generally in its terms.

As there has already been considerable, though unavoidable, delay in the submission of the case to you, and as it is very desirable in the discussion of a matter of this nature with a foreign Government to avoid even the appearance of procrastination, Lord Lansdowne will be greatly obliged if you can favour him with your Report at your earliest possible convenience.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

P.S.—An additional copy of this letter and of Mr. Davidson's Memorandum has been inclosed for the convenience of the Solicitor-General.

T. H. S.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Colonial Office		July 6, 1901.
(B.)	Ditto		July 17, „
(C.)	To Mr. Herbert	(No. 104)	July 26, „
(D.)	Sir E. Monson	(No. 78. Africa)	August 4, „
(E.)	Colonial Office		August 9, „
(F.)	To Sir E. Monson	(No. 115. Africa)	August 16, „
(G.)	Colonial Office		August 19, „
(H.)	Sir E. Monson	(No. 86. Africa)	August 27, „
(I.)	Colonial Office		September 11, „
(J.)	Ditto		September 16, „
(K.)	War Office		September 27, „
(L.)	Colonial Office		October 19, „
(M.)	M. Geoffray		October 21, „
(N.)	To Colonial Office		October 22, „
(O.)	To Sir E. Monson	(No. 63. Treaty)	October 23, „
(P.)	Colonial Office		October 23, „
(Q.)	M. Cambon		October 26, „
(R.)	Colonial Office		October 28, „
(S.)	Ditto		October 30, „
(T.)	To ditto		October 31, „
(U.)	Colonial Office		November 8, „
(V.)	Ditto		November 12, „
(W.)	M. Cambon		November 20, „
(X.)	Ditto		November 23, „
(Y.)	To Colonial Office		November 25, „
(Z.)	To M. Cambon		November 25, „
(Z^1.)	Colonial Office		November 26, „
(Z^2.)	Ditto		November 28, „

Report.

No question of law arises in this case. These men, having committed a murder within the jurisdiction of the British Courts, have been properly tried and condemned to death.

It appears to us, however, to be clear that they were given up by the French officer under a misconception. He was not aware that they were French citizens, and the analogy of the Extradition Treaty, though it does not apply, cannot be ignored.

In these circumstances, we think that it would be proper, provided that satisfactory assurances are given by the French Government that these men will be put on their trial for the murder, to accede to the demand that they should be delivered over to the French authorities. This course would be in accordance with the precedents cited by the French Government, and seems to us only proper from the point of view of international good feeling.

At the same time, it would be a grave miscarriage of justice if these murderers should, when handed over to the French, be tried and punished only as deserters from the French army; they should also be tried for the murder of Captain Keyes.

His Majesty's Government cannot, of course, ask the French Government to pledge itself that the decision of the English Judge should be considered as conclusive by the French Court; but we think that, before these men are given up, an assurance ought to be obtained that the trial and sentence by the English Judge will not be any bar to a prosecution in the French Courts, and that they will be put upon their trial for the crime of murder.

We think that the surrender could best be carried out under the authority of an Ordinance—which, we understand, can be readily passed—providing for their surrender to the French authorities. Any such Ordinance should, we think, recite the circumstances which point to the propriety of the surrender of these men. Without such an Ordinance, we do not see how the surrender can be legally effected.

R. B. F.
E. C.

November 29, 1901.

1901

Annex.

Memorandum by Mr. Davidson.

THE salient facts of this case are very simple, but the questions which arise on them are of considerable difficulty and delicacy.

In June last, Captain Keyes, a British officer serving in the West African Frontier Force in the British Protectorate of Northern Nigeria, was murdered by three French citizens, who, with a so-called trading caravan, had crossed the frontier from the adjoining French territory of Dahomey. These men subsequently made good their escape into French Dahomey, where, however, they were apprehended by the order of the Governor, apparently with a view to their trial by the French Courts, and while under detention were, through a misapprehension of a subordinate French official, handed over to the British authorities in Northern Nigeria without any application having been made by those authorities for their surrender, either by way of extradition or otherwise.

They were kept under arrest for a time by the British military authorities, and having been conveyed by them to Jebba, the seat of the Government of Northern Nigeria, they were handed over to the civil power, and in due course underwent their trial, and were convicted on a charge of murder committed within the jurisdiction of the Court for Northern Nigeria, by which Court they were thereupon sentenced to death and left for execution on the 4th November.

Between the date on which they were convicted and sentenced and that which had been fixed for their execution the French Government represented to that of His Majesty that the offenders had been handed over to the authorities of Northern Nigeria through an error on the part of a minor French official, whose action in the matter they entirely disavowed, that the men were French citizens, and that the provisions of the Anglo-French Extradition Treaty had not been complied with.

In these circumstances the French Government requested that the three offenders might be handed back to the authorities at Porto Novo for trial and punishment.

In the face of this representation it was obviously impossible to allow the execution to proceed, and it was accordingly postponed pending the further discussion and adjustment of the affair with the French Government.

Looking at the matter from the French point of view, it can scarcely be denied that there is considerable force in their representations.

It is now established beyond reasonable doubt that the men are French citizens, and it is clear, having regard to the special reservation in the Anglo-French Treaty of Extradition, and to the existing practice between the two countries with reference to the non-surrender of nationals, that, with knowledge of the facts of the case, the French Government neither would have surrendered, nor could have been reasonably expected to surrender under the Treaty, or by some substituted process of extradition of a less formal and regular kind, three persons who were French citizens.

The surrender did not, however, as a matter of fact, take place under the Treaty and Act, with the provisions of which there was no attempt to comply.

According to our view, indeed, the Act is not of application in the case of Protectorates which are not part of the British dominions within its meaning, though this involves merely a question of the construction of a municipal enactment with which the French Government are not concerned, and cannot be supposed to be conversant.

Whether the surrender took place under the Treaty or outside of the Treaty, the French objection to it on the ground that the men were French citizens is equally strong and equally logical—in the former case it would have been made in absolute contravention of the terms of the Treaty, in the latter it would have been contrary to the general principle enunciated in the Treaty and accepted by both nations.

The request, therefore, of the French Government that these men should be handed back to the authorities of Dahomey on the ground that they were surrendered by a minor French official under a grave misconception of his powers, and in derogation of the principle adverted to, is in itself far from unreasonable.

On the other hand, the matter has to be regarded from other aspects—those of British policy and of English law. In this connexion it is to be observed that the offenders were not brought within the jurisdiction of the Northern Nigerian Courts in consequence of any demand or request made by the British authorities.

They came within that jurisdiction through the voluntary—if misconceived—action of a French official, for which no British authority was even indirectly responsible. Having been found within the jurisdiction, they were thereupon arrested, committed for trial, tried, and convicted in due course of law, and it was, unfortunately, not until after the sentence had been actually pronounced that any representation from the Government of the French Republic reached His Majesty's Government on the subject.

It is not suggested, and could not, I think, be seriously maintained, that any grounds of law exist on which this verdict could be successfully impeached.

An appeal lies only to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and in a criminal case must be preceded by an application for special leave to appeal. It is highly improbable that if such application were made on behalf of the prisoners (and it is still open to them to make it if they think fit), the Judicial Committee would grant it, and no other means of obtaining a revision or reconsideration of the verdict lie open through the Courts of Law.

Of executive methods of revision there are, of course "pardon" and "commutation"; either of these forms of exercise of the King's prerogative would, it is submitted, be most unsuitable in this case. Moreover, neither would satisfy French requirements.

If the men were pardoned, the result would be to outrage the feelings of the population, and more especially of the coloured inhabitants, of Northern Nigeria, and to set free, nominally without a stain on their characters, these three malefactors. If the remainder of their sentences were commuted, the conviction would, of course, stand against them, but they would have received a punishment grotesquely inadequate to the offence.

In either event they could not be handed over to the French authorities, as, on receipt of their pardon or commutation, they would be free to go where they listed (which would probably not be in the direction of Porto Novo or other French territory), and if the British authorities attempted to arrest them for the purpose of handing them over to France, they could immediately sue out a writ of habeas corpus. Moreover, it is extremely probable that even if they came, or were inveigled into French jurisdiction, the maxim "nemo debet bis vexari pro eodem delicto" would be applied, and that their former trial and pardon in the one case, and their former trial and conviction in the other, would operate as the French equivalent of an absolute plea in bar.

One other suggestion remains to be considered, and that is the suggestion of special legislation by Protectorate Ordinance to meet the case. Mr. Bertram Cox tells me that it is undoubtedly within the powers of the Protectorate Constitution to pass such an Ordinance as would be required for this purpose. The preamble to the Ordinance would set out the special circumstances of the trial and conviction, and the Ordinance itself would take power, notwithstanding those proceedings, for the conveyance in custody and subsequent handing over to the French authorities of the prisoners.

This seems, and no doubt is, in the abstract, a sufficiently high-handed and objectionable line of action; but the French request, if it is to be met at all, can only be met by resort to some rather desperate expedient, and perhaps all that can be said in favour of this particular suggestion is that it is possibly rather less objectionable than the others.

There only remains the alternative of courteously refusing the French request, and explaining the grounds which, to the regret of His Majesty's Government, render it impossible to comply with it. If this course be adopted, we shall, at any rate, be able to explain that in the special circumstances the sentence of death has been commuted to one of penal servitude for a considerable term, since in any case the prisoners, having been once respited, cannot consistently, with the observance of the ordinary humane practice in such matters, subsequently be executed.

Looking at the case in its purely legal aspect, this, as it appears to me, is the only satisfactory way of dealing with it. I believe also that it is the only way that will not create great dissatisfaction and distrust in the Protectorate, and injuriously affect British prestige in the eyes of the inhabitants.

It will, no doubt, not be acceptable to French susceptibilities, and should this course be adopted, the pill will require careful gilding before it is "exhibited."

(Signed) W. E. DAVIDSON.

Foreign Office,
November 26, 1901.

GENERAL.

No. 20 A. [Colonial Office.]

[February 8, 1901.]

Attorney-General to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, February 8, 1901.

Sir,

I WAS honoured with your commands signified in Sir M. F. Ommanney's letter of the 1st instant stating that he was directed by you to request my consideration of certain questions which had arisen in consequence of the demise of the Crown.

Appointments, Commissions, &c.: As to lapsing of on demise of Crown.

That by the Imperial Act of Parliament 1, William IV, cap. 4, sec. 2, it was provided that no patent, commission, warrant, or other authority for the exercise of any office or employment, civil or military, within any of His Majesty's plantations or possessions abroad, determinable at the pleasure of His Majesty, or of any of His Majesty's heirs and successors, should by reason of any future demise of the Crown be vacated or become void until the expiration of eighteen calendar months next after any such demise of the Crown as aforesaid. That it was presumed that under the provisions of that section existing Letters Patent, Commissions, Instructions, and other instruments in force in the Colonies at the death of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria were continued in operation, and that the term "plantations" in that section might be taken as meaning Colonies, although the word as used at the date of the Act might possibly have been more properly confined to the American possessions of the Crown (see Sir George Cornewall Lewis's Essay on the Government of Dependencies, edited by Mr. C. P. Lucas, p. 174).

1901

That it appeared, however, to be a matter of considerable doubt whether Protectorates, which were technically foreign countries in which His Majesty exercised jurisdiction under the Powers conferred by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," could be regarded as plantations or possessions, and that it would be a question for my consideration whether the Orders of Her late Majesty in Council providing for the government of Protectorates, and the Commissions issued to High Commissioners and other officers administering the government of Protectorates, had not lapsed as and from the 22nd ultimo.

That, in any case, however, it would seem that at the end of eighteen months documents covered by the section above referred to would come to an end and have to be renewed unless provision was made to the contrary. That such documents were in fact renewed in 1838 on the death of King William IV.

That the instruments in use in the Colonies were Letters Patent, Instructions to Governors and Officers administering the Government, Commissions appointing Governors and Lieutenant-Governors, dormant Commissions providing for succession to the Government on the death, absence, or incapacity of a Governor, Warrants for the appointment of Judges; and Warrants for the appointment of Legislative and Executive Councillors. That it was also probably the case that certain Attorneys-General, Colonial Secretaries, Queen's Counsel, &c., held office in the Colonies under the authority of Warrants from the Crown.

That copies of all the existing Letters Patent, Instructions, and Commissions at present in force, together with specimens of Warrants for the appointment of Judges, &c., and of Executive and Legislative Councillors and of Queen's Counsel, were forwarded for my information.

That at the time of the passing of the Act of William IV it was customary whenever a new Governor was appointed to issue fresh Letters Patent reconstituting the Government of the Colony. That the copy of the Commission dated the 20th August, 1872, appointing Sir Henry Barkly Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, and the copy of the Letters Patent dated the 10th March, 1874, appointing Mr. Cairns to be Governor of Trinidad, which were also inclosed, would show the manner in which in those Colonies, and until recent times, it was customary to appoint a Governor. That the more modern practice, however, had been to issue general Letters Patent providing for the constitution of the Colony and giving power to appoint a Governor by Commission under the Royal Sign Manual and Signet, and that instructions were issued to the officer administering the Government for the time being under the authority given by the standing Letters Patent. That you entertained some doubt whether it might not be argued that the Letters Patent in the more modern form might be considered as not determining on the demise of the Crown, and as being, at all events in some cases, altogether outside the provisions of the Act of 1 William IV., cap. 4, sec. 2, inasmuch as the Letters Patent themselves did not confer authority on a Governor for the exercise of his office, but merely provided that there should be a Governor, who obtained authority to exercise the functions of a Colonial Governor from his Commission. But that in certain cases, as, for instance, in the case of Cape Colony, under Letters Patent dated the 26th February, 1877, and of Newfoundland, under Letters Patent dated the 28th March, 1876, in the absence of a Governor and in the event of there being no Lieutenant-Governor, the administration of the Government devolved upon certain other officers named in the Letters Patent, and that, therefore, the Letters Patent, in those cases, and in similar cases, might be said to be Letters Patent for the exercise of an office.

That in the case of Protectorates such as Northern and Southern Nigeria, Southern Rhodesia, Barotsiland, North-Western Rhodesia, &c., Letters Patent were not issued, but that a Constitution was established by Order in Council, under the provisions of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act. That reference to such Orders in Council would show that, with the exception that the instrument was an Order in Council and not Letters Patent, substantially the same provisions were made as in the case of a Crown Colony.

That it would, therefore, be a question for my consideration whether, in the event of Letters Patent having to be renewed owing to the demise of the Crown, Orders in Council of the kind specified were, or were not, preserved in force by the Statute of William IV, and might not also have to be renewed. That it was desired, if possible, to avoid the inconvenience of issuing fresh Letters Patent, Instructions, Commissions, Warrants, and Orders in Council in every Colony and Protectorate. That it would be necessary to consolidate many of them before re-issuing them, and that the consolidation might in some cases, such as that of Malta and Mauritius, involve the raising of political questions, which it was desired, if possible, to avoid. It had, therefore, been suggested that a short instrument might be drawn up, either in the form of Letters Patent or Order in Council for Colonies and Protectorates respectively, which might provide that all existing Letters Patent, Instructions, Commissions, Warrants, and other documents, which were in force during the reign of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, and which would at the expiration of eighteen months from the demise of the Crown become void, should be continued and remain in operation in all respects as though no demise of the Crown had taken place; and that you would be glad to be advised whether I thought that that course could be adopted.

That Sir M. Ommanney was to request me to take the above matters into my consideration and to advise you—

(1.) Whether the Orders in Council or Commissions relating to the government of Protectorates lapsed on the demise of the Crown, and, if so, whether the Royal Proclamation of the 23rd ultimo renewed their operation?

(2.) Whether any, and, if so, which, of the above-mentioned Letters Patent, Instructions, Commissions, and Warrants had, notwithstanding the Act of William IV, become void owing to the demise of the Crown?

(3.) If not whether any, and, if so, which of the said instruments would become void at the expiration of eighteen months after the demise of the Crown?

(4.) Whether the Royal Proclamation of the 23rd ultimo would of itself be sufficient to preserve the operation of any, or all of the said instruments, and, if not, what means should be adopted to continue the said instruments in operation. Could their operation be perserved—

(a.) By legislation in Colonies or Protectorates?

(b.) By Letters Patent in the case of Colonies, and Orders in Council in the case of Protectorates providing that notwithstanding the demise of the Crown those instruments should continue in operation?

(5.) Whether Letters Patent could be issued providing generally that in all Colonies and Protectorates that result should follow, or (6.) Whether such a general provision could only be effected by an Act of the Imperial Parliament?

(7.) Whether it was desirable that such an Act of Parliament should be passed?

(8.) Generally.

I have taken the matters into my consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. The Orders in Council relating to Protectorates did not lapse on the demise of the Crown. These Orders in Council are legislative Acts by the proper authority providing for the government of Protectorates, and do not fall within the principle by which offices were vacated on the demise of the Crown.

Commissions relating to Protectorates did lapse on the demise of the Crown; they fall within the general principle as to offices, and are not covered by either the Statute of Anne or the 1st William IV. Of course Military Commissions are continued by the 7th William IV and 1st Victoria, cap. 31.

2. Letters Patent providing for the Constitution of a Colony and giving power to appoint a Governor by Commission, as also the instructions issued generally to any person holding office, do not become void owing to the demise of the Crown even in cases in which the Letters Patent may provide for the devolution, in the absence of the Governor of the Administration, upon the holders of other offices named in the Letters Patent. Such Letters Patent and instructions are in the nature of general provisions for the government of the Colony by the competent authority.

Appointments under Commissions and Warrants would have become void owing to the demise of the Crown where they relate to the Government of Colonies, were it not for the provisions of the Statute of Anne and 1 William IV, cap. 4. Such Commissions appoint a person named to an office, the Warrants authorise the appointment by some other form, such as Letters Patent under the Seal of the Colony, or simple notification by the Governor. It appears to me that all such appointments, whether made directly by the Commission or by some other instrument under the authority of the Warrant, would determine on the demise of the Crown but for the statutes above referred to. The officials hold office under the Crown and the general principle applies.

3. Offices held in the Colonies under Commissions, or the authority of Warrants, will become void at the expiration of eighteen months after the demise of the Crown and must be renewed.

4. The Royal Proclamation of the 23rd ultimo has no effect in preserving the operation of any of these instruments. It relates merely to the period during which offices continue to be held by virtue of the 6th Anne and the 1st William IV, and directs the officials to discharge their duties during such periods unless the Crown sooner determine their offices.

(a.) Their operation could not be properly preserved by legislation in Colonies or Protectorates. The Governor would be a party to such legislation, and, in Protectorates, must derive his authority from the Crown, while in the case of Colonies it would be a grave departure from constitutional usage to allow a local Act of Parliament passed during the eighteen months' continuance in office to affect the tenure of the Governor.

(b.) For the reasons given in answering questions 1 and 2, this course appears to me to be unnecessary.

5. I do not think that such Letters Patent should be issued. It would be almost impossible in such Letters Patent to enumerate the names of all the officials, and a mere general provision would not, in my opinion, be expedient.

6. Such a general provision could only be effected by an Act of the Imperial Parliament.

7. It appears to me desirable that such an Act of Parliament should be passed unless there are considerations of policy which render this inexpedient.

For the case of Protectorates legislation is necessary unless an Order in Council providing specially for each Protectorate should be passed.

In the case of Colonies and the United Kingdom, it may be desirable to provide that the demise of the Crown shall not affect the tenure of offices. Such legislation might be confined to the present reign, or might be general, as may be deemed most expedient.

I have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

No. 21.

[March 12, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, March 7, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Harbour Dues in Guernsey. Position of L. & S. W. and G. W. Railways.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list with regard to a Petition of the States of the Island of Guernsey, praying for His Majesty's sanction and ratification of a reduction of harbour dues in respect of vessels belonging to the London and South-Western Railway and Great Western Railway Companies.

By an Order in Council of the 5th July, 1865, an alteration of the tariff of dues payable by vessels entering the harbours of the island was sanctioned by repealing the 3rd Article of the Tariff of Dues sanctioned by the Order in Council of the 17th December, 1860, by substituting for it the provisions set forth in the Schedule (A) annexed to the said Order, and at the same time by authorizing the levying of the dues set forth in the said Schedule in lieu of the Article so repealed.

Under Article 2 of the said Schedule every vessel of sixty or more tons entering one of the harbours of the island and transacting business there without, however, staying a full tide, is chargeable with a duty of 8*d*. per ton—the same to include under certain conditions the return voyage to Guernsey.

The General Managers of the two railways above mentioned have, however, addressed the President of the States of the island, drawing attention on behalf of their respective Companies to the very onerous nature of the dues and charges imposed by the harbour authorities at Guernsey, and asking for a modification of the present tolls.

As the result of this application, the States have petitioned the Crown to sanction in favour of vessels belonging to the London and South-Western Railway Company and Great Western Railway Company doing a regular service with the island a reduction from 8*d*. to 4*d*. per ton of the said dues; so long as the service in return for which it is proposed to reduce them is effectively maintained.

Lord Lansdowne, having been requested to favour the Lord President of the Council with any observations which his Lordship might desire to offer upon the Petition, informed His Grace that it would be contrary to the provisions of many existing Treaties of Commerce and Navigation to remit the harbour dues in favour of British vessels unless such remission were in similar circumstances equally extended to vessels of the countries with which those Treaties had been concluded; and that the practice in the United Kingdom has been for many years not to discriminate in this respect between British and foreign vessels.

As the Lord President understands the Petition, however, the proposal of the States of Guernsey is not to discriminate between British and foreign vessels, but between the vessels of the London and South-Western and Great Western Railway Companies, and all other vessels British and foreign. The arrangement seems to His Grace to be in the nature of a subsidy in respect of services rendered, and he presumes that from the point of view of the Treaty obligations of Great Britain to foreign States there would be no objection to a direct subsidy.

The Parliamentary papers which accompany this letter contain samples of the various clauses under which national treatment is secured by international convention to the shipping of certain foreign countries.

There does not appear to be any Treaty stipulation which would prevent the grant of a subsidy to a particular line or lines of vessels for special services without the simultaneous extension of the same advantage to foreign ships similarly engaged; but Lord Lansdowne is disposed to think that exemption from, or abatement of, harbour or port dues, though the effect of such exemption or abatement may, in a pecuniary sense, be the same as that of a subsidy, is in essence widely different.

As the point raised by the Petition of the States of Guernsey involves a question of principle of great importance, I am to request that you will be good enough to take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether the prayer of the Petition can properly be granted, regard being had to Treaty obligations and to the established practice of His Majesty's Government in such matters.

His Lordship will also be glad to receive any observations of a general nature which you may have to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) MARTIN GOSSELIN.

List of Papers.

Privy Council Office	January 28, 1901.
To ditto	February 4, ,,
Privy Council Office	February 11, ,,
Parliamentary Paper, No. 13, Commercial (1887); and
,, ,, No. 9, Commercial (1888).
Guernsey Orders in Council—
Volume 1, Livraison 8.
,, ,, 9.
,, ,, 10.

Report.

I am of opinion that the prayer of the Petition might be granted without infringing Treaty obligations.

The remission is proposed, not in favour of British vessels, but in favour of the vessels of two particular Companies which render special services.

It may, however, deserve consideration whether it would not be better, as a matter of policy and to avoid possible controversy, that the proposed indulgence should, if it can be so arranged without inconvenience, take the form of an annual subsidy of an amount which would be equivalent, or nearly so, to the proposed remission.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Royal Courts of Justice,
March 12, 1901.

ITALY.

No. 22.

[March 12, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, March 5, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Proposed marriage of A. G. White, divorced at Stuttgart.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the proposed marriage of Mr. A. G. White, a British subject, who was divorced from his first wife at Stuttgart in 1891.

Mr. White wishes to marry at Naples, in accordance with the lex loci, a lady of Italian nationality, and, as he is a British subject, it is for that purpose necessary that he should produce to the Italian civil authorities a certificate (known as "nulla ostá") to the effect that in contemplation of English law no impediment exists to his proposed marriage.

Application for such a certificate has accordingly been made to Consul Neville Rolfe, who, before issuing it, desires to be assured that Mr. White's previous marriage would be held by the Tribunals of this country to have been legally dissolved by the decree of the Stuttgart Court.

The circumstances with regard to Mr. White's first marriage are as follows:—

He was married in 1888 at Her Majesty's Consulate at Naples to Henrietta Lewis, a British subject. In September 1889 they went to reside at Stuttgart. In 1891 the wife obtained from the Court in that city a decree of divorce against her husband for adultery. She made no charge of cruelty or desertion.

An extract (H) from the decree is inclosed, from which it will be seen that the Court declared its competence to grant the divorce on the ground that the husband was domiciled at Stuttgart, not only before, but also at the date when, the proceedings were commenced.

According to the law of Würtemberg, adultery on the husband's part, unaccompanied by desertion or cruelty, is a sufficient ground for divorce.

Mr. White believes his former wife to be still living, but states that he has no means of ascertaining the fact.

I am to request that you will be so good as to take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether the decree of divorce pronounced by the Stuttgart Court between Mr. A. G. White and his wife Henrietta (née Lewis) would be recognized by the Tribunals of this country as valid in contemplation of English law, and with any general observations which you may wish to offer on the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.) Mr. Rolfe	.. ..	(No. 40)	December 21, 1900.
(B.) To ditto	.. ..	(No. 1)	January 3, 1901.
(C.) Mr. Rolfe	.. ..	(No. 6)	January 7, "
(D.) To ditto	.. ..	(No. 4)	January 21, "
(E.) Mr. Rolfe	.. ..	(No. 10)	January 25, "
(F.) To ditto	.. ..	(No. 7)	February 7, "
(G.) Mr. Rolfe	.. ..	(No. 11)	February 22, "
(H.) Translation of extract from decree of Stuttgart Court.

Report.

It is quite clear that the divorce would be recognized as good by English law if Mr. A. G. White had acquired a domicile in the country where the decree was pronounced.

But mere residence from 1889 to 1891 would not necessarily constitute the acquisition of a domicile. For this purpose he must have settled at Stuttgart with the intention of making it his home. Mere residence, even for much longer than two or three years, does not confer a new domicile.

The only question in the case is one of fact—as to whether a Stuttgart domicile had been acquired.

I am by no means satisfied that the passage quoted from the Judgment of the Stuttgart Court (Document H) means that a domicile, in the proper sense of the term, had been acquired there. In some foreign countries divorces have been granted after a certain period of mere residence there. An Englishman residing abroad does not acquire a new domicile at every place at which he resides for two or three years.

If the Consul is satisfied that a domicile as above explained had been acquired at Stuttgart he may grant the certificate, but I cannot advise that it should be granted merely on the present materials.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Royal Courts of Justice,
March 12, 1901.

Annex.

Extract from the Decree of the Stuttgart Court.

Gründe.

DIE Beständigkeit des angerufenen Gerichts ist nach § 568, abs. 1, § 13 und § 235, 2, Zift. 2 der L.P.O. gegeben, da der Beklagte Ehemann ~~hier~~ seinen Wohnsitz zu nommen und denselben ausweislich der Urkunde über die Zustellung der Klage, jedenfalls noch zur Zeit der Klagerhebung, beibehalten hatte.

(Translation.)

Grounds for Judgment.

THE competence of the Court trying the case is established by § 568, paragraph 1, and § 13 and § 235, paragraph 2, No.2, of the L.P.O., since the husband, who is the defendant, has made his domicile here, and, as shown by the document regarding the notification of the action, still preserved it, at any rate, at the time when the action was brought.

1901

No. 23.

[May 24, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Domicil of A. G. White, divorced at Stuttgart.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 22, 1901.

WITH reference to the Attorney-General's Report of the 12th March last, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, a further despatch from Mr. Rolfe, His Majesty's Consul at Naples, respecting the domicil of Mr. A. G. White at the time of his divorce.

Mr. Rolfe incloses an affidavit by Mr. White with five exhibits, to which translations of the material documents have been annexed.

I am to request that you will be so good as to take these papers into your consideration, and to furnish Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether they afford satisfactory evidence of Mr. White having acquired a bonâ fide domicil in Stuttgart at the time of the institution of the divorce proceedings.

The papers previously sent to you are returned for convenience of reference.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

Consul Rolfe, No. 14, May 13, 1901.
Papers previously referred.

Report.

We have perused the further papers, and ~~are~~ of opinion that they do not afford satisfactory evidence of Mr. White having acquired a domicil at Stuttgart at the time of the divorce proceedings. They merely show residence there, which does not confer a domicil for the purpose of dissolution of marriage.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
May 24, 1901.

JAPAN.

No. 24

[November 19, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Municipal Rates in former foreign Settlement at Yokohama.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 11, 1901.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, a despatch from His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tôkiô (Paper A) in regard to the claim of some foreign firms residing in the former foreign Settlement at Yokohama to exemption from the payment of a local municipal rate. The complainants base their claim to exemption from this rate not so much on the provisions of Article XVIII of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty of 1894 (Paper B) as on the following grounds:—

By the Agreement concluded on the 19th December, 1864, called the Conventional Memorandum (p. 35 of "Treaties on Trade, &c.," with Japan, marked C) the Japanese Government undertook, in view of the high rentals paid by all foreign leaseholders, to hand over to a municipal fund controlled by the leaseholders and to be used for municipal objects by the leaseholders themeslves, a deduction of 20 per cent. of the yearly rent paid by all lands leased to foreigners.

In 1871 the control of municipal affairs in the foreign Settlement was taken over by the Japanese Government (p. 1050 of "Treaties and Conventions," marked D): the 20 per cent. of the rents then ceased to be handed over to the leaseholders' municipal fund and was transferred by the Japanese Government to its local office to be used for the municipal expenses of the foreign Settlement.

During this time all the municipal objects of the foreign Settlement were supposed to be met out of the 20 per cent. of the rents plus the income derived from the sales of land to foreigners; nor was any additional tax ever levied.

But when foreign jurisdiction in Japan was abolished in 1899, the control of the foreign Settlement was transferred by the Central Government to a native Municipal Body, the Settlement was incorporated by Article XVIII of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty (Paper B), in the Japanese Commune, and all special rights enjoyed up to that time by British subjects were relinquished.

The Municipal Council of Yokohama now seeks to include among those on whom municipal taxes are levied the foreign residents in the former foreign Settlement, and this is objected to by them on the ground that when the Japanese authorities promised to devote 20 per cent. of the land rents to the municipal purposes of the Settlement, they formally undertook to relieve the Settlement from municipal charges from which foreigners were to be exempted "in view of the high rental paid by foreigners (see Conventional Memorandum, Paper C) thus implying that the 20 per cent. in question was a substitute for such municipal charges.

In September 1899, the Japanese Government proposed to levy upon property held by British subjects in the foreign Settlement in Japan under perpetual leases various charges including local taxation on land or buildings.

The question was referred to the Law Officers of the Crown, who reported on the 10th April, 1900 (Paper E), that Article XVIII of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty of 1894 protects the perpetual leasebolder from local rates in respect of the buildings on their land, and that if any doubt could be entertained on the point, it would be removed by the terms of the French Treaty of the 4th August, 1896, and of the note to the German Treaty of the 4th April, 1896, and the right of British subjects to equality of treatment.

His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tôkiô considers, however, that the imposition of municipal rates based on the national income and business taxes and not levied on perpetual leasehold property as such, is of a different character from a local rate levied on land and buildings.

The new tax is not leviable on the leaseholders quâ leaseholders but as persons or firms living within a Japanese commune or engaged in carrying on business therein, who are already liable to the Japanese Business Tax and Income Tax Law, and who may or may not be leaseholders.

As, however, the 20 per cent. deduction from the ground rents paid by land renters which, according to the terms of the Conventional Memorandum of 1864, was to be devoted to municipal purposes, continued to be so applied until 1899, when the new Treaties came into force, Mr. Whitehead suggests that it would, therefore, seem equitable that the ground rents or perpetual leasehold property should be reduced by the 20 per cent. formerly allotted to municipal expenses, if foreign residents in the former Settlements are subjected to full local rates. This view was held by Sir E. Satow, formerly His Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô (Paper F).

Article XX of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty of 1899, however, provides that "the present Treaty shall be substituted in place of the Conventions of the 14th October, 1854, of the 25th June, 1866, of the 26th August, 1858, and all arrangements, Agreements, subsidiary thereto, and that such arrangements, Agreements, shall cease to be binding.

It might possibly be argued that the Conventional Memorandum of 1864 and the Agreement of 1871 referring to the foreign Settlements are Agreements subsidiary to the Treaty of 1858 (see p. 11 of "Treaties on Trade, &c.," marked C), under which British subjects first obtained the right to reside in certain places in Japan.

1901

In that case the complainants' case would fall to the ground in so far as it is based on those Agreements.

I am to request that you will take the papers submitted herewith into your consideration and that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether the British residents in the former Settlements can claim exemption from this municipal rate under Article XVIII of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty, or under the French Treaty, or the note to the German Treaty.

2. If not, as to whether the Conventional Memorandum and the Agreement of 1871 can still be considered in force, and whether, in that case, a claim for exemption from municipal rates can be based on those Agreements.

3. If not, whether a representation might be made to the Japanese Government that they ought in equity to reduce the ground rents of the lands held by foreigners by 20 per cent., the amount which was contributed until 1899, out of such ground rents to municipal purposes.

His Lordship will also be glad to receive any observations of a general character which you may be good enough to offer on the subject of this reference.

I have, &c.

(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Mr. Whitehead	(No. 73)	July 2, 1901.
(B.)	Anglo-Japanese Treaty of 1894.
(C.)	Book of Treaties, &c., with Japan.
(D.)	Treaties and Conventions, p. 1050.
(E.)	Law Officers' Report [No. 34, p. 99 of Volume.]		April 10, 1900.
(F.)	Sir E. Satow	(No. 175)	October 28, 1899.

Report.

1. In our opinion neither Article XVIII nor the Treaties referred to can be relied upon to exempt British residents in the former Settlement from the taxes or rates in question. These latter are not imposed in respect of the subject-matter of the leases, and are payable alike by all residents whether leaseholders or not.

2. We do not think that the Conventional Memorandum of 1864 and the Agreement of 1871 can still be considered as technically in force. The Conventional Memorandum of 1864 was superseded by the Agreement of 1871, and the arrangement made by the Treaty of 1894 that the local authorities should assume all municipal duties in respect of the Settlement is inconsistent with the idea that these duties are to be discharged by the officer created under the Agreement of 1871.

But we think that these documents give rise to a very strong claim for relief from the rent to the extent of 20 per cent. That amount was from 1864 to 1871 returned to the leaseholders to enable them to relieve the Japanese authorities from the burthen of roads, drainage, &c., and after 1871 was paid to the new official who, in his turn, relieved the leaseholders of this burthen. The rent was a high one, the Japanese authorities before 1864 undertaking this burthen, and it appears to us clear that in all fairness, the full rent should not now be exacted when a tax is imposed upon the residents in the Settlement for, among others, the very purposes to which the 20 per cent. deduction was applicable.

3. We think that such a representation may properly be made on the grounds indicated in the answer above to question 2.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
November 19, 1901.

MEXICO.

No. 24 A. [Colonial Office.]

[January 30, 1901.]

The Attorney-General to Colonial Office.

Sir,

Royal Courts of Justice, January 30, 1901.

Extradition of Military Deserters between Mexico and British Honduras.

I WAS honoured with your commands, signified in Mr. Bertram Cox's letter of the 4th instant, stating that, with reference to the Law Officers' Report of the 18th October last on the subject of the extradition of military and naval deserters who had escaped from Mexico into British Honduras, he was directed by you to inform me that upon consideration it appeared desirable that provision should be made by an agreement between Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the Colony of British Honduras and the Government of Mexico for the reciprocal surrender of military and naval deserters as such, irrespective of the question whether or not they had committed an offence extraditable under the present Treaty.

That in this connection Mr. Bertram Cox was to inclose, for my information, an extract from a Memorandum prepared in the Foreign Office, and in especial he was to refer me to a Report of the Law Officers, dated the 23rd November, 1893, with reference to a proposal for a similar agreement between the Governments of the Straits Settlements and of Netherlands India. That in that Report the opinion was expressed that no reciprocal arrangement for the arrest and surrender of military and naval deserters could be entered into on behalf of Her Majesty without further legislation, that neither "The Foreign Deserters Act, 1852," nor the Extradition Act of 1870 applied to the case suggested, and that statutory authority to enter into the proposed arrangement would be necessary.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was also to refer me to the Law Officers' opinion of the 8th June, 1883, regarding an agreement between the English General in command of the Fortress of Gibraltar, who was also Governor, and as such had full power to legislate for Gibraltar and the Spanish General at Algeciras. That the agreement in question was still in force and was frequently acted upon. That it had, however, been suggested that the later Law Officers' opinion of 1893 implied that Imperial legislation was required to validate a Convention for the surrender of military deserters, and he was therefore to request that I would take the papers into my consideration and advise:—

(a.) Whether there was anything in section 238 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," the Extradition Acts, or generally in any Imperial Statute to prevent Her Majesty's Government from entering on behalf of the Colony of British Honduras into an arrangement with the Government of Mexico for the reciprocal surrender under proper conditions of military and naval deserters.

(b.) Whether, assuming that the answer to the first question was in the negative, a Colonial Ordinance would be sufficient to provide for the carrying out of such an arrangement.

In obedience to your commands I have taken the paper into my consideration, and have the honour to

Report—

(a.) That, in my opinion, His Majesty's Government cannot, on behalf of the Colony of British Honduras, enter into the suggested arrangement with the Government of Mexico for the reciprocal surrender of naval and military deserters without fresh legislation. The right of His Majesty's Government to enforce extradition is at present derived from "The Extradition Act, 1870," and it would require statutory authority from the Imperial Parliament, or the local Legislature, to bring into effect any arrangement with reference to naval and military deserters who are not included in the Extradition Act.

(b.) A Colonial Ordinance would be sufficient for the purpose. An Act of the local Legislature in British Honduras is all that is wanted to confer upon the Executive there the requisite authority. Indeed the 18th section of "The Extradition Act, 1870," contemplates and provides for the case of such local enactments for extradition. My view on this point is in accordance with the opinion of the Law Officers of the 8th June, 1883. The opinion of the Law Officers of the 23rd November, 1893, merely says that for such extradition arrangements legislative authority is wanted, a proposition with which I entirely concur. I do not think that that opinion should be read as meaning that the authority of the Imperial Parliament is wanted.

1901.

The Hong Kong Ordinance of the 2nd September, 1870, is an instance of local legislation for this purpose, and I think that this course should be followed in the present case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

NETHERLANDS.

No. 25.

[July 22, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, July 15, 1901.

Gentlemen,

John Godden's Claim relative to Phosphate of lime in Aruba, &c.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith the papers noted in the annexed list, relating to the complaint of Mr. John Godden against the action of the Netherland Colonial authorities of the Islands of Curaçoa and Aruba.

This case has been referred to successive Law Officers of the Crown on four previous occasions, and has formed the subject of four separate Reports. The first is that of the 28th April, 1886, signed by Sir Charles Russell and Sir Horace Davey, and also by Sir J. Parker Deane.

The second and third are dated the 30th March, 1887, and the 29th February, 1888, respectively, and are both signed by Sir R. E. Webster and Sir E. Clarke.

The fourth is dated the 11th November, 1899, and signed by Sir R. E. Webster and Sir R. Finlay. To this Report is prefixed the letter of reference from this Office of the 18th October of that year, containing a succinct history of the case.

Mr. Godden now submits, in support of his claim, an opinion by Mr. H. de Ranitz, of the Dutch Bar, and begs for a reconsideration of his case.

I am to request that you will be good enough to take these papers into consideration, and that you will inform Lord Lansdowne whether their perusal leads you to think that the views expressed by the then Law Officers in their Report of the 11th November, 1899, require modification or amplification to any, and, if so, to what, extent.

I have, &c.
(Signed) MARTIN GOSSELIN.

List of Papers.

Law Officers and Sir J. Deane	April 28, 1886.
Law Officers	March 30, 1887.
" "	February 29, 1888.
" "	November 11, 1899.
Mr. Godden	June 28, 1901.

Report.

We do not think the situation is altered by the further materials which Mr. Godden has now laid before His Majesty's Government. On the whole the opinion of M. de Ranitz, so far as it is possible to follow it without the numerous documents to which he refers, appears to confirm the view taken in the Report of the Law Officers of the 11th November, 1899, as to the legal right to the phosphate of lime, and the claim of Mr. Godden appears to be mainly rested on his title to equitable consideration as having discovered the phosphate of lime. We cannot advise His Majesty's Government to take any further action in the matter.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 22, 1901.

PACIFIC ISLANDS.

No. 25 A.

[Colonial Office.]

[January 7, 1901.]

Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, January 7, 1901.

Sir,

Cook Islands: proposed incorporation in New Zealand.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. H. Bertram Cox' letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by you to inform us that Her Majesty's Government had approved of the Cook group and certain other islands in the Western Pacific being incorporated in New Zealand, and that from the accompanying copy of a telegram from the Governor of the Colony we should observe that the Colonial Legislature had assented to the requisite extension of boundaries, and that the Government desired that the necessary steps might be taken by the issue of an Order in Council, or Letters Patent, for such extension under the provisions of "The Colonial Boundaries Act, 1895."

That the existing boundaries of New Zealand, as defined by 26 Vict., cap. 23, section 2, comprised all territories, islands, and countries lying between the 162nd degree of east longitude and the 173rd degree of west longitude, and between the 33rd and 55th parallels of south latitude; and that it was now desired to include within the boundaries of the Colony all the islands and territories within an area defined as follows:—

From a position south latitude 23°, west longitude 156°, due north to south latitude 8°, west longitude 156°, thence due west to south latitude 8°, west longitude 164°, thence due west to south latitude 17°, west longitude 170°, thence due south to south latitude 23°, west longitude 170°, and finally due east to starting-point south latitude 23°, west longitude 156°. That the present boundaries and the proposed addition were indicated by blue and red pencil lines on the accompanying chart.

That in the Law Officers' Report of the 31st October, 1896, regarding the proposed annexation of Norfolk Island to the Colony of New South Wales, it was stated that "the general powers of Her Majesty to alter the boundaries of Colonies referred to in 'The Colonial Boundaries Act, 1895,' could not be relied on to justify the annexation even with the consent of the Colony. The boundaries of New South Wales rest on a statutory basis. Even if the annexation of Norfolk Island could be deemed a question of boundary, we do not think that, in view of the Statute 18 and 19 Vict., cap. 54, it could be safely effected by Order in Council."

1901

That it was not clear whether that opinion merely intended to imply that the power conferred by the Colonial Boundaries Act could not override the special provision made for the Government of Norfolk Island by 18 and 19 Vict., cap. 54, or generally, that the powers conferred by the Colonial Boundaries Act to vary the boundaries of a self-governing Colony, with the consent of its Legislature, could not be exercised in cases where the boundaries of the Colony had been fixed by Imperial Statute.

That in the present case there had been no Imperial legislation in regard to Cook Islands, which had only recently been included in Her Majesty's dominions, but that the boundaries of New Zealand rested on a statutory basis, viz., section 2 of the Imperial Act 26 Vict., cap. 23.

That the records of the Colonial Office showed that the Colonial Boundaries Act was laid before, and passed by, Parliament with the express object of enabling that which was now desired to be done, viz., the extension by Order in Council, or Letters Patent, of the boundaries of a Colony notwithstanding the fact that they were fixed by Imperial Statute, as was the case in regard to all the Australian Colonies referred to in the schedule to "The Colonial Boundaries Act, 1895."

That under the circumstances, Mr. Bertram Cox was to request that we would take the matter into our consideration and report whether the desired extension of the boundaries of New Zealand could be effected by Order in Council, or Letters Patent, under the provisions of "The Colonial Boundaries Act, 1895," or whether it must be done by means of Acts of the Imperial and Colonial Parliaments.

We have taken this matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

That we are of opinion that the extension of the boundaries of New Zealand, as proposed by an alteration of the longitude and latitude as fixed by the Act of 1863, can be effected by an Order in Council under the Colonial Boundaries Act of 1895.

We have &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

No. 26.

[February 4, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

(A.)

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, January 19, 1901.

Maltreatment of J. Cranstoun during rising in Hawaii in 1895: As to compensation.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to the case of Mr. J. Cranstoun, a British subject, who, during the rising in Hawaii in 1895, together with other British subjects, whose claims were referred to your predecessors at that time, and now form the subject of a separate letter, suffered arrest, detention, and deportation under the powers conferred on the Executive by the Proclamation of martial law, without having been brought to trial.

Copies of the reports furnished by the Law Officers on the cases above referred to are sent herewith for convenience of reference (Papers Z, ZA, ZB).

Mr. Cranstoun, who carried on a retail business in forage at Honolulu, was arrested in connection with the Royalist conspiracy of the 7th January of that year, although he asserts that he took no part in local politics, was detained in the common prison, under very insanitary conditions, and with insufficient food, and was eventually deported on board the steam-ship "Warrimoo" in mid-winter from the tropical climate of Hawaii to the cold climate of British Columbia without money and without suitable clothing.

Mr. Cranstoun states that he suffered in consequence severely both mentally and physically, and that, as the result of the harsh treatment to which he was subjected, his health has been seriously affected and his means of earning a livelihood prejudiced.

He therefore claims compensation. Some delay occurred in the first instance with regard to the presentation of this claim to the Government of Hawaii, as doubt was felt as to whether Mr. Cranstoun was a British subject or an American citizen, but it was eventually ascertained that his claim to British nationality was well founded, and that he had been registered as a British subject at Her Majesty's Consulate at Honolulu.

Mr. Hawes, then Her Majesty's Consul-General at that port, duly reported (Paper F) the result of his inquiries, but owing to his illness and his consequent absence from Hawaii was unable at that time to take up Mr. Cranstoun's case.

On the 9th November, 1896, however, Mr. Hawes wrote to the Hawaiian Minister for Foreign Affairs, inclosing an extract from Mr. Cranstoun's Petition (Paper A), and stating that Mr. Cranstoun had furnished him with satisfactory proofs of his British nationality. He at the same time asked to be informed of the contention of the Hawaiian Government in the matter. The Foreign Minister replied on the following day, saying that a statement of the Government's case would be prepared as soon as possible. Not having received the information promised, Mr. Hawes wrote to the Minister again on the 1st May, 1897, and received an answer to the effect that the case was in course of preparation, but that, owing to the length of time which had elapsed since Mr. Cranstoun's deportation, it was difficult to procure affidavits in support of the Government's position.

On the 29th May, 1897, a telegram (Paper I) was addressed to Mr. Hawes authorizing him to provide for the conduct of the claim put forward by Mr. Cranstoun, and to suggest to the latter gentleman that Mr. Neumann, who was counsel for the other claimants, should also take charge of his (Mr. Cranstoun's) interests. It appears, however, as the result of telegraphic inquiry subsequently made of Mr. Hoare, who was then Consul at Honolulu, that there is no record of the telegram referred to having been received, or of any action having been taken to include Mr. Cranstoun's amongst the other claims.

Mr. Hawes died on the 6th August, 1897. Mr. Hoare reported on the 16th February last (Paper K) that he had, at Mr. Cranstoun's request, recalled the attention of the Hawaiian Government to the claim, and asked to be furnished with the statement which they had previously promised. The reply of the Minister for Foreign Affairs was to the effect that the payment by the Hawaiian Government of the damages and costs awarded to Mr. Cranstoun in a suit against the Steamship Company which was instrumental in carrying out his deportation from Hawaii was regarded as a settlement of his claim against the Government.

Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington was then instructed, in a despatch of which a copy is inclosed (Paper L), to present to the United States' Government the Petition originally received from Mr. Cranstoun (Paper A), and to explain what had happened with regard to it and the actual position of the case. His Excellency was also authorized to communicate to the United States' Government copies of the correspondence which had passed between Her Majesty's Consul-General and the Hawaiian Minister for Foreign Affairs.

With regard to the contention put forward by the Hawaiian Government, Lord Pauncefote was instructed to state that Mr. Cranstoun maintains that the Judgment of the British Columbian Court was only given in respect of his illegal detention outside the territorial waters and jurisdiction of Hawaii by the owners and master of the British steam-ship "Warrimoo." The action was brought against these persons as defendants, and the Judgment was against them personally. The Hawaiian Government's action in reimbursing the defendants could not concern Mr. Cranstoun in any way, unless he agreed to accept the Judgment of the Court as affording a full settlement of his claims, not only against the "Warrimoo," but also against the Government, for what had previously occurred while he was still within Hawaiian jurisdiction.

There is no evidence of any such arrangement, and as in all other respects the claim is analogous to those already presented, Lord Pauncefote was authorized to state that Her Majesty's Government trusted that it would be dealt with in a similar manner, and to add that, after consideration of the merits of the case, they were of opinion that the compensation might reasonably be assessed at 400*l*.

1901

A representation in this sense was accordingly addressed to the United States' Government by Lord Pauncefote on the 5th May last (Paper R).

The claim was then submitted by the United States' Government, "for consideration and appropriate action," to the Government of Hawaii (the islands having in the meantime been annexed and erected into a Territory of the United States), and the latter have now addressed to the Federal Government a letter justifying the action of the Hawaiian authorities in deporting Mr. Cranstoun, on the ground that he was engaged in conspiring to overthrow the Provisional Government of those islands, and transmitting, in support of this statement, a copy of the evidence taken in the case of Mueller v. Bird, et al., in the Supreme Court of British Columbia.

This decision, which has been formally communicated by the Secretary of State to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, may, it is assumed, be looked upon as that of the United States' Government, and the question arises how far it should be accepted as final by Her Majesty's Government, or whether there is ground for any further representation in support of Mr. Cranstoun's claim.

The Hawaiian Government, in support of their contention that Mr. Cranstoun's expulsion was justified, adduce considerable evidence of a kind tending to implicate him in the revolutionary movement, and as the appreciation of that evidence is more or less a matter of opinion on which, primâ facie, the views of the Government responsible for the maintenance of law and order are entitled to prevail, there seems reason to doubt whether Her Majesty's Government would be warranted in further contesting the justice of the expulsion.

With regard to the treatment of Mr. Cranstoun on board the "Warrimoo," and his forcible detention on board that vessel, it must be borne in mind that this part of his complaint has, as shown in the earlier portion of this letter, already formed the subject-matter of an action brought in the Colonial Courts of British Columbia, and he has, in respect of this, obtained a Judgment in his favour for 1,000 dollars and costs.

The cause of action, however, in that case, arose in respect of the wrong done to Mr. Cranstoun in holding him a prisoner on board a British vessel from the time that vessel got beyond the territorial jurisdiction of Hawaii until he was landed within the jurisdiction of the British Columbia Courts at Vancouver. It did not cover the original injury, viz., the arrest, ill-treatment, and detention which was committed within the jurisdiction of the Hawaiian Courts, and in respect of which a British Columbia Court could not entertain, and did not purport to entertain, an action.

It remains, therefore, to consider whether Mr. Cranstoun's claim on account of alleged harsh treatment, undue detention, and illegal and unjustifiable action on the part of the Hawaiian authorities, subsequently to his arrest and previously to his leaving the territorial jurisdiction of Hawaii on board the "Warrimoo," is well founded, and whether his expulsion was of such a character, and accompanied by such undue severity, harshness, or illegality as to call for remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government and the renewed presentation of a claim for compensation on his behalf.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion on the questions submitted in this letter, and with any observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

A further despatch from His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington inclosing copies of exhibits (A) and (B) which should have accompanied the evidence taken in the case of Mueller versus Bird et al. (contained in his Excellency's despatch No. 284 of the 27th November), is inclosed for the consideration of the Law Officers in connection with the papers relative to the claim of Mr. J. Cranstoun, already submitted for their opinion.

F. H. V.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Petition from Mr. Cranstoun		November	11, 1895
(B.)	To Mr. Hawes	(No. 30)	December	5, ,,
(C.)	To Sir J. Pauncefote	(No. 198)	December	6, ,,
(D.)	Sir J. Pauncefote	(No. 52)	February	12, ,,
(E.)	Mr. Hawes	(No. 2)	January	14, 1896.
(F.)	To Mr. Hawes	(No. 6)	March	10, ,,
(G.)	Mr. Hawes	(No. 9)	April	23, ,,
(H.)	Ditto	(No. 8)	May	3, 1897.
(I.)	To Mr. Hawes	(Telegraphic)	May	29, ,,
(K.)	Mr. Hoare	(No. 2)	February	16, 1900
(L.)	To Lord Pauncefote	(No. 83)	April	13, ,,
(M.)	To Mr. Hoare	(No. 1)	April	18, ,,
(N.)	Mr. Hoare	(No. 3)	March	28, ,,
(O.)	Ditto	(No. 4)	March	30, ,,
(P.)	To Lord Pauncefote	(No. 94)	April	25, ,,
(Q.)	Mr. Hoare	(No. 5)	April	21, ,,
(R.)	Lord Pauncefote	(No. 148)	May	8, ,,
(S.)	Ditto	(No. 150)	May	15, ,,
(T.)	Ditto	(No. 161)	May	24, ,,
(U.)	Mr. Hoare	(No. 7)	May	19, ,,
(V.)	Mr. Cranstoun		July	12, ,,
(W.)	To Mr. Cranstoun		July	31, ,,
(X.)	Lord Pauncefote	(No. 284)	November	27, ,,
(Z.)	Law Officers Reports of July 5, 1895, and March 4, 1896.

Report.

I cannot on these materials recommend that His Majesty's Government should prosecute any claim on behalf of Mr. Cranstoun. The evidence taken on the Commission which is relied on by the United States' Government as justifying the imprisonment and expulsion of Mr. Cranstoun ought no doubt to be heavily discounted, but there appears to be a residuum of facts showing that Mr. Cranstoun was engaged in projects of a revolutionary nature.

It appears to be proved beyond doubt that the draft of the extraordinary Petition to the Government from the Scheutzner Club is in Mr. Cranstoun's handwriting. This is a very significant fact and coupled with the other evidence appears to lead to the inference that his arrest and expulsion were proper. It must, moreover, be borne in mind that the question is not of his actual guilt, but whether the Government acted unreasonably under the circumstances as they appeared to them at the time.

It is possible that Mr. Cranstoun may have explanations to offer which will put a different aspect on the case. This, however, does not appear to me to be very probable, and certainly on the materials before me I cannot recommend the prosecution of this claim.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 4, 1901.

No. 27.

[February 6, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

(B.)
Foreign Office, January 19, 1901.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to the cases of those British subjects whose claims to compensation on account of their detention and ill-treatment for alleged complicity in the Royalist insurrection in Hawaii formed the subject of Reports from your predecessors on the 5th July, 1895, and the 4th March, 1896.

Claims of British subjects for ill-treatment during rising in Hawaii in 1895.

Copies of those Reports, and of the references leading thereto, together with the correspondence therewith submitted are inclosed (Papers A, B, E and F).

1901

The then Law Officers were of opinion, in 1895 and 1896, that according to international law the Government of any country has the right to request and compel an alien to leave the country, but that the exercise of that right might form the ground of international remonstrance and demand for compensation if it had been employed in a high-handed or oppressive manner; they further stated that the perusal of the documents before them was calculated to leave on the mind the impression that martial law (the existence of, and necessity for, which had been cited by the Hawaiian Government in justification of their action) was used by that Government, in some at all events of these cases, not for the purpose of meeting immediate danger but for the purpose of harassing and compelling to leave the country residents who were known to hold pronounced Royalist views.

On these and other grounds your predecessors considered that compensation might properly be demanded on behalf of the sufferers, and indicated the amounts which in their opinion might be properly demanded by Her Majesty's Government in the several cases.

Instructions to this effect were accordingly sent to Mr. Hawes, Her Majesty's Consul-General in Hawaii (Paper G), and in making a representation, in the sense suggested, to the Hawaiian Government, on the 28th May of that year, he intimated that Her Majesty's Government felt justified in expecting that adequate compensation would be accorded.

Mr. Hawes was, however, prevented by ill-health and an enforced absence from Hawaii from further pressing these claims, at the time, and he died in the following autumn.

Informal negotiations with a view to a settlement were shortly afterwards commenced by his successor, Mr. Kenny, with the Hawaiian Minister for Foreign Affairs, but as these led to no satisfactory conclusion, and as it seemed evident that the Government only regarded these claims in the light of a political argument which they hoped to use in support of annexation to the United States (see Mr. Kenny's despatch No. 25 of the 24th December, 1897, Paper M), he was instructed to press for a formal written answer to the note addressed to the Hawaiian Government by Mr. Hawes on the 28th May, 1896.

The Hawaiian Government replied on the 2nd February, 1898 (see Mr. Kenny's No. 1 of that date, Paper N), that (except in the care of Dunwell which was separately dealt with, and to whom 650*l.* compensation was awarded), they were unable to admit that any of the persons in question were subjected to punishment and for that reason saw no grounds for any liability to compensate them for either loss of time, injury to business, or personal feelings during their confinement.

They added "that the same suggestion applied to those who were allowed to leave the country upon their own request as evidenced by the signing of stipulations by them previous to their leaving, which stipulations, it is fairly maintained, were not executed under any pressure or misapprehension other than their liability to be tried by a competent Tribunal for their alleged participation in the insurrection."

This answer having received due consideration, Mr. Kenny was instructed on the 31st May, 1898 (Paper P), to inform the Hawaiian Government that nothing which had been advanced by them had led Her Majesty's Government to change their opinion with regard to the fairness and equity of their demands. But as a proof of their wish to maintain friendly relations with the Government of Hawaii and of their desire to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the question Her Majesty's Government proposed that the cases which still remained unsettled should be referred to the arbitrament of an independent jurist of high standing, such jurist to be selected by agreement between the two Governments, or, in the event of their being unable to arrive at an agreement, to be designated by the King of Sweden and Norway, the President of the Swiss Confederation, or by some other neutral personage of high distinction.

On the 10th August following the reply of the Hawaiian Government (Paper Q) was received, in which the Minister for Foreign Affairs states that had the Hawaiian Government continued as a Sovereign State the proposal of Her Majesty's Government would undoubtedly have been accepted, but that the annexation of Hawaii to the United States having been consummated the Government felt that they had no authority to go further in the matter.

It was subsequently reported that the Hawaiian Government had notified to the United States' Government the existence of these claims and that Mr. Kenny had communicated to the United States' Minister at Honolulu copies of all the correspondence which he had had with the Hawaiian Government on the subject.

Her Majesty's Ambassador was then instructed in a despatch of which a copy is inclosed (Paper T) to bring these facts to the notice of the United States' Government, and to ascertain whether they were willing to agree to the proposal of Her Majesty's Government that the claims should be submitted to arbitration.

In reply (Paper U) the United States' Government expressed a hope that the claims might not be pressed until the relations of Hawaii with the United States were arranged by Congressional legislation: and in deference to this request the matter was dropped for the moment.

Six months later, however, an inquiry was addressed to the United States by Lord Pauncefote, asking whether, in view of the delay which must precede legislation by Congress, steps could not be taken at once for an examination of the claims with a view to their presentation to Congress on its next meeting.

Mr. Hay replied (Paper UU) that a copy of his Excellency's note had been sent to the Hawaiian Minister for Foreign Affairs with a request that he would draw up a Report upon the claims.

This Report was drawn up and a copy furnished to Her Majesty's Consul at Honolulu, who after careful examination was of opinion that it gave an incomplete and ex parte statement of the case and omitted some essential papers.

Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington accordingly communicated the missing documents to Mr. Hay, by whom they were referred back to Honolulu, as the United States' Attorney-General held that Hawaii was primarily responsible for the payment of valid claims of this character.

The ultimate result of these repeated references of the question from Washington to Honolulu is the Report of the Hawaiian Government (Paper Z Z) just received, which discusses the additional evidence placed before them, and concludes by justifying their action in every case (save that of Mr. Levey, whose death, they hold, makes it unnecessary to consider the matter further) and rejecting the claims for compensation.

In these circumstances the question arises whether any further reply should be made to the United States' Government with regard to all or any, and which of these cases, and, if so, to what points in the Hawaiian answer such reply may in each case as well as generally be most advantageously directed.

I am to request that you will take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion on the questions submitted in this letter and with any observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.)	To Law Officers		May	11,	1895.
(B.)	Law Officers		July	5,	,,
(C.)	Mr. Hawes, Honolulu	(No. 48)	December	9,	,,
(D.)	Ditto	(No. 49)	December	16,	,,
(E.)	To Law Officers		January	30,	1896.
(F.)	Law Officers		March	4,	,,
(G.)	To Mr Hawes	(No. 8. Confidential)	April	7,	,,
(H.)	Consul-General Hawes	(No. 4. Confidential)	March	23,	1897.
(I.)	Mr. Hawes	(No. 11. Confidential)	May	5,	,,
(J.)	To Mr. Hawes	(Telegraphic)	May	29,	,,
(K.)	Acting Consul-General Kenny	(Telegraphic)	November	18,	,,
(L.)	Ditto	(No. 23. Confidential)	November	18,	,,
(M.)	Ditto	(No. 25. Confidential)	December	24,	,,
(N.)	Ditto	(No. 1)	February	2,	1898.
(O.)	Ditto	(No. 6)	February	27,	,,
(P.)	To Acting Consul-General Kenny	(No. 1)	May	31,	,,
(Q.)	Acting Consul-General Kenny	(No. 20)	July	20,	,,
(R.)	Ditto	(No. 24)	August	4,	,,
(S.)	Ditto	(No. 28)	August	6,	,,
(T.)	To Sir J. Pauncefote	(No. 225)	September	9,	,,
(U.)	Sir J. Pauncefote	(No. 280)	October	10.	,,
(UU.)	Mr. Tower	(No. 133)	May	3,	1899.
(V.)	Consul Hoare	(No. 17)	October	12,	,,
(W.)	Mr. Tower	(No. 305)	October	28,	,,
(X.)	Ditto	(No. 312)	October	31,	,,
(Y.)	Ditto	(No. 320)	November	4,	,,
(Z.)	Lord Pauncefote	(No. 1)	January	5.	1900.
(ZZ.)	Ditto	(No. 305)	December	21,	,, 1901

Report.

There appears to be nothing in the Papers now before me to modify the view expressed in the Law Officers' Report of the 4th March, 1896, with regard to the cases of Thomas, McDowall, Ashford, Redward, Reynolds, Rawlins, Kenyon, Levy and Bailey, except so far as the death of Levy may be considered to affect the claim in respect of him.

With regard to Harrison's case there appears to be no additional material beyond the counter affidavits referred to in the Report from Hawaii to the United States' Government.

Under these circumstances, I see no reason to modify the opinions already expressed upon these several individual cases. How far these claims should be pressed depends upon considerations of policy.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 6, 1901.

No. 28.

[May 14, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, March 20, 1901.

Case of H. M. Govt.: operations in Samoa.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit herewith, and to request that you will take into your consideration, the Case which has been drawn up by Mr. H. Erle Richards, on behalf of His Majesty's Government, for presentation to the Arbitrator appointed under Article II of the Convention of the 7th November, 1899, between the United Kingdom, Germany, and the United States, relating to the settlement of certain claims arising out of the military operations in Samoa in the early part of that year.

A copy of the Convention in question and of the principal documents referred to in support of the Case are annexed as Appendices thereto.

Copies of two explanatory Memoranda, also prepared by Mr. Richards, and volumes of the Confidential printed correspondence therein marginally referred to are likewise transmitted for the information of the Law Officers.

His Lordship would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to whether the Case may properly be submitted to the Arbitrator in its present form, or whether any, and if so what, amendments or modifications should be made therein.

As it is necessary that the Case should be in the hands of the Arbitrator at an early date, Lord Lansdowne would be glad to be favoured with a reply so soon as may be found convenient.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

Case (two copies). [Conf. 7515.]
Explanatory Memoranda.
Confidential Print, Parts IX, XXIII, and XXIV.

Report.

We think the Case as drawn up by Mr. Richards may properly be submitted to the Arbitrator in its present form, and that no amendments are necessary.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
May 14, 1901.

PERSIA.

No. 29.

[February 7, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, February 6, 1901.

Importation of arms, &c. Draft new Order in Council.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to a proposed Order in Council to amend "The Persia Order in Council, 1889," and "The Persian Coast and Islands Order in Council, 1889."

In your Report of the 12th December last (Paper C) you expressed the opinion that the Persian Law of the 1st January, 1900 (inclosed in Mr. Spring-Rice's despatch No. 11, Commercial, of the 28th May, 1900, Paper D), prohibiting the importation of arms, ammunition, &c., into Persia should be made applicable to British subjects.

You pointed out that this might be effected by a Queen's Regulation under the Order in Council of the 13th December, 1889, as to Inland Persia (Article 290); but that as regards the Coast and Islands Order in Council of the same day, owing to the different wording of Article 49 the Persian Law could not be made applicable to British subjects by a Queen's Regulation under that Order.

In these circumstances, you advised the issue of an Order in Council dealing with the point as regards all parts of Persia.

The accompanying draft of an Order in Council (Paper E) for the purpose has accordingly been prepared by Mr. A. Gray, and I am to request that you will take it into your consideration and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion whether its terms are right and proper for submission to the King in Council for His Majesty's approval.

The opportunity has been taken of amending and amplifying the language of Article 49 of the Persian Coast Order so as to bring it into exact accord with the terms of the corresponding Article (Article 290) of "The Persia (Inland) Order, 1889," and thus to enable for the future King's Regulations enforcing the observance by British subjects of any native or local law or custom, &c., to be made for the Persian littoral as well as for Inland Persia.

The fine which may be imposed for a breach of King's Regulations is at present 100*l.* in the case of places within the limits of the Persia (Inland) Order in Council, and 1,500 rupees in the case of places within the limits of the Persian Coast Order. Under section 67 of "The Imperial Customs Consolidation Act, 1876" (39 & 40 Vict., cap. 36), the fine for evasion of customs duties or for importing goods which are prohibited is 100*l.*, or treble the value of the goods, at the election of the Commissioners of Customs.

A fine of 100*l.* would appear to be an insufficient penalty in the case of a whole cargo of illegal goods, and a provision similar to that of the Imperial Act has accordingly been inserted in the draft Order in Council.

1901

The draft contains the usual clause providing that, in cases of urgency declared in such King's Regulations, they shall take effect before they have been allowed by the Secretary of State.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

List of Papers.

(A.) Persia Order in Council, 1889.
(B.) Persian Coast Order in Council, 1889.
(C.) Law Officers ..	..	.. .. ..	December 12, 1900.
(D.) Mr. Spring-Rice	..	(No. 11. Commercial)	May 28, „
(E.) Draft Order in Council.

Report.

In my opinion, the draft Order in Council, as altered and initialled by me, is right and proper in its terms for submission for the approval of the King in Council.

(Signed) ROBERT B. FINLAY.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 7, 1901.

Annex.

PERSIA AND PERSIAN COAST AND ISLANDS.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, His Majesty the King has jurisdiction in the territories and places within the limits of "The Persia Order in Council, 1889," and "The Persian Coast and Islands Order, 1889," respectively referred to in this Order as the "Persia Order," and the "Persian Coast Order:"

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in His Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered as follows, that is to say:—

1. This Order may be cited as "The Persia (Regulations) Order in Council, 1901."

2. This Order shall apply to all places within the limits of the Persia Order and the Persian Coast Order respectively, and the expressions "the Order" and the "Consul-General" shall be construed as applying to each of the said Orders as the case may require.

3. The Consul-General may make and alter Regulations (to be called King's Regulations) for the following purposes, that is to say:

(1.) For securing the observance of any Treaty for the time being in force relating to any place within the limits of the Order, or of any native or local law or custom, whether relating to trade, commerce, revenue, or any other matter.

(2.) For the peace, order, and good government of British subjects or British-protected persons (so far as subject to the Order) within the said limits, in relation to matters not provided for by the Order.

(3.) For requiring Returns to be made of the nature, quantity, and value of articles exported from or imported into places within those limits by or on account of British subjects or British-protected persons, and for prescribing the times and manner at, or in which, and the persons by whom such Returns are to be made.

(4.) For the governance, visitation, care, and superintendence of prisons.

4. King's Regulations may provide for forfeiture of any goods, receptacles, or things in relation to which, or to the contents of which, any breach of the Regulations is committed.

5. King's Regulations shall not take effect until they are allowed by a Secretary of State: provided that in case of urgency declared in any such Regulations, the same shall take effect before such allowance, and shall continue to have effect unless and until they are disallowed by the Secretary of State, and until notification of such disallowance is received and published by the Consul-General, and such disallowance shall be without prejudice to anything done or suffered under such Regulations in the meantime.

All King's Regulations shall be published by the Consul-General in such manner and at such places as he may think proper.

6. Any person committing any breach of the Regulations shall, in addition to any forfeiture prescribed thereby, be punishable with imprisonment, which may extend to three months, or to a fine, or to both.

7. Any fine imposed for a breach of the Regulations shall not exceed 100*l.* in the case of places within the limits of the Persia Order, or 1,500 rupees in the case of places within the limits of the Persian Coast Order: provided that, in the case of any breach of any native or local law relating to the Customs, or under which the exportation or importation of any goods is prohibited or restricted, the fine may extend to a sum equivalent to treble the value of the goods in relation to which the breach is committed.

8. In this Order "breach of the Regulations" includes the breach of any native or local law or custom, the observance of which is required by any King's Regulations.

9. Article 290 of the Persia Order, and Article 49 of the Persian Coast Order, are hereby repealed; but nothing in this Order shall affect the validity of any Regulations made under those Articles until superseded or replaced by Regulations made hereunder, or the enforcement of any penalty for any breach of such Regulations while in force.

10. This Order shall come into operation on the day on which it is first publicly exhibited in the office of the Consul-General.

R. B. F.

PORTUGAL.

No. 30.

[February 16, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Treaty between Transvaal and Portugal. As to lapse of on conquest of the Republic.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, February 11, 1901.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the correspondence noted on the inclosed list, in which the question is raised by the High Commissioner for South Africa whether the Treaty of Friendship and Commerce of December 1875, between the late South African Republic and the King of Portugal, is to be regarded as ipso facto terminated by the conquest of the Republic.

In this, as in certain other cases of Treaties concluded subject to the stipulations of the Conventions of 1881 and 1884, a question arises whether the fact that her late Majesty Queen Victoria, as Suzerain, assented to the completion of a Treaty fetters His Majesty's Government in any way so as to prevent such Treaty from being regarded as having lapsed owing to the annexation of the South African Republic.

I am to request you to take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and to furnish his Lordship with your opinion on the point raised by Sir A. Milner in his telegram No. 42 of the 18th January last, together with any general remarks you may have to offer on the documents now submitted to you.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

(A.) Colonial Office	.. ..	January 30, 1901.
(B.) To Treasury	.. ..	January 21, „

1901

Report.

In my opinion the fact that her late Majesty, as Suzerain, assented to the completion of a Treaty between the Transvaal Government and another Power in no way affects the question of the lapse of such Treaty owing to the annexation of the South African Republic.

The Treaty was one with the Government of the Transvaal as a separate Power, subject only to the restrictions imposed by the Conventions, and the consent of Her Majesty was given merely as Suzerain of the Transvaal. The fact of such assent can, in my opinion, in no way affect the question of the lapse of the Treaty when the Transvaal has become part of His Majesty's dominions. It may, however, have some bearing on the question of policy as to how far His Majesty's Government should be prepared to enter into new obligations containing provisions similar to those contained in any Treaties with the Transvaal which may have lapsed owing to annexation.

In the meantime it may possibly be considered expedient, pending the conclusion of any further Treaty with Portugal, to intimate that the same advantages will be granted provisionally as were enjoyed under the Treaty; the Portuguese Government, of course, conceding the like advantages to His Majesty's subjects in the Transvaal.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 16, 1901.

SERVIA.

No. 31.

[May 31, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, May 14, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Anglo-Servian Extradition Treaty: Order in Council.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you herewith, for your consideration, the draft of an Order in Council, applying to Servia the Extradition Acts 1870 to 1895, in order to give effect to a Treaty of Extradition between Her late Majesty Queen Victoria and the King of Servia, signed at Belgrade on the 6th December, 1900, and ratified at that capital on the 13th March of the present year.

I am to inquire whether, in your opinion, this draft Order, which has been approved by the various Departments concerned, may properly be submitted to the King in Council for His Majesty's approval.

I am further to observe that the Treaty was also signed in the Servian character, and that the usual course is to insert both the texts in Orders in Council which give effect to Extradition Treaties. It has, however, been ascertained that there will be great difficulty in setting up the Servian character in this country owing to scarcity of type and other technicalities. On those grounds it is proposed to insert the English text only in the Order, and I am to inquire whether you see any objection to this course.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

Report.

As initialled by us the draft Order in Council may, in our opinion, properly be submitted for the approval of His Majesty in Council, with the addition of the Servian text. We think the usual practice should be followed in this matter—what was agreed to was not the English text only.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
E. CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
May 31, 1901.

Annex.

WHEREAS by the Extradition Acts, 1870 to 1895, it is, amongst other things, enacted that where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, His Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that His Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in part of His Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient.

And whereas a Treaty was concluded on the 6th day of December, 1900, between Her late Majesty Queen Victoria and His Majesty the King of Servia for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, which Treaty is in the terms following:—

[Here follows the text of the Treaty.]

And whereas the ratifications of the said Treaty were exchanged at Belgrade on the 13th day of March, 1901.

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to him by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the * day of , 1901, the said Acts shall apply in the case of Servia, and of the said Treaty with Servia.

Provided always that the operation of the said Act shall be and remain suspended with the Dominion of Canada so long as an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Criminals," shall continue in force there, and no longer.

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

SPAIN.

No. 32.

[September 14, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, August 19, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Claims for losses of British subjects in Cuban insurrection.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to inform you that His Majesty's Ambassador at Madrid recently presented to the Spanish Government the claims of British subjects on account of their losses in Cuba arising out of the acts of the Spanish authorities during the insurrection in that island and the subsequent war between Spain and the United States.

Among the claims presented by his Excellency a considerable number were for the value of the ripe sugar-cane which was left standing in the fields by the claimants, and consequently destroyed, in obedience to the orders of the Spanish authorities

---

* Date to be inserted by Council Office, and to be a date ten days after publication in "London Gazette."

1901

prohibiting planters from harvesting or grinding their cane. His Majesty's Consul-General at Havana in a Memorandum with regard to the claims explained that this measure had been very generally enforced in the districts exposed to the attacks of the insurgents, and that it had apparently been adopted in order to deprive the insurgents of the resources in money and supplies which they might have been able to extract from the planters had the latter been allowed to take in their crops.

A despatch has now been received from Sir M. Durand, a copy of which is inclosed,* reporting that he has been informed by the Spanish Government that they cannot admit the claims of British subjects for losses consequent on the Decree of the military authorities forbidding the harvesting of the sugar-cane.

In the note addressed to his Excellency on the subject, the Spanish Government state that the measure, being of a general nature, and taken only owing to the exceptional gravity of the circumstances, affected Spanish subjects and foreigners alike, and that the claim of neither the one nor the other to any sort of indemnity will be recognized.

I am to request that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether His Majesty's Government should accept this decision of the Spanish Government, and that if you consider that the decision should not be accepted, you will indicate the grounds on which His Majesty's Government should base their objections.

Lord Lansdowne will also be glad to be favoured with any observations which you may have to make on the general aspect of the question.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

We do not think His Majesty's Government could successfully combat the conclusions arrived at by the Spanish Government as set forth in the letter of Sir H. M. Durand of the 8th August, 1901.

As the action of the military authorities of the Spanish Government was taken in the course of the hostilities then pending, and was applied alike to Spanish subjects and those of neutrals, no claim for indemnity arises under the recognized principles of international law.

Any further claim, therefore, can only be in the nature of an appeal for consideration, based upon the hardships to the individuals whose property was lost. No claim can be put forward as a matter of right.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
September 14, 1901.

TURKEY.

No. 33.

[July 29, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, June 11, 1900.

Gentlemen,

Marriage of P. Attard in Malta with divorced Greek subject of Porte.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Salisbury to transmit to you the accompanying correspondence with Mr. Eyres, Her Majesty's Consul at Constantinople, together with Minutes thereon, relative to the proposed marriage between Pietro Attard, a Maltese British subject, and a "Rayah" who is the divorced wife of a Greek subject of the Porte.

---

* Sir M. Durand, No. 66, August 8, 1901.

Mr. Stavrides, the legal adviser to the Consulate, describes the lady's divorce as "quite in order," meaning thereby that the decree of divorce obtained by her was valid according to the law of the matrimonial domicil of the parties, and was pronounced by a competent Court or authority of the country in which the parties were domiciled at the time of the commencement of the proceedings for divorce. The divorce being valid, the lady is consequently free to marry again, so far as English law is concerned.

As to the intending husband, Lord Salisbury was advised that his marriage would be valid wherever English law prevails, but that, if he were domiciled in Malta, the law of which island does not admit of marriage with a divorced person, his marriage would not be valid in Malta. It therefore appeared necessary to clear up the doubt as to Mr. Attard's domicil, and Mr. Eyres was instructed to make inquiries on this point. From his second despatch (Paper C), there seems to be little doubt that Mr. Attard's domicil is Maltese.

On this assumption I am to request you to favour Lord Salisbury with your opinion, 1, whether, in the circumstances, the Consul is bound to solemnize the marriage at Her Majesty's Consulate; and, 2, if your answer to that question should be in the affirmative, whether it is desirable that he should previously warn the parties with regard to their position, in contemplation of the law of Malta, and, if so, in what terms such warning should be expressed.

I have, &c.
(Signed) MARTIN GOSSELIN.

List of Papers.

(A.) Consul Eyres	(No. 23)	May 8, 1900.
(B.) To ditto	(No. 14)	„ 21, „
(C.) Consul Eyres	(No. 25)	„ 29, „

Report.

There is no objection to the celebration of this marriage.

The opinion of the Acting Crown Advocate of Malta does not show that the law of Malta imposes on a person domiciled there any incapacity to marry a divorced person in any other part of the world. We may add that it appears to us extremely unlikely that the law of any country should impose such incapacity.

The doubts entertained by the Acting Crown Advocate as to the validity in Malta of the proposed marriage rest on the opinion, which he appears to think probable, that the Maltese Courts would not recognize the divorce which has been obtained by the lady from the ecclesiastical authorities of her own Church in Turkey. This is, of course, a totally different question from the suggestion that Mr. Attard was under an incapacity by the law of Malta to marry a divorced person.

We are unable to share the doubts which the Acting Crown Advocate entertains as to the recognition in Malta of the validity of the Greek divorce. The question whether this lady is a married woman or single must depend on the law of her domicil. This is not a question of the local law of Malta, but of general international law. If, by the law of her domicil, she is a single woman, she must be recognized as such in all other countries.

We assume that Mr. Attard retains his Maltese domicil of origin, inasmuch as, though there is no impossibility in point of law, there is a strong presumption against the intention by a British Christian subject to acquire a domicil in such a country as Turkey.

(Signed) ROBERT B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 29, 1901.

1901

No. 34.

[June 20, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, June 14, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Supplementary Extradition Convention with the United States. Order in Council.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you herewith a draft of an Order in Council to give effect to a Convention signed at Washington on the 13th December last between the United Kingdom and the United States of America for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, the ratifications of which were exchanged at Washington on the 22nd April last.

The various Departments of His Majesty's Government concerned have concurred in this Order, and I am to request that you will inform the Marquess of Lansdowne whether, in your opinion, it may properly be submitted for the approval of the King in Council.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

The accompanying draft Order in Council which we have initialled may, in our opinion, properly be submitted for the approval of His Majesty in Council.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 20, 1901.

Annex.

WHEREAS by the Extradition Acts, 1870 to 1895, it was amongst other things enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, His Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that His Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in the part of His Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient;

And whereas a Convention was concluded on the 13th day of December, 1900, between Her late Majesty Queen Victoria and the President of the United States of America, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, which Convention is in the terms following:—

[Here follows the text of the Treaty.]

And whereas the ratifications of the said Convention were exchanged at Washington on the 22nd day of April, 1901:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to him by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the * day of , 1901, the said Acts shall apply in the case of the United States and of the said Convention with the President of the United States of America.

Provided always that the operation of the said Acts shall be and remain suspended within the Dominion of Canada so long as an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Criminals," shall continue in force there, and no longer.

R. B. F.
E. C

---

* Date to be inserted by Council Office, and to be a date ten days after publication in "London Gazette."

No. 34A. [Colonial Office.]

[July 11, 1901.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, July 11, 1901.

Sir,

Real, &c., Property Convention with United States: Partial adherence of Canada.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Sir M. F. Ommanney's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by you to request us to report upon certain questions which had arisen with respect to the power of the Government of the Dominion of Canada to adhere to the Convention between the United Kingdom and the United States of America, relative to the disposal of real and personal property, which was ratified on the 28th July, 1900.

That Sir M. Ommanney was to transmit to us a copy of a telegram received from the Governor-General of Canada, from which it appeared that the Province of New Brunswick did not desire to adhere to the Convention, and that the Dominion Government were in doubt whether Canada could adhere without New Brunswick.

That it would be observed that by section 132 of "The British North America Act, 1867," power was given to the Parliament and Government of Canada to perform the obligations of Canada, or of any province of Canada arising under Treaties between the Empire and foreign countries, and that under section 91 of the same Act exclusive power was reserved to the Dominion Government to legislate in respect of aliens. That in that connection Sir M. Ommanney was to refer us to the case of the Union Colliery Company of British Columbia v. Bryden.

That it appeared, however, that the Dominion Government was doubtful as to the propriety of exercising any powers it might possess of adhering to the Convention and legislating to enable its provisions to be carried out in view of the objections of the Province of New Brunswick, and that Sir M. Ommanney was, therefore, to request us to report—

1. Whether the Dominion Government could adhere to the Convention without New Brunswick becoming bound by it?
2. Whether the Dominion Government had power—
    - (a.) To adhere on behalf of New Brunswick notwithstanding the refusal of New Brunswick to adhere; and
    - (b.) To legislate, if necessary, for that province so as to enable the provisions of the Convention to be carried out?
3. Generally.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That we think the Dominion Government can only adhere to the Convention on the terms of New Brunswick being bound by it as well as the other provinces.

2. We are of opinion that the Dominion Government has power to adhere on behalf of New Brunswick, and to pass such legislation for the whole Dominion, including New Brunswick, as will enable the Convention to be carried out there. This can, we think, be done under the exclusive power to legislate as to aliens conferred by section 91 (25), though it touches on rights of property in the province. (See Tennant v. Union Bank of Canada—1894 A.C. 31 at p. 47).

3. Nothing further occurs to us. We, of course, do not enter into questions of policy which may arise on the course suggested in the second question.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

1901

No. 35.

[August 7, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, July 31, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Consular marriages in Illinois and Colorado. Measures proposed to ensure validity of.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list respecting the solemnization of marriages under "The Foreign Marriage Act and Order in Council, 1892," at His Majesty's Consulates in the States of Illinois and Colorado, United States of America.

A question having arisen as to the validity of such marriages, His Majesty's Consul at Chicago thought it right to obtain legal opinions on the point, which were forwarded to Lord Pauncefote and submitted by him to the Legal Adviser to His Majesty's Embassy. All the opinions given agree in the view that a marriage solemnized by a British Consul would not be valid in the States of Illinois or Colorado, and that valid marriages can only be solemnized in Illinois by a minister of a religious denomination, a Judge of a Court of Record, a Justice of the Peace, or the authorities of a Quaker congregation; in Colorado, by any Judge or Justice of the Peace, clergyman, or licensed preacher of the Gospel.

It is therefore suggested that marriages should be solemnized in His Majesty's Consulate at Chicago, or in the British Vice-Consulate at Denver, in the presence of the Consul or Vice-Consul (who are the only marriage officers in the Chicago Consular district, which includes the States of Illinois and Colorado) by a person duly empowered to perform marriages according to the local law. Such marriages would constitute valid marriages under the Foreign Marriage Act and the Order in Council of 1892, as well as under the lex loci, provided that the preliminary formalities as required by that Act had been observed by the parties, and that if the ceremony adopted were not that of the Church of England the words prescribed in section 8 (3) of the Foreign Marriage Act were duly introduced.

Lord Lansdowne is, however, advised that, in order to secure the validity of the marriage in English law, the Consul would have to satisfy himself, as in the case of all Consular marriages, that the parties were under no legal impediment so far as the law of England, and not the lex loci, was concerned.

The marriage would, in fact, not be a lex loci marriage, but a marriage under the Act of Parliament.

Lord Lansdowne proposes that the Consuls concerned should be instructed to act in accordance with this suggestion if there should be no impediment in practice, and to register marriages so solemnized at His Majesty's Consulates as Consular marriages.

I am to request that you will be so good as to take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and to furnish his Lordship with your opinion on the points raised, and with any general observations which you may wish to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.) Consul Wyndham	(No. 21.)	June 10, 1901.
(B.) Mr. Lowther	(No. 11. Consular.)	„ 24, „

Report.

We cannot advise that British Consuls in Illinois and Colorado should be instructed to endeavour to combine the two systems in the manner suggested. They should proceed in the ordinary manner with regard to Consular marriages.

If the mode of celebration is such as to render it a good marriage by the lex loci, the parties will have the advantage of this; but we think it would lead to confusion, as pointed out by Lord Pauncefote, if the Consuls were instructed to take any steps to have the marriage celebrated under the two systems.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
August 7, 1901.

No. 36.

[August 10, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, July 31, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Trial of G. E. Underwood for offence for which extradition was not asked.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to inclose, for your consideration, the correspondence, shown in the accompanying lists, relative to the case of a man named George Edward Underwood.

This case has formed the subject of correspondence between this Department, the Colonial Office, and His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington for a period dating back to 1897, and the facts may be briefly summarized as follows:—

In the autumn of 1896, an American citizen, named George Edward Underwood, was surrendered in extradition from the Dominion of Canada to the United States of America, charged with the murder on the 10th January, 1896, in Harris County, Texas, in the United States, of one A. A. Rabuck.

In December 1896 he was tried on this charge at the State Court of Houston, Texas, and acquitted. He was, however, rearrested before leaving the precincts of the Court, and it appears from a letter addressed to His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington on the 5th October, 1897, and signed "G. Underwood." that he was again placed on his trial on a charge of robbery with violence, alleged to have been committed on the 9th November, 1895.

On this latter charge he was found guilty and sentenced to death. Against this sentence he appealed, but for some reason, however, which is not explained in the papers, no effect was given to the sentence against which he had appealed, and the appeal was allowed to lapse. On the 12th April following he was again tried on what seemed to have been a separate and distinct charge of robbery committed on the 15th December, 1895, and for this crime was convicted and sentenced to a term of sixteen years' imprisonment in a penitentiary. This sentence, which was confirmed by the Court of Criminal Appeals in Texas, Underwood is now undergoing.

In the month of July 1897, the matter having been brought to his notice by the Governor-General of Canada, Mr. Adam, at that time Her late Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, called the attention of the United States' Government to the case, and reminded them of the terms of Article III of the Extradition Treaty with the United States of the 12th July, 1889, which provide that "no person surrendered by or to either of the High Contracting Parties shall be triable or be tried for any crime or offence committed prior to his extradition, other than the offence for which he was surrendered, until he shall have had an opportunity of returning to the country from which he was surrendered."

The United States' Government, in reply, undertook to inquire into the matter.

It will be seen, on reference to Lord (then Sir Julian) Pauncefote's despatch No. 13, Treaty, of the 17th March, 1899, that, down to that time, the Department of State, in reply to numerous representations made by the British Embassy at Washington, had contented itself with procuring reports on the case from the Governor of Texas, and copies of the Judgments of the Texan Courts in the appeals and other legal proceedings instituted on behalf of Underwood, but had abstained from active intervention on the ground that it was open to the prisoner to raise the question of the legality of his imprisonment by writ of habeas corpus. In the same despatch it is stated that while the prisoner's friends were anxious to bring the case before the Supreme Court by writ of error, or by writ of habeas corpus, they were unable to do so owing to lack of funds. As regards procedure by writ of habeas corpus, Her Majesty's Ambassador observed that doubts existed whether the application would succeed, since it was urged by the authorities in Texas, in vindication of their action, that the prisoner had waived his right under the Treaty by having submitted to be tried for the prior offence without protest. Be this, however, as it may, no Judgment has as yet been pronounced by any Court on the point whether there has been a violation of Article III of the Extradition Treaty above cited.

1901

As Her Majesty's Ambassador remarks in the same despatch, "the only feature in the case which concerns Her Majesty's Government is the allegation that the prisoner having been acquitted of the charge of murder, on which his extradition was granted, was put upon his trial for another crime, committed prior to his surrender by Canada, without having had an opportunity of returning to that country."

Taking all these matters into consideration in consultation with the Legal Adviser of His Majesty's Embassy (Mr. Calderon Carlisle), Lord Pauncefote came to the conclusion that—while safeguarding the principle involved—a satisfactory solution of the problem might be effected by means of an exchange of diplomatic notes, setting forth that the fact of no proceedings having been taken, and no demand having been made by His Majesty's Government for the liberation of the prisoner, should not be treated as a precedent, or held to impair in any way the rights of His Majesty's Government under Article III of the Treaty. The right of the prisoner to pursue his legal remedy at any time would, of course, be reserved. It will be seen on reference to the letter from Mr. Griggs, the Attorney-General of the United States, a copy of which is inclosed in Lord Pauncefote's despatch of the 17th March, 1899, that he concurred in this course of action.

The matter was then referred to the Government of Canada, who, after a considerable delay, concurred in the terms of the proposed instructions to Lord Pauncefote. Those instructions were sent to his Lordship in the despatch No. 2, Treaty, of the 16th January last, the arrangement proposed with regard to the exchange of notes being approved.

The reply of the United States' Government is contained in Lord Pauncefote's despatch No. 23, Treaty, of the 21st April last, and I am to invite your particular consideration of its terms, as well as of the opinion expressed with regard to it by the Legal Adviser of His Majesty's Embassy. Stated shortly, the contention of the United States' Government amounts to this: that so long as legal remedies are still open to the prisoner, diplomatic intervention cannot properly be resorted to.

Lord Lansdowne is advised that, having regard to the extremely important question of principle involved, it is essential that His Majesty's Government should address a further representation to the United States' Government in the case, and the inclosed draft to His Majesty's Representative at Washington has accordingly been prepared with that object.

You will observe that other cases are mentioned in the correspondence as being more or less analogous in principle to that of Underwood. The cases of Platt and Hertz are cited as examples. The circumstances of these cases are set out in Lord Pauncefote's despatches Nos. 31 and 33 of the 23rd and 27th May last respectively. It appears, however, to Lord Lansdowne doubtful whether any useful purpose will be served by referring to them, and that, on the whole, it may be more expedient to confine their representation to the Underwood case alone.

As regards the case of Young, referred to in the correspondence, it presents perhaps a closer analogy than the two others above referred to. Young was surrendered in 1894, in extradition to the United States, on a charge of "assault with intent to commit murder." He was acquitted on that specific charge, but convicted of a crime known in the United States as "assault in the second degree," and sentenced to four and a-half years' imprisonment. The man, however, sued out a writ of habeas corpus before a Judge of the Federal Court, who quashed the conviction of the State Court, and ordered him to be liberated. On that occasion, as in the case of Underwood, the United States' Government contended that so long as a legal remedy was open to the convicted man, it was no part of the duty of the Executive to intervene.

I am to request that you will take this correspondence into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether the inclosed draft instructions to His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington are right and proper in the circumstances, and if not, that you will make any addition or alterations in the draft which may seem to you desirable.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

Lists of Papers.

List (A).

To Lord Pauncefote	(No. 2. Treaty)	January	16, 1901.
Lord Pauncefote	(No. 3. Treaty)	February	8, „
Ditto	(No. 23. Treaty)	April	21, „
To ditto	(Telegraphic)	May	8, „
Lord Pauncefote	(Telegraphic)	May	14, „
Ditto	(No. 31. Treaty)	May	23, „
Ditto	(No. 33. Treaty)	May	27, „
Proposed draft to Mr. Lowther.

List (B).

Mr. Adam	(No. 27. Treaty)	October	1, 1897.
Ditto	(No. 28. Treaty)	October	5, „
Ditto	(No. 33. Treaty)	October	8, „
Ditto	(Telegraphic)	October	11, „
To Colonial Office		October	13, „
Colonial Office		October	14, „
Mr. Adam	(No. 32. Treaty)	October	12, „
Ditto	(No. 34. Treaty)	October	15, „
Ditto	(No. 35. Treaty)	October	19, „
To Colonial Office		October	21, „
Ditto		October	21, „
Colonial Office		October	25, „
To Mr. Adam	(Telegraphic)	October	27, „
Colonial Office		January	3, 1898.
Sir J. Pauncefote	(No. 13. Treaty)	March	17, 1899.
To Colonial Office		April	8, „
Colonial Office		April	20, „
Ditto		January	9, 1901.

Report.

In our opinion the accompanying draft instructions to His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, as altered in red ink* and initialled by us, are, in the circumstances, right and proper.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
August 10, 1901.

Annex.

(No. 51. Treaty.)

Foreign Office. August 15, 1901.

Sir,

HIS Majesty's Government have considered, in communication with the Law Officers of the Crown, the reply of the United States' Government to the representation which was addressed to them by Lord Pauncefote on the 1st February last with regard to the case of George Edward Underwood.

As an alternative to pressing on the United States' Government the adoption of procedure under habeas corpus, His Majesty's Ambassador, in accordance with his instructions, had proposed to them that there should be an exchange of notes recording that no proceedings have been taken and no demand put forward by His Majesty's Government for the liberation of Underwood, but that this should not be treated as a precedent, or as in any way impairing the rights of His Majesty's Government under Article III of the Treaty of 1890. Before this proposal was officially put forward, it was understood that the United States' Attorney-General agreed, in principle, to that course.

His Majesty's Government regret to observe that Mr. Hay's reply deals with the matter from a different point of view, and treats it as being one of the category in regard to which it is not usual to invoke diplomatic intervention until legal remedies have been exhausted. The view of His Majesty's Government is, however, that inasmuch as Underwood was never afforded an opportunity of returning to the country from which he had been surrendered, upon his acquittal on the charge on which he was surrendered, and was put upon his trial on a different charge relating to an offence alleged to have been committed prior to such surrender, there has been a breach of Treaty obligation, and the object of the proposed exchange of notes was to place this on record, and to reaffirm the binding nature of the Treaty obligation. His Majesty's Government cannot admit the contention that the fact that Underwood is an American citizen has any bearing whatever on the principle involved; this point, however, although mentioned by the United States' Attorney-General, does not appear to be insisted on.

---

* Printed in italics.

The case is not put forward by His Majesty's Government as one involving a denial of justice to a person who is not a British subject, and who has not exhausted his ordinary legal remedies, but as one involving a violation of the international compact by which the United States are under engagement to this country, in accordance with the IIIrd Article of the Extradition Treaty of 1890.

His Majesty's Government therefore trust that the United States' Government will consent to an exchange of notes on the basis proposed, and, further, that they will consider if steps can be taken to prevent the recurrence of incidents of this nature, which, owing to the action of the local Courts, cause difficulties in the due fulfilment of Treaty obligations.

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 37.

[August 22, 1901.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Damage to Hoskyn and Co.'s property at Iloilo; claim on United States.

Foreign Office, August 9, 1901.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the accompanying letter from Messrs. Hoskyn and Co., in which they request the assistance of His Majesty's Government in recovering the amount of their claim against the United States' Government on account of the damage done to their property at Iloilo, Philippine Islands, at the time of the occupation of that town by the United States' forces on the 11th February, 1899.

In 1898–99 Spain and the United States were at war, and the inhabitants of the Philippines were at the same time in a state of insurrection against the Spanish Crown.

The Spanish troops evacuated Iloilo in December 1898, and the town was then occupied by the insurgents. When the United States' forces subsequently appeared before it the insurgents refused to surrender the place, and the damage to Messrs. Hoskyn and Co.'s property was caused when the United States' troops took forcible possession and drove out the insurgents.

Mr. George M. Saul's notes, exhibit 5 attached to Messrs. Hoskyn and Co.'s letter, contain a narrative of the events which occurred at Iloilo from the time of its evacuation by the Spaniards until its occupation by the Americans. In the firm's letter, and in exhibit 1 attached to it, you will find the grounds stated on which Messrs. Hoskyn and Co. base their claim. Their contention is that their losses were due to the negligence of the United States' authorities in not taking proper steps for the protection of property, and to the fact that the bombardment and assault of the town took place before the expiration of the notice issued by the United States' authorities to the foreign Consuls warning them to cause the persons under their protection to seek a place of safety.

A Report by the Captain of His Majesty's ship "Plover" is inclosed, which gives an account of the bombardment of Iloilo, and explains the circumstances in which the firing began before the notice issued to the foreign Consuls had expired.

In the course of 1899 a Board, consisting of Lieutenant-Colonel Chandler and three other officers, was appointed by the United States' Government to sit at Manila for the investigation of the claims arising out of the military operations in the Philippines. The decisions of the Board were not final, but were subject to revision by the United States' authorities at Washington.

A considerable number of the claims submitted to the Board, including that of Messrs. Hoskyn and Co., were for losses incurred at Iloilo, and they therefore selected one of these, that of Messrs. Hollmann and Co., Swiss citizens, as a "type" case, and determined that on its result should depend the other cases where the law and the facts were entirely similar.

The examination of this test case has recently been concluded, and the Board have recommended that Messrs. Hollmann and Co.'s claim should be disallowed. The finding of the Board with the reasons stated at length is given in Inclosure 2 of Messrs. Hoskyn and Co.'s letter.

In view of the decision thus arrived at in the case of Messrs. Hollmann and Co. it is probable that all claims for destruction of property at Iloilo will be disallowed by the Board, and Messrs. Hoskyn and Co. have therefore made their present appeal to His Majesty's Government for assistance.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether Messrs. Hoskyn and Co.'s claim is one that His Majesty's Government can properly undertake to present officially to the United States' Government through the Diplomatic channel, and that you will add any observations with regard to the case generally which may appear to you to be called for by the circumstances.

As at present advised his Lordship considers that it will be very difficult successfully to impeach the finding of the Board, which appears to be in accordance with strict law and precedent, and that it will perhaps be preferable to approach the United States' Government unofficially in the matter, in the hope that the President may be induced, in view of the hardship of the case, to move Congress to grant some compensation to the claimants out of the revenues of the Philippine Islands.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

Messrs. Hoskyn and Co.	April 12, 1901.
Report of 11th February, 1899, from Lieutenant and Commander Cowper, inclosure in Admiralty letter of	March 24, 1899

Report.

We do not think that the claim of Messrs. Hoskyn and Co. could be successfully maintained on principles of international law.

The judgment of the Board of Officers on claims in Hollmann's case appears to us to state, with substantial accuracy, the principles of international law which are applicable, and which could not be impeached.

We think, therefore, that any claim on behalf of Messrs. Hoskyn and Co. ought to be made unofficially, and upon the grounds of the hardship resulting from the destruction of their property.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
August 22, 1901.

No. 38.

[October 3, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Consular marriages in Illinois and Colorado. Draft instructions to Consuls.

Foreign Office, September 4, 1901.

Gentlemen,

WITH reference to your letter of the 7th ultimo, I have the honour to transmit to you, by the direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the draft of a despatch which his Lordship proposes to address to His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington in regard to Consular marriages in the States of Illinois and Colorado.

The papers previously submitted to you are returned for convenience of reference, together with a Minute by Lord Pauncefote, to whom your Report was communicated.

1901

I am to request that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether the proposed instructions to Mr. Lowther are adequate, and with any general observations which you may wish to offer on the question.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

Consul Wyndham	(No. 21)	June 10, 1901.
Mr. Lowther	(No. 11. Consular)	June 24, „
Law Officers		August 7, „
Lord Pauncefote	(Minute)	June 27, „
Draft despatch to Mr. Lowther.

Report.

The proposed instructions, initialled by us, appear to us to be adequate. We have no further observations to offer.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
October 3, 1901.

Annex.

Draft of Despatch from the Marquess of Lansdowne to Mr. Lowther.

(No. 24. Consular.)

Foreign Office, October 9, 1901.

Sir,

I HAVE had under my consideration your despatch No. 11, Consular, of the 24th June, regarding the solemnization of marriages under "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," in the States of Illinois and Colorado.

In view of the Marriage Law of those States, His Majesty's Consul at Chicago and the British Vice-Consul at Denver should not solemnize marriages themselves; but there is no reason why they should not allow marriages to be solemnized in their official residences, in their presence, by some person authorised by the local law to do so, after the parties have completed the formalities prescribed by the Foreign Marriage Act and the Foreign Marriages Order in Council, and having regard to section 8 of the Act.

Such marriages will be valid by English law, and, if the parties have also fulfilled the requirements of the local law, will presumably be valid by that law.

It is not, however, any part of the Consul's duty to inquire whether the formalities prescribed by the local law have or have not been fulfilled; he will merely, as heretofore, take care that the parties comply with the requirements of English law, and warn them that the intended marriage will not necessarily be valid according to the local law.

You should issue instructions in this sense to His Majesty's Consul at Chicago, who will communicate them to the British Vice-Consul at Denver.

I am, &c.

R. B. F.
E. C.

VENEZUELA.

No. 39.

[May 2, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, April 15, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Draft Extradition Treaty with Venezuela.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you herewith the draft of a Treaty of Extradition between this country and the United States of Venezuela, which his Lordship proposes to instruct His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Carácas to submit for the acceptance of the Venezuelan Government.

The draft is practically identical with the text of a Treaty concluded with Chile in 1897, of which a copy is inclosed. The only difference to which it seems necessary to direct your attention is the clause in Article II (1) which leaves it optional for Venezuela to surrender persons charged with a crime punishable with death. This is based, with the concurrence of the Home Office, on the precedent adopted in the Treaty with Roumania in 1893, of which a copy is also inclosed.

The offence of abandoning children, exposing, or unlawfully detaining them, which is not included in the Treaty with Chile, has been added, Article II (24), at the suggestion of the Chief Magistrate at Bow Street.

The circumstances which have suggested the negotiation of this Treaty, and the correspondence which has passed with the Departments concerned, will be found in the accompanying Confidential print.

The draft has been approved by the Colonial, Home, and India Offices, and I am to request that you will take it into your consideration, and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether it may properly be submitted for the acceptance of the Government of the United States of Venezuela.

I am to add that it is proposed to submit a similar draft, mutatis mutandis, for the consideration of the Government of Peru, with which State the United Kingdom has no Extradition Treaty, and where the law, in regard to capital offences, is understood to be similar to that of Venezuela.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

Draft Treaty.
Correspondence respecting a Treaty of Extradition with Venezuela	April 1901.
Extradition Treaty with Chile	January 26, 1897.
Extradition Treaty with Roumania	March 9 (21), 1893.

Report.

The only observation we have to make on the draft Treaty proposed to be entered into by His Majesty's Government and the President of the United States of Venezuela is that the English version of the IVth Article does not appear to be co-extensive with section 3 (3) of the Extradition Act of 1870. The case of a person under sentence, as well as an accused person, ought to be dealt with: the Spanish Article would appear to cover both. The phrase "under examination," moreover, does not appear the most appropriate for designating a person under accusation of crime.

Subject to these remarks, we approve the draft initialled by us.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
May 2, 1901.

1901

Annex.

Draft Treaty.

HIS Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Emperor of India, and his Excellency the President of the United States of Venezuela, having determined, by common consent, to conclude a Treaty for the extradition of criminals, have accordingly named as their Plenipotentiaries:

His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Emperor of India,

And his Excellency the President of the United States of Venezuela,

Who, after having exhibited to each other their respective full powers, and found them in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The High Contracting Parties engage to deliver up to each other, under certain circumstances and conditions stated in the present Treaty, those persons who, being accused or convicted of any of the crimes or offences enumerated in Article II, committed in the territory of the one Party, shall be found within the territory of the other Party.

ARTICLE II.

Extradition shall be reciprocally granted for the following crimes or offences:—

1. Murder (including assassination, parricide, infanticide, poisoning), or attempt or conspiracy to murder. The Venezuelan Government may, however, in its absolute discretion, refuse to deliver up any person charged with a crime punishable with death.
2. Manslaughter.
3. Administering drugs or using instruments with intent to procure the miscarriage of women.
4. Rape.
5. Carnal knowledge or any attempt to have carnal knowledge of a girl under 14 years of age, if the evidence produced justifies committal for those crimes according to the laws of both the Contracting Parties.
6. Indecent assault.
7. Kidnapping and false imprisonment, child stealing.
8. Abduction.
9. Bigamy.
10. Maliciously wounding or inflicting grievous bodily harm.
11. Assault occasioning actual bodily harm.

SU Majestad el Rey del Reino Unido de Gran Bretaña e Irlanda, Emperador de las Indias, i su Excelencia el Presidente de los Estados Unidos de Venezuela, habiendo resuelto, de comun acuerdo, ajustar un Tratado para la estradicion de los malhechores, han nombrado, a este efecto, Plenipotenciarios:

Su Majestad el Rey del Reino Unido de Gran Bretaña e Irlanda, Emperador de las Indias,

I su Excelencia el Presidente de los Estados Unidos de Venezuela,

Los cuales Plenipotenciarios, despues de haberse exhibido sus poderes, i de haberlos encontrado en buena i debida forma, han convenido en los Artículos siguientes:—

ARTICULO I.

Las Altas Partes Contratantes se comprometan a entregarse reciprocamente, en las circunstancias i condiciones espuestas en el presente Tratado, aquellas personas que, acusadas o convictas de cualquiera de los crímenes o delitos enumerados en el Artículo II, cometidos en el territorio de una de las Partes, fueran halladas dentro del territorio de la otra.

ARTICULO II.

La estradicion se concederá reciprocamente por los siguientes crímenes o delitos:—

1. Asesinato (incluso el asesinato con violencia, parricidio, infanticidio, o envenenamiento), o la tentativa o conspiracion para asesinar. Sin embargo, el Gobierno de los Estados Unidos de Venezuela puede negar la entrega, segun lo juzgue conveniente, de cualquier individuo acusado de un crímen que tenga pena de muerte.
2. Homicidio.
3. La administracion de drogas o el empleo de instrumentos con el propósito de procurar el aborto.
4. Estupro.
5. Conocimiento carnal o las tentativas de tenerlo con una niña menor de catorce años, siempre que el testimonio aducido justifique el enjuiciamiento por esos crímenes segun las leyes de las dos Altas Partes Contratantes.
6. Atentado contra el pudor.
7. Robo i secuestro de un ser humano, sustraccion de niño.
8. Rapto.
9. Bigamia.
10. Lesiones o daño corporal grave hecho intencionalmente.
11. Ataque a las personas del que resulte daño corporal.

12. Threats, by letter or otherwise, with intent to extort money or other things of value.
13. Perjury, or subornation of perjury.
14. Arson.
15. Burglary or housebreaking, robbery with violence, larceny, or embezzlement.
16. Fraud by a bailee, banker, agent, factor, trustee, director, member, or public officer of any company, punishable with imprisonment for not less than one year by any law for the time being in force.
17. Obtaining money, valuable security, or goods by false pretences; receiving any money, valuable security, or other property, knowing the same to have been stolen or unlawfully obtained.
18.—(a.) Counterfeiting or altering money, or bringing into circulation counterfeited or altered money.

    (b.) Knowingly making without lawful authority any instrument, tool, or engine adapted and intended for the counterfeiting of the coin of the realm.

    (c.) Forgery, or uttering what is forged.
19. Crimes against bankruptcy law.
20. Any malicious act done with intent to endanger the safety of any persons travelling or being upon a railway.
21. Malicious injury to property, if such offence be indictable.
22. Piracy and other crimes or offences committed at sea against persons or things which, according to the laws of the High Contracting Parties, are extradition offences, and are punishable by more than one year's imprisonment.
23. Dealing in slaves in such manner as to constitute a criminal offence against the laws of both States.
24. Abandoning children, exposing, or unlawfully detaining them.

The extradition is also to be granted for participation in any of the aforesaid crimes, provided such participation be punishable by the laws of both Contracting Parties.

Extradition may also be granted at the discretion of the State applied to in respect of any other crime for which, according to the law of both the Contracting parties for the time being in force, the grant can be made.

ARTICLE III.

Each Party reserves the right to refuse or grant the surrender of its own subjects or citizens to the other Party.

ARTICLE IV.

The extradition shall not take place if the person claimed on the part of His

12. Amenazas, ya sea por medio de cartas o de otra manera, con la intencion de sacar dinero u otros objetos de valor.
13. Perjurio, o tentativas de conseguirlo.
14. Incendio voluntario.
15. Robo, u otros crímenes, o sus tentativas, cometidos con fractura, robo con violencia, hurto i malversacion de valores públicos o particulares.
16. Fraude cometido por un depositario, banquero, ajente, comisionado, fideicomisario, director, miembro, o empleado público de cualquiera compañia, siempre que sea considerado como crímen con pena no menor de un año de prision por una lei que esté en vijencia.
17. El obtener dinero, garantias de valor, o mercaderías, con pretestos falsos; el recibir dinero, garantias de valor, u otros bienes, sabiendo que han sido robados o habidos indebidamente.
18.—(a.) Falsificacion o alteracion de moneda, circulacion de moneda falsificada o alterada.

    (b.) Fabricacion a sabiendas i sin autorizacion legal de cualquier instrumento, herramiento, o aparato adaptado i destinado a la falsificacion de la moneda nacional.

    (c.) Falsificacion o alteracion de firmas o valores, o circulacion de lo falsificado o alterado.
19. Crímenes contra las leyes de bancarrota.
20. Cualquier acto hecho con intencion criminal. i que tenga por objeto poner en peligro la seguridad de una persona que se encuentre viajando en un ferrocarril o que se halle en él.
21. Daño a la propiedad hecho con intencion criminal, siempre que la ofensa sea procesable.
22. Pirateria, i otros crímenes ó delitos cometidos en el mar sobre las personas o sobre las cosas, i que, segun las leyes respectivas de las dos Altas Partes Contratantes, sean delitos de estradicion i tengan mas de un año de pena.
23. Trata de esclavos, de manera tal que constituya una ofensa criminal contra las leyes de ambos Estados.
24. Abandono de niños, el exponerlos ó detenerlos indebidamente.

Debe tambien concederse la estradicion por la participacion en cualesquier de los precitados crímenes, siempre que esa participacion sea punible por las leyes de ambas Partes Contratantes.

Puede tambien concederse la estradicion segun lo juzgue conveniente el Estado al que se hiciere el pedido con motivo de cualquier otro crímen que, segun las leyes que estén vijentes a la sazon, dé lugar a ella.

ARTICULO III.

Cada una de las dos Altas Partes Contratantes se reserva el derecho de negar ó conceder la entrega de sus propios súbditos o ciudadanos.

ARTICULO IV.

La estradicion no tendrá lugar si el individuo reclamado por el Gobierno de Su Majestad, o

Majesty's Government, or the person claimed on the part of the Government of Venezuela, has already been tried and discharged or punished, or is still under trial in the territory of the United States of Venezuela or in the United Kingdom respectively, for the crime for which his extradition is demanded.

If the person claimed on the part of His Majesty's Government, or on the part of the Government of Venezuela, should be under examination for any other crime in the territory of the United States of Venezuela or in the United Kingdom respectively, his extradition shall be deferred until the conclusion of the trial, and the full execution of any punishment awarded to him.

ARTICLE V.

The extradition shall not take place if, subsequently to the commission of the crime, or the institution of the penal prosecution or the conviction thereon, exemption from prosecution or punishment has been acquired by lapse of time, according to the laws of the State applying or applied to.

It shall likewise not take place when, according to the law of either country, the maximum punishment for the offence is imprisonment for less than one year.

ARTICLE VI.

A fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered if the offence in respect of which his surrender is demanded is one of a political character, or if he proves that the requisition for his surrender has, in fact, been made with a view to try or punish him for an offence of a political haracter.

ARTICLE VII.

A person surrendered can in no case be kept in prison or be brought to trial in the State to which the surrender has been made, for any other crime, or on account of any other matters, than those for which the extradition shall have taken place, until he has been restored, or has had an opportunity of returning, to the State by which he has been surrendered.

This stipulation does not apply to crimes committed after the extradition.

ARTICLE VIII.

The requisition for extradition shall be made through the Diplomatic Agents of the High Contracting Parties respectively.

The requisition for the extradition of an accused person must be accompanied by a warrant of arrest issued by the competent authority of the State requiring the extradition, and by such evidence as, according to the laws of the place where the accused is found, would justify his arrest if the crime had been committed there.

If the requisition relates to a person already convicted, it must be accompanied by the el individuo reclamado por el Gobierno de Venezuela, ya hubiese sido enjuiciado i puesto en libertad o castigado, o continuará procesado en el territorio de los Estados Unidos de Venezuela o en el Reino Unido respectivamente, por el crímen por el que se demande su estradicion.

Si el individuo reclamado por el Gobierno de Su Majestad, o por el Gobierno de Venezuela, estuviera detenido por cualquier otro crímen en el territorio de las Estados Unidos de Venezuela o en el Reino Unido respectivamente, su estradicion será aplazada hasta la terminacion del juicio i la completa ejecucion del castigo que le fué impuesto.

ARTICULO V.

La estradicion no tendrá lugar si, despues de cometido el crímen o de instituida la acusacion criminal o de condenado el reó, surjierá la prescripcion, segun las leyes del Estado requerido ó requiriente.

No tendrá igualmente lugar cuando, segun la lei de cada pais, la mas alta pena del delito sea menor de un año de prision.

ARTICULO VI.

Un criminal fugado no será entregado si el delito por el cual se solicita su estradicion es de carácter político, o si dicho criminal prueba que el pedido estradicion se ha hecho en realidad con la mira de enjuiciarlo por un delito de carácter político.

ARTICULO VII.

Un individuo entregado no puede en caso alguno ser detenido ni enjuiciado en el Estado al que se haga la entrega, por otro crímen o por otros asuntos que no sean aquellos que hayan motivado la estradicion, hasta tanto que haya sido devuelto, o haya tenido una oportunidad de regresar el Estado que lo entregare.

Esta estipulacion no es aplicable a crímenes cometidos despues de la estradicion.

ARTICULO VIII.

La requisitoria para la estradicion se hará por los Ajentes Diplomáticos de las Altas Partes Contratantes respectivamente.

La requisitoria para la estradicion de un individuo acusado ha de ser acompañada de órden de prision, dada por autoridad competente del Estado que requiera la estradicion, i de aquellas pruebas que, segun las leyes del lugar donde sea hallado el acusado, justificarían su prision si el crímen hubiese sido cometido allí.

Si la requisitoria se relaciona con persona ya condenada, deberá venir acompañada de la sentence of condemnation passed against the convicted person by the competent Court of the State that makes the requisition for extradition.

A sentence passed in contumaciam is not to be deemed a conviction, but a person so sentenced may be dealt with as an accused person.

ARTICLE IX.

If the requisition for extradition be in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the competent authorities of the State applied to shall proceed to the arrest of the fugitive.

ARTICLE X.

A criminal fugitive may be apprehended under a warrant issued by any Police Magistrate, Justice of Peace, or other competent authority in either country, on such information or complaint, and such evidence, or after such proceedings, as would, in the opinion of the authority issuing the warrant, justify the issue of a warrant if the crime had been committed or the person convicted in that part of the dominions of the two Contracting Parties in which the Magistrate, Justice of Peace, or other competent authority exercises jurisdiction; provided, however, that in the United Kingdom the accused shall, in such case, be sent as speedily as possible before a Police Magistrate in London. He shall, in accordance with this Article, be discharged, as well in the United States of Venezuela as in the United Kingdom, if within the term of ninety days a requisition for extradition shall not have been made by the Diplomatic Agent of the demanding country in accordance with the stipulations of this Treaty. The same rule shall apply to the cases of persons accused or convicted of any of the crimes or offences specified in this Treaty, and committed on the high seas on board any vessel of either country which may come into a port of the other.

ARTICLE XI.

The extradition shall take place only if the evidence be found sufficient, according to the laws of the State applied to, either to justify the committal of the prisoner for trial, in case the crime had been committed in the territory of the same State, or to prove that the prisoner is the identical person convicted by the Courts of the State which makes the requisition, and that the crime of which he has been convicted is one in respect of which extradition could, at the time of such conviction, have been granted by the State applied to; and no criminal shall be surrendered until after the expiration of fifteen days from the date of his committal to prison to await the warrant for his surrender.

ARTICLE XII.

In the examinations which they may have to make in accordance with the foregoing stipulations, the authorities of the State applied to sentencia condenatoria dictada contra la persona condenada por el Tribunal competente del Estado que haya la requisitoria para la estradicion.

Una sentencia dictada en rebeldia no ha de reputarse condenatoria, pero a una persona asi sentenciada puede trátarsele como a persona acusada.

ARTICULO IX.

Si la requisitoria para la estradicion está de acuerdo con las precedentes estipulaciones, las autoridades competentes del Estado requerido procederán a la prision del fujitivo.

ARTICULO X.

Puede prenderse a un criminal fujitivo en virtud de un mandato de prision, dictado por cualquier Juez de Instruccion o de Paz u otra autoridad competente en cualquiera de los dos paises, mediante aquellas pruebas, informes o denuncias, i aquellos procedimientos, que en la opinion de la autoridad que dé el mandato justificarían análogo mandato si el crímen se hubiera cometido o la persona hubiera sido condenada en aquella parte de los dominios de las dos Partes Contratantes donde ejerza jurisdiccion el Juez de Instruccion o de Paz u otra autoridad competente; bajo la condicion, sin embargo, que en el Reino Unido el acusado a de ser remitido en tal caso, a la mayor brevedad, a Lóndres, a disposicion de algun Juez de Instruccion. De conformidad con este Artículo, el acusado será puesto en libertad, tanto en los Estados Unidos de Venezuela como en el Reino Unido, si dentro del plazo de noventa dias no hubiera hecho una requisitoria para la estradicion el Ajente Diplomático del pais que la requiera de acuerdo con las estipulaciones de este Tratado. La misma regla se aplicará a los casos de personas acusadas o condenadas por cualquiera de los crímenes o delitos especificados en el presente Tratado, i que se hubieran cometido en alta mar a bordo de un buque de cualquiera de los dos paises que entrase en un puerto del otro.

ARTICULO XI.

Solo tendrá lugar la estradicion en el caso de hallarse suficiente el testimonio, segun las leyes del pais requerido, ya sea para justificar el enjuiciamiento en el caso de se que hubiera cometido el crímen en el territorio del mismo Estado, ya sea para comprobar la identidad del preso como la persona condenada por los Tribunales del Estado que hace la requisitoria, i que el crímen por el que se le haya condenado es de aquellos con motivo de los cuales podria, en la época de dicha condenacion, haberse concedido la estradicion por el Estado requerido; i ningun criminal será entregado hasta despues de pasados quince dias, contados desde la fecha de su encarcelacion para esperar la órden de su entrega.

ARTICULO XII.

En los exámenes que deben practicar de conformidad con las precedentes estipulaciones, las autoridades del Estado requerido aceráptan hall admit as valid evidence the sworn depositions or the affirmations of witnesses taken in the other State, or copies thereof, and likewise the warrants and sentences issued therein, and certificates of, or judicial documents stating the fact of a conviction, provided the same are authenticated as follows:—

1901

1. A warrant must purport to be signed by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the other State.

2. Depositions or affirmations, or the copies thereof, must purport to be certified, under the hand of a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the other State, to be the original depositions or affirmations, or to be true copies thereof, as the case may require.

3. A certificate of, or judicial document stating the fact of a conviction must purport to be certified by a Judge, Magistrate, or officer of the other State.

4. In every case such warrant, deposition, affirmation, copy, certificate, or judicial document must be authenticated, either by the oath of some witness, or by being sealed with the official seal of the Minister of Justice, or some other Minister of the other State; but any other mode of authentication for the time being permitted by the law of the country where the examination is taken may be substituted for the foregoing.

como testimonio válido las deposiciones juramentadas o las afirmaciones de testigos tomadas en el otro Estado, o copia de ellas, i tambien las órdenes de prision i sentencias allí dictadas i certificadas del hecho de una condena o documentos judiciales que lo declaren, con tal que estén autenticados como sigue:—

1. Una órden de prision debe aparecer firmada por algun Juez, Majistrado, o empleado del otro Estado.

2. Las deposiciones o afirmaciones, o las copias de éstas, deben demostrar que certifican, mediante la firma de algun Juez, Majistrado, o empleado del otro Estado, ser las deposiciones o afirmaciones orijinales, o copias fieles de ellas, segun lo requiera el caso.

3. Un certificado del hecho de una condena o documento judicial que la declare, debe demostrar que está otorgada por algun Juez, Majistrado, o empleado del otro Estado.

4. En todos los casos dicha órden, deposicion, afirmacion, copia, certificado, o documento judicial debe autenticarse, ya sea mediante juramento de algun testigo, ya sea mediante el sello oficial del Ministro de Justicia, o de algun otro Ministro del otro Estado; pero cualquiera otra manera de autenticar que esté permitida a la sazon por la lei del pais donde se practique el exámen puede sustituirse a las precedentes.

ARTICLE XIII.

If the individual claimed by one of the High Contracting Parties, in pursuance of the present Treaty, should be also claimed by one or several other Powers on account of other crimes or offences committed upon their respective territories, his extradition shall be granted to the State whose demand is earliest in date.

ARTICULO XIII.

Si el individuo reclamado por una de las Altas Partes Contratantes, conforme al presente Tratado, tambien lo fuera por otra u otras Potencias con motivo de otros crímenes o delitos cometidos en sus respectivos territorios, se concederá la estradicion al Estado cuya requisicion fuere de fecha mas antigua.

ARTICLE XIV.

If sufficient evidence for the extradition be not produced within two months from the date of the apprehension of the fugitive, or within such further time as the State applied to, or the proper Tribunal thereof shall direct, the fugitive shall be set at liberty.

ARTICULO XIV.

Si no se exhibiera testimonio bastante para la estradicion dentro de los dos meses despues de la fecha en que se prendió al fujitivo, o dentro del nuevo plazo que designe el Estado requerido o el correspondiente Tribunal del mismo, el fujitivo será puesto en libertad.

ARTICLE XV.

All articles seized which were in the possession of the person to be surrendered at the time of his apprehension shall, if the competent authority of the State applied to for the extradition has ordered the delivery of such articles, be given up when the extradition takes place; and the said delivery shall extend not merely to the stolen articles, but to everything that may serve as a proof of the crime.

ARTICULO XV.

Todo objeto que esté en posesion del individuo que haya de entregarse i que se le tome al tiempo de prenderlo, será entregado al efectuarse la estradicion si la autoridad competente del Estado requerido para la estradicion ha ordenado la entrega de dichos objetos; i dicha entrega se hará estensiva no solo a los objetos robados, sino a cualquier otro que pueda servir de comprobante del crímen.

ARTICLE XVI.

All expenses connected with extradition shall be borne by the demanding State.

ARTICULO XVI.

Todos los gastos que ocasione la estradicion estarán a cargo del Estado que la requiera.

ARTICLE XVII.

The stipulation of the present Treaty shall be applicable to the Colonies and foreign possessions of His Britannic Majesty, so far as the laws in such Colonies and foreign possessions respectively will allow.

The requisition for the surrender of a fugitive criminal, who has taken refuge in any of such Colonies or foreign possessions, shall be made to the Governor or chief authority of such Colony or possession by the chief Consular officer of the United States of Venezuela in such Colony or possession.

Such requisition may be disposed of, subject always, as nearly as may be, and so far as the law of such Colony or foreign possession will allow, to the provisions of this Treaty, by the said Governor or chief authority, who, however, shall be at liberty either to grant the surrender or to refer the matter to his Government.

His Britannic Majesty shall, however, be at liberty to make special arrangements in the British Colonies and foreign possessions for the surrender of Venezuelan criminals who may take refuge within such Colonies and foreign possessions, on the basis, so far as the law of such Colony or foreign possession will allow, of the provisions of the present Treaty.

Requisitions for the surrender of a fugitive criminal emanating from any Colony or foreign possession of His Britannic Majesty shall be governed by Rules laid down in the preceding Articles of the present Treaty.

ARTICULO XVII.

Las estipulaciones del presente Tratado se aplicarán a las Colonias i posesiones esteriores de Su Majestad Británica, en cuanto lo permitan las leyes de dichas Colonias i posesiones esteriores.

La requisitoria para la entrega de un criminal fujitivo, refujiado en dichas Colonias o posesiones esteriores, será hecha al Gobernador o autoridad principal de dicha Colònia o posesion por el Ajente principal Consular de los Estados Unidos de Venezuela en dicha Colonia o posesion.

Conocerá de dicha requisitoria, sujetándose siempre, en cuanto le sea dado, i en cuanto lo permitan las leyes de dicha Colonia o posesion esterior, a las prescripciones de este Tratado, dicho Gobernador o autoridad principal, el cual tendrá, sin embargo, la facultad o bien de conceder la entrega o de referir el asunto a su Gobierno.

Su Majestad Británica tendrá, no obstante, la facultad de hacer arreglos especiales en las Colonias i posesiones esteriores Británicas para la entrega de criminales Venezolanos que se refujien en dichas Colonias i posesiones esterioros, sobre la base, en cuanto lo permita la lei de dicha Colonia o posesion esterior, de las estipulaciones del presente Tratado.

Las requisitorias para la entrega de un criminal fujitivo que emanen de alguna Colonia o posesion esterior de Su Majestad Británica serán rejidas por las reglas sentadas en los precedentes Artículos del presente Tratado.

ARTICLE XVIII.

The present Treaty shall come into force ten days after its publication in conformity with the forms prescribed by the laws of the High Contracting Parties. It may be terminated by either of the High Contracting Parties by a notice not exceeding one year, and not less than six months.

It shall be ratified, after receiving the approval of the Congress of the United States of Venezuela, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at as soon as possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and affixed thereto their respective seals.

Done at , in the year .

ARTICULO XVIII.

El presente Tratado entrará en vigor diez dias despues de publicado, conforme a las formas prescritas por las leyes de las Altas Partes Contratantes. Podrá darlo por terminado cualquiera de las Altas Partes Contratantes prévio aviso que no pase de un año i no baje de seis meses.

El Tratado, despues de aprobado por el Congreso de los Estados Unidos de Venezuela, será ratificado, i las ratificaciones serán canjeadas en a la brevedad posible.

En fe de lo cual los respectivos Plenipotenciarios lo han firmado, i le han puesto sus sellos respectivos.

Hecho en , del año .

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

1901

No. 40.

[June 8, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, May 31, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Draft Extradition Treaty with Venezuela, Article IV.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to inclose, for your consideration, the accompanying correspondence which has passed with the Home Office relative to the IVth Article of the proposed Treaty of Extradition between this country and the Republic of Venezuela. This matter formed the subject of your Report of the 2nd instant, a printed copy of which is also inclosed for convenience of reference.

The additional words relating to sentence under a conviction which you considered necessary in order to make the Article coextensive with section 3 (3) of "The Extradition Act, 1870," have been inserted in the draft, and, subject to your concurrence, the amended phraseology proposed by the Chief Magistrate will be adopted for the final portion of the Article.

In view, however, of Sir Franklin Lushington's observations, Lord Lansdowne would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to whether the expression "under examination" should be retained, or whether the alternative expression "under process" should preferably be adopted.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

List of Papers.

To Home Office (Inclosure.)	May 9, 1901.
Home Office	May 23, „
Law Officers' Report	May 2, „

Report.

We think the expression "under process" instead of "under examination" would be an improvement, and we would advise its insertion in Article IV of the proposed Treaty. We see no objection to the amended phraseology proposed by the Chief Magistrate for the final portion of the Article.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 8, 1901.

ZANZIBAR.

No. 41.

[December 31, 1901.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, December 12, 1901.

Gentlemen,

Germany-Zanzibar Treaty: date of expiration.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers, as marked on the accompanying list, relative to the proposed revision of the Treaty of Commerce between Germany and Zanzibar, signed on the 20th December, 1885, and ratified on the 5th July of the following year.

The XXIVth Article of the above Treaty (Document 1) contains the following provisions:—

"After the expiration of fifteen years, to commence from the day of ratification of this Treaty, it shall be competent for the High Contracting Parties to move for a revision of the present Treaty in order to allow of such alterations, additions, and amendments being made as experience may have shown to be necessary or desirable.

"Such a motion must, however, be notified one year previous to the expiration of the present Treaty, otherwise the Treaty will be considered as tacitly prolonged for a further term of ten years."

You reported to the Marquess of Salisbury on the 28th June, 1900 (Document 2) that the notification of a motion for a revision of the Treaty under Article XXIV would, if no agreement were come to, operate so as to prevent the Treaty from being tacitly prolonged for the further term of ten years, and that, although there is no express provision that the Treaty was only to last for fifteen years, it is provided by implication.

On the 3rd July, 1900, Lord Salisbury accordingly instructed Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin to move the German Government for a revision of the Treaty. The German Government then inquired (see Lord Gough, No. 110, Africa, of the 26th July, 1900, Document 3) as to the points on which the Government of Zanzibar desired a revision of the Treaty of 1885, and on the 5th June last (see to Sir F. Lascelles, No. 101, Africa, of the 5th June, 1901, Document 4) Lord Lansdowne instructed Sir F. Lascelles to communicate to the German Government a draft Agreement to take the place of the Treaty of 1885. This Agreement was intended to place Germany on the same commercial and judicial footing as the Protecting Power. The German Government replied (see Lord Gough's No. 79, of the 20th July, 1901, Document 5) that the Treaty of 1885 is still in force, notwithstanding the notification made by Her Majesty's Government on the 3rd July, 1900, that the Treaty was made for twenty-five years, and that Article XXIV gives to both parties only the right to propose a revision after the first fifteen years.

To this despatch Lord Lansdowne answered (see his despatch to Sir F. Lascelles, No. 140, of the 31st July, 1901, Document 6) that His Majesty's Government were quite unable to admit that Article XXIV of the Treaty could be so interpreted.

According to the view of His Majesty's Government, the motion or notice under the Article referred to having been given, it cannot be contended that the Treaty has been "tacitly prolonged for a further term of ten years," and the contingency contemplated by the Article, viz., "expiration," has therefore, in fact, occurred. His Majesty's Government, however, in order to give to the German Government full opportunity for considering the terms of the draft Agreement, had previously offered to prolong the Treaty of 1885 for three months from the 5th July, 1901. The German Government had, however, stated that this term was hardly sufficient for even obtaining a concurrence of opinion between the Departments of the Empire concerned, and expressed a doubt whether "the replacement of the old Treaty by an entirely new one could be regarded as a revision in the sense of Article XXIV of the Treaty of 1885." His Majesty's Government informed the German Government that they were quite willing to allow sufficient time within reasonable limits for the consideration by the German Government of their proposals. His Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin was also instructed to point out to the German Government, with reference to their reading of Article XXIV, that power to revise a Treaty without power to terminate it if revision fails is a nugatory and useless provision. If both parties wish to revise a Treaty in a certain sense they can so revise it at any time, and in such case it is not necessary to make provision, as was done in the Treaty of 1885, for such revision.

In their reply (see Sir F. Lascelles' No. 114, of the 11th October, 1901, Document 7) the German Government contend that—

1. The Treaty of 1885 with Zanzibar was concluded for twenty-five years.

2. That the Treaty remains in force at any rate until the Treaty in its new form agreed upon on the basis of the negotiations for its revision has come into operation.

3. That revision clauses frequently occur in Treaties with non-Christian States, even though the termination of the Treaty is not attached to its revision.

4. That in Great Britain's Treaties with Morocco and Tunis it is explicitly provided that the old Treaty continues to exist in full force until the revision has been concluded with the consent of both, and a new Convention has been negotiated and has entered into operation. In the opinion of the German Government the use of the expression occurring in Article XXIV paragraph 6, of the Treaty, "expiration of the present Treaty," does not affect the question. As there is no mention in the whole Treaty of a right of denunciation on the part of the Contracting Parties, and as paragraph 6 of Article XXIV has reference to the preceding paragraph, the words "expiration of the present Treaty," should rather be regarded as another rendering of the expression used in the preceding paragraph, viz., expiration of fifteen years.

1901

A Memorandum with regard to the intention of the Treaty by Sir John Kirk, by whom it was negotiated on behalf of the German Government, formerly His Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar, is inclosed for convenience of reference (see Sir J. Kirk's Memorandum of the 28th October, 1901, Document 8); as also a Memorandum by the Librarian to this Department on the precedents cited in the German reply (see Mr. Oakes' Memorandum of the 18th October, 1901, put up with Sir F. Lascelles' No. 114, of the 11th October, 1901, Document 7).

I have the honour to request you to take this letter and the papers sent therewith into your consideration, and to favour the Secretary of State with your opinion as to the validity of the contentions of the German Government as regards the Treaty with Zanzibar of 1885, and also with any other observations which you may desire to offer.

The reference of the 14th June, 1900 (printed with Document 2), in reply to which you made your Report of the 28th June, 1900, is inclosed, as are also (in a separate bundle) the papers which were submitted to you with that reference.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

1.	German-Zanzibar Treaty, 1885.		June 28, 1900.
2.	Law Officers	(No. 110)	July 26, ,,
3.	Viscount Gough	(No. 101)	June 5, 1901.
4.	To Sir F. Lascelles	(No. 70)	July 20, ,,
5.	Lord Gough	(No. 140)	July 31, ,,
6.	To Sir F. Lascelles	(No. 114)	October 11, ,,
7.	Sir F. Lascelles		October 28, ,,
8.	Sir J. Kirk

Report.

In our opinion the contention of the German Government on the construction of Article XXIV of the Treaty with Zanzibar is not valid.

The question is as to the effect of the wording of this Article, and this is not affected by the fact that Articles in other Treaties are differently worded. The precedents cited by the German Government have no relevance beyond showing that, as clauses with the effect for which they contend have often been entered into, their construction cannot be said to render the Article nugatory and idle.

But the question remains, what is the effect of this Article? Upon this point we adhere to the view which we have already expressed. We think that the Article expresses what—according to Sir John Kirk—was the intention of those who settled the Treaty. We have only to add that this conclusion seems to follow from the view put forward in the last sentence of the German despatch of the 10th October last that the words, "expiration of the present Treaty," are to be regarded as a mere paraphrase ("Umschreibung") of the words "expiration of fifteen years" occurring in the previous sentence. If these expressions can be regarded in this light, it follows that the Treaty contemplates the expiration of the Treaty at the end of fifteen years, and the two expressions are different ways of saying the same thing.

The plain meaning of the Article seems to us to be that contended for by His Majesty's Government.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
E. CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
December 31, 1901.

1902

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

Printed for the use of the Foreign Office. October 1903.

CONFIDENTIAL.

(8022.)

REPORTS

BY THE

LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN, &c.

1902.

1902

LIST OF REPORTS.

(Arranged according to Countries.)

NOTE.—The Reports not addressed to the Foreign Office are marked 3A, &c.

ABYSSINIA.

No.		Date.	SUBJECT.	Page
1	Law Officers	Nov. 17, 1902	Jibuti–Harrar Railway Concession. Monopoly precludes Menelek from sanctioning competing line. Discussing circumstances in which it may properly be cancelled	1

AFRICA.

No.		Date.	SUBJECT.	Page
2	Law Officers	Jan. 6, 1902	M. van Beijnum, a Dutchman aiding Boers against United Kingdom by accepting civil employment, was properly made a prisoner of war. No claim to compensation. As to his nationality	4
3	Law Officers	Mar. 31,	Opening of letters in transit through British South African Colonies under martial law. Provisions of Postal Convention are applicable only to a state of peace, otherwise the right should be exercised with forbearance. Those containing dangerous matter may be detained	6
3A	Law Officers to Colonial Office	May 30,	Exercise of martial law and mode of disposing of Boer prisoners in South Africa, &c. Reasons why proceedings should be legalized by an Imperial Act. Position of such prisoners after the war	7
4	Law Officers	June 4,	M. van Beijnum. Reasons of military necessity may justify the arrest, detention, and removal of any person identified with the enemy, even if not with their army. Was properly treated as a burgher, and has no claim to compensation	10
5	Law Officers	June 5,	Draft British Central Africa Orders in Council. Approving, subject to observations. Other Orders should be assimilated thereto	11
6	Law Officers	June 7,	Draft East Africa Protectorates Order in Council [Courts of Appeal]. Approving	17
7	Law Officers	June 10,	French prisoners of war in Ceylon. Not desirable that foreign prisoners should be allowed to return to South Africa. No liability to Portugal for maintenance of Boers interned in Portuguese territory	19
7A	Law Officers to Colonial Office	June 30,	Return to South Africa of prisoners of war and others. As to procedure proper in the case of foreigners and of burghers who have not lost their German or other nationality of origin	23

No.		Date.	SUBJECT.	Page
8	Law Officers	Oct. 10, 19 2	Claim of Oost-Afrikaansche Compagnie for rent for occupation of premises by troops during Boer war. His Majesty's Government need give compensation only ex gratia	24
9	Law Officers	Nov. 18,	Bishops of Uganda, Mombasa, and Zanzibar. Warrant settling new areas of jurisdiction need not be addressed to Archbishop of Canterbury, and should conform to precedent. One warrant enough	26
10	Law Officers	Dec. 8,	D. O. Galmore-Greene's spurious letters about Somaliland expedition. Newspaper need not, in the circumstances, be prosecuted. It is not a case of seditious libel resulting in serious public detriment	27

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

No.		Date.	SUBJECT.	Page
11	Law Officers	July 19, 1902	Act imposing certain duties in India on bounty-fed sugar until Brussels Convention comes into force. Approving note to Austro-Hungarian Ambassador with addition of paragraph	29
12	Law Officers	Sept. 5,	Declaration amending Extradition Treaty with Austria-Hungary. Approving Order in Council to give effect to	31
13	Law Officers	Nov. 13,	Article by Sir Horace Rumbold, a retired Diplomatic Officer, in the "National Review." Cannot recommend prosecution under Official Secrets Act. His position of Privy Councillor in this connection	33

BELGIUM.

No.		Date.	SUBJECT.	Page
14	Law Officers	Jan. 24, 1902	Extradition Treaty with Belgium. Approving draft Order in Council to give effect to	34

BORNEO.

No.		Date.	SUBJECT.	Page
14A	Law Officers to Colonial Office	Aug. 11, 1902	"Lorna Doone" and other vessels of Rajah of Sarawak are public ships, even when engaged in trade, which is ancillary to their use as despatch-vessels and transports	35

CHINA.

No.		Date.	SUBJECT.	Page
15	Law Officers	Jan. 24, 1902	Whangpoo River Conservancy Board. Approving draft Order in Council as to constitution of	36
16	Law Officers	Mar. 26,	"Kowshing" arbitration. Recital in Protocol that she was to blame for consequences may be omitted. Doubtful whether this will affect question of responsibility of "Naniwa"	37
17	Law Officers	June 3,	A. F. Bott and Co.'s claim for damages during Boxer rising. Have no materials for revising Mr. H. P. Wilkinson's decision. Not entirely to be settled by legal considerations	39

1902

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
18	Law Officers	June 3, 1902	Overlapping claim of J. A. Hay and Eastern Pioneer Company for losses during Boxer rising. Action should be suspended pending report. Both parties should be heard	41
18A	Law Officers to War Office	June 30,	Jurisdiction of Consular Courts over military forces in occupation. Opinions	42
19	Law Officers	July 3,	A. F. Bott and Co.'s claim in connection with the Boxer rising. Have no objection to their opinion being communicated to their solicitors	43

COLOMBIA.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
20	Law Officers	Mar. 19, 1902	"Ban Righ" (now "Bolivar"). Misuse of British flag would render her liable to seizure. She is ostensibly a Colombian man-of-war and His Majesty's Government is not liable for any depredation committed by her. She should not be allowed to coal or fit out in British ports, or use them as a base of operations, as she is engaged in irregular operations	44

EGYPT.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
21	Law Officers	Dec. 16, 1902	Position of Egypt in regard to Commercial Treaties between Turkey and foreign Powers (Customs arrangements between Egypt and Persia). Separate opinions as to effect of Firmans	49

FRANCE.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
22	Law Officers	Jan. 13, 1902	Waima Arbitration. [Collision on Anglo-French frontier in West Africa.] Approving British reply to French answer to British Case	52
23	Law Officers	Feb. 13,	Messrs. Holt's trading rights in French Congo. Adhering to their opinion relative to judgment of Court. Equitable compensation might be demanded. Adhere to views as to trading rights in free trade zone	55
24	Law Officers	Feb. 14,	Seven Stones, uncovered only at low water, and not otherwise in territorial waters. French vessels cannot be prevented from fishing at or from selling fish in British ports. Approving draft letter to Mr. Dorrien Smith	57
25	Law Officers	Apr. 7,	Murderers of Captain Keyes. Condition on which they may be surrendered to French authorities for trial. Conviction on British soil should not be a bar to their trial by French authorities	59
26	Law Officers	May 27,	Murderers of Captain C. V. Keyes. Assurances of French Government respecting trial of satisfactory. Approving Proclamation. Remarks as to evidence on "Commissions Rogatoires" and place of trial	60
27	Law Officers	June 7,	Claim of Niger Company on French Government on account of services to the "Ardent," and counter-claim owing to raid by Brassmen on Akassa and respecting treatment of "Fuji." Approving Memorandum for French Government	62

GENERAL.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
28	Law Officers	Jan. 27, 1902	Laurence Cowen v. "Truth" libel action. Foreign Office papers may be produced at trial	65
28A	Law Officers to Colonial Office	July 23,	Surrender of merchant seamen deserters. Nothing in Australian "Immigration Restriction Act, 1901," which conflicts with Treaties concluded under section 238 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894"	66
29	Law Officers	Sept. 4,	East Africa Protectorate Marriage Ordinance. Approving as altered	66
29A	Law Officers to Home Office	Dec. 9, 1902	Grandson born abroad of naturalized British subject. Opinion as to national status of	66 A

GREECE.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
30	Law Officers	May 5, 1902	Marriage of W. J. Whitfield to Miss E. Preiswerk (a Swiss) at Syra according to rites of Church of England. Consider it valid [though not under "Foreign Marriage Act, 1892"]	67

JAPAN.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
30A	Law Officers to Colonial Office	Mar. 11, 1902	Anglo-Japanese Treaty of 1894. Not determined as regards Queensland by its entry into Australian Commonwealth. Mode in which notice to terminate should be given. Australian Immigration Act conflicts with Treaty. Bearing of Protocol of 1897	70
30B	Law Officers to Colonial Office	Apr. 16,	Position of Queensland on entry into Commonwealth Government as regards Japanese immigrants. Conflict of legislation with Treaty of 1894. Bearing of Treaty with United States of America of 1815. How conflict of Act with Treaty can be avoided	72

PACIFIC ISLANDS.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
31	Law Officers	Feb. 20, 1902	Convention for settlement by arbitration of claims arising out of military operations in Samoa in 1899. Approving Counter-Case of His Majesty's Government	73

RUSSIA.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
32	Law Officers	July 23, 1902	Application in India of special clauses of Brussels Sugar Convention to Russian sugar. Approving reply to protest	74
33	Law Officers	Nov. 18,	Russian protest against application of penal clause to their sugar. Approve reply to Russian Memorandum	76

1902

SIAM.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
33A	Law Officers to Colonial Office	Apr. 9, 1902	Extradition between Federated Malay States and Siam. Difficulty owing to the peculiar position of subjects of former when in Siam. Opinion on the draft Agreement ..	78
34	Law Officers ..	Dec. 3,	Siam Order in Council. Approving draft of	79

VENEZUELA.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
35	Law Officers ..	Apr. 1, 1902	"Bolivar" should not be allowed to refit in British Colony unless she is a Colombian public vessel not engaged in irregular hostilities against Venezuela..	80
36	Law Officers ..	Apr. 3 to 5,	"Bolivar" or "Ban Righ." Arms from should not be conveyed in British vessel to Colombian port until her character is ascertained. She must not be towed to such port by British vessel	81
37	Law Officers ..	Apr. 15,	"Bolivar" or "Ban Righ" at Trinidad. Action of Governor approved. May be towed away or arms removed from by a Colombian man-of-war	82
38	Law Officers ..	May 14,	If Colombian man-of-war leaves Port of Spain with or without the "Bolivar," she should have twenty-four hours' start of Venezuelan vessel, to be effected by arrangement, not force. No hostilities to occur in British territorial waters	83
39	Law Officers ..	June 19,	"Libertador" (alias "Bolivar," alias "Ban Righ"). Assurances as to character sufficient. She may refit in Port of Spain, and proceed thereafter to Colombia	84
40	Law Officers .	July 16,	Blockade of Orinoco is valid if effective. Blockade of mouths does not affect upper parts. Bearing of Award of British Guiana Arbitration on freedom of navigation of Bârima and Amacura. Privateers cannot generally enforce blockades	85
41	Law Officers ..	Oct. 1,	Blockade of Orinoco. As to how far insurgents can claim recognition as belligerents. Extent to which His Majesty's Government should grant such recognition and observe neutrality. Attitude of other Powers..	87

ZANZIBAR.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
42	Law Officers .	Feb. 7, 1902	Commercial Treaty between Germany and Zanzibar of 1885. Approving draft despatch to Sir F. Lascelles as to date of termination and as to revision of	90
43	Law Officers ..	Mar. 11,	Rights of His Majesty's Consul-General to grant permits to search the houses of British subjects not affected by the Zanzibar Order in Council, 1897. Matter not one for Courts	91
44	Law Officers ..	April 11,	Leases and Concessions of land to foreigners in Zanzibar mainland dominions. They cannot be made to submit to British jurisdiction. Case of Reich exceptional. Cannot ask them to contract themselves out of their Treaty rights..	93
45	Law Officers ..	June 4,	Revision and termination of German-Zanzibar Treaty. Adhere to their former opinion. Suggesting mode of overcoming difficulty	95
46	Law Officers	July 2,	Status of children born after 1899 on Zanzibar mainland. No legislation necessary to render them freeborn	97
47	Law Officers ..	Dec. 19, 1902	Draft Supplementary Zanzibar Order in Council. Approving, except Article as to King's Regulations overruling Acts applicable to Zanzibar	98

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

(Names and Subjects.)

1902.

[The figures refer to the numbers of the pages.]

ABY—BER.

A.

Abyssinia. See Railway.
Act to legalize martial law proceedings, 7–9.
,, See Berlin Act.
,, Australian. See Immigration.
,, Official Secrets. Proposed prosecution under, 33.
,, See Foreign Enlistment.
Africa (East) Order in Council, 11–17.
,, (British Central) ditto, 12–17.
,, Court of Appeal, 17, 18.
Akassa raids. French claims on account of, 62–64.
Allegiance, oath of, for Boer prisoners, 20, 21.
Appeal Court in East Africa, 17, 18.
Arbitration. Sinking of "Kowshing" by Japanese cruiser. Modification of Protocol respecting, 37, 38.
,, Anglo-French collision at Waima, 52–54.
,, Losses during military operations in Samoa, 73, 74.
Asylum. Combatants seeking in neutral country, 19–23.
Australian Immigration Act. Effect of on Treaties respecting seamen deserters, &c., 66, 70–73.
,, Commonwealth. Formation of. Effect on Treaty with Japan, 70–73.
,, ,, Effect on foreign relations of Queensland, 70–73.
Austria-Hungary. See Sugar bounties.
,, Extradition Treaty with, 31, 32.

B.

"Ban Righ" (see also "Bolivar"). Fitting out against Venezuela, 44–48.
,, Question of ownership and flag, 44–48.
,, How to be treated if met by British war vessel, 45.
,, Reason for non-interference with, 48.
,, is Colombian. Not to use British ports, though hostilities are irregular. 48.
Beijnum, M. van, 4, 5, 10, 11.
Belgium. Draft Extradition Treaty with, 34.
Belligerents interned in neutral State. See Portugal.
,, Recognition of Venezuelan insurgents as, 85–89.
Berlin Act (Freedom of Trade) violated in French Congo. See Holt and Co.

BIS—CEY

Berlin Act. Claims on account of raids in Niger preferred under, 64.
Bishops in certain Protectorates. Rearrangement of limits, 26, 27.
,, ,, Mode of drawing up warrants, 26, 27.
Blockade of Orinoco. As to inclusion of Barima and Amacura, 85–89.
,, ,, Bearing of Award of Guiana Boundary Tribunal, 85–87.
,, ,, Conditions necessary to render valid, 86, 87.
,, ,, Privateers may be employed, 88, 89.
,, ,, Free navigation of Barima prescribed only for peace conditions, 85–87.
Boer War. See War, Prisoners, Neutrals, &c.
Boers interned in Portugal during war. Expenses of, 19–23.
,, As to their repatriation, 19–23.
,, Conditions of return to homes after war, 19–23.
,, Foreigners serving with. Position of after war. 19–23.
,, See also Prisoners of War.
"Bolivar" (see "Ban Righ" also).
,, Case of hostilities between Colombia and Venezuela.
,, Assurances before refitting in British port, 81, 82, 84, 85.
,, Not to be towed by British steamer to Colombian port, 81.
,, Disposal of arms from, &c., when in British port, 81–83.
,, As to collision with Venezuelan vessel in British waters, 82.
,, As to towing, by Colombian vessel, from British waters, 83.
,, Should be given start of Venezuelan vessel, 84.
Bott, A. F., 39–41, 43.
Bounties opposed to most-favoured-nation treatment, 31.
,, Countervailing duties in India. See Sugar.
Bourbaki, General, 21
Boxer rising. Claims arising out of, 39–43.
,, See Bott, A. F., and Hay, J. A.

C.

Censorship of letters in Cape Colony during Boer War, 6, 7.
Ceylon. See Prisoners of War kept in.

1902

CHI—EXT.

China. Claims for damages during Boxer rising, 39–43.
Claims, English and German, after military operations in Samoa, 73, 74.
„ Expenses of Boer combatants interned in Portugal, 19–23.
„ for rent of premises occupied by troops during war, 24–26.
„ for sinking of vessel. See "Kowshing."
„ arising out of Boxer rising, 39–43.
„ in event suspected vessel commits depredations, 45.
„ Anglo-French collision at Waima, 52–54.
„ Trading rights in French Congo. See Holt and Co.
„ Niger Company and French Government. Goods supplied to "Ardent," 62–64.
„ Treatment of "Faji" by Niger authorities, 62–64.
„ Raids by Brassmen in Akassa, 62–64.
„ of civilian for detention as prisoner of war, 4, 5, 10, 11.
Cloncurry, Lord, 69.
Colombia. Suspicious vessel under British flag for. See "Ban Righ."
Commercial Treaties. See Customs (Egypt).
Compensation. See Claims.
Competing Railway. See Monopoly.
Concession of Emperor Menelek for railway, 1–4.
„ Holt's, in French Congo. Claim for violation of, 55–57.
Concessions. Clause in, compelling foreigners to submit to British jurisdiction, 93–95.
Congo, French. Holt and Co.'s trading rights, 55–57.
„ „ Their rights in and out of free trade zone, 55–57.
Consular jurisdiction. See Order in Council.
Correspondence. See Letters.
Courts. Foreigners cannot waive right of trial in their own. See Zanzibar.
„ See Order in Council.
„ of Appeal, East African, 17–19.
Cowen, Mr. Laurence, 65.
Customs arrangements, Egypt and Persia. Bearing of Firmans on Turkish Treaties, 49–52.

D.

Deportation from theatre of war. See Beijuum, M. van.
Deserters from French territory committing murder in British territory. See Keyes, Captain C. V.
Divorce Law in African Protectorates, 67.
Domiciliary visits in Zanzibar. Consul, not Judge, orders, 91–93.
Dossa, Suliman, 91.
Duties. See Sugar.

E.

Egypt. How far bound by Turkish Commercial Treaties on, 49–52.
Enemy. See Belligerents, Prisoners, War, &c.
Extradition of French deserters committing murder on British territory. See Keyes, Captain C. V.
„ They should be tried by French for murder, not desertion, 59–61.
„ between Federated Malay States and Siam, 78, 79.
„ Treaty with Austria-Hungary, 31, 32.
„ „ „ Belgium, 34.
„ See Seamen Deserters.
Extraterritorial rights. Power of foreigners to waive their, in suits regarding real property, 94, 95.

FAJ—LOR.

F.

"Faji," French. Treatment by Niger authorities, 62–64.
„ Did vessel arresting fly proper flag? 62–64.
Federated Malay States. See Extradition.
Firmans respecting Egypt. Effect on her Customs arrangements, 49–52.
Fishing rights of foreigners at Seven Stones (an island only at low water), 55–57.
Fish, sale of by French boats in British ports, 57–59.
Flag, suspicious use of British by vessel for Colombia. See "Ban Righ."
„ of local Administration. French take exception to, 64
Foreign Enlistment Act. Measures to prevent violation of. See "Ban Righ."
French Congo. See Congo.

G.

Galmore-Greene, D. O., 27, 28.
Germany. Arbitration as to claims in Samoa of. See Arbitration.
„ As to termination of Treaty with Zanzibar. See Treaty
Greene. See Galmore-Greene.

H.

Hay, J. A., 41, 42.
Holt and Co., 55–57.

I.

Ilg, Mr., 1.
Immigration Act of Commonwealth of Australia. As to its conflict with Treaties, 66, 70–73.
India. Countervailing duties on bounty-fed sugar, 29–31.
Interning of belligerents in neutral State, 19–23.

J.

Japanese Treaty of 1894. Position of Queensland after joining Commonwealth, 70–73.
Jibuti–Harrar Railway. See Railway.
Jurisdiction. See Extraterritorial rights.
„ See Maritime.

K.

Keyes, Captain C. V., 59–62.
Knapp, Fisher and Sons, 43.
"Kowshing" Arbitration Protocol. Omission of recital in as to cause of her loss, 37, 38.

L.

Land. See Leases.
Law Court. Production of Foreign Office papers in, 65.
Law. See Legal Proceedings.
„ See Martial Law.
Leases, &c., on Zanzibar mainland. Clause in as to submission to British jurisdiction, 93–95.
Legal proceedings for spreading false news, 27, 28.
Letters, mendacious, respecting war in Somaliland. As to prosecution, 27–28.
„ Opening of in transit during Boer, 6, 7.
"Libertador." See "Ban Righ" and "Bolivar."
"Lorna Doone" used for Government as well as trading purposes, is a public ship, 35.

MAR—PRE.

M.

Marais, D. A., 8.
Maritime jurisdiction around rocks covered at high water, 57–59.
Malay Federated States, extradition from. Its peculiar political position, 78, 79.
Marriages Ordinance for East Africa Protectorate, 66, 67.
Marriage by clergyman outside Foreign Marriages Act. Validity of, 67–70.
Marriage where no lex loci exists, 69.
Martial law. See Letters, opening of.
„ Legislation to validate proceedings under, 7–9.
„ Sentences under on conclusion of peace, 7–9.
Monopoly. Railway concession in. Nature of, 1–4.
Monopoly of trade. French Congo Regulations practically grant, 55–57.
Most-favoured-nation treatment conflicts with bounties, 31.

N.

"Naniwa." Legality of action when sinking the "Kowshing," 38.
"National Review." Disclosure of official secrets in, 33.
Navigation of Barima. Freedom of cannot be claimed during blockade, 85–87.
Neutrality between Colombia and Venezuela. Steps to ensure. See "Ban Righ" and "Bolivar."
„ Civil employment in belligerent State. Does it constitute? See Beijnum, M. van Neutrals. Case of removal of from theatre of war, 10, 11.
„ As to exemption from military contributions, 24–26.
„ Claim by, for occupation of premises by troops, 24–26.
Neutral State. Duty of when combatants take refuge in, 19–23.
„ Cost of keep of such combatants, 19–23.
News. Prosecution for spreading of false, 27, 28.
Niger. French vessels in not complying with Regulations, 62–64.
Niger Company's claims on French Government, and vice versâ. See Claims.
„ „ flag. See Flag.

O.

Oath of allegiance for Boer prisoners, &c., 20–21.
Official papers. Production in Court, 65.
Oost Afrikaansche Compagnie. Claim of rent. Premises occupied during war, 24–26.
Order in Council. African Protectorates, 11–17.
„ „ British Central Africa, 12–17.
„ „ East African Appeals, 17–19.
„ „ Draft Siam, 79, 80.
„ „ See Extradition.
„ „ Whangpoo Conservancy, 36, 37.

P.

Paula, M. Rudolph de, 44, 45.
Perso-Egyptian Customs arrangements. See Customs and Treaties.
Pirate ship. "Ban Righ" declared a, 45.
Portugal. Enemy interned in during Boer war. Her duties, 19–23.
„ Responsibility for their expenses, 19–23.
„ May expel Boers after the war, 21.
Preiswerk, Miss E., 67.

PRI—SEC.

Prisoner of war. Non-combatant properly treated as, 4, 5, 10, 11.
„ „ Bearing of his national status on question, 4, 5.
„ „ Neutral in civil employ of enemy as, 4, 5, 10, 11.
„ „ Treatment of on conclusion of peace. As to their repatriation, 8, 9, 21–23.
„ „ French in Ceylon. Disposal of, 19–23.
„ „ Enemy interned in neutral State detained as, 19–23.
„ „ Oath of allegiance for, 21–23.
„ „ Conditions for permitting their return to South Africa, 21–23.
„ „ See also Boers.
Privateers. Venezuela entitled to use, 88, 89.
Property. Claim for destruction of during Boxer rising, 39–43
Prosecution for spreading false news, as to, 27, 28.
„ of Sir H. Rumbold under Official Secrets Act, as to, 33
Protectorates, African. New Orders in Council, 11–17.
Publication of false news. How far indictable? 27–38.
„ of official secrets. See Rumbold, Sir Horace.

Q.

R.

Railway, Jibuti–Harrar. As to validity of Concession, 1–4.
„ As to its cancellation. British competing line, 1–4.
Real property in Zanzibar. Are suits as to cognizable by Extraterritorial Court, 93–95
„ „ Can foreigners waive their extraterritorial rights in suits respecting? 93–95
Reich (German clerk in Uganda), 94, 95.
Rent for occupation of buildings by troops during the war. No claim, 24–26.
Requisitions (War). As to occupation of premises by troops being classed as, 24–26.
„ during war. Precedent of Alsace-Lorraine, 25.
Revolution in Venezuela. See "Ban Righ" and Blockade.
Rubber seized in violation of Berlin Act. See Holt and Co.
Rumbold, Sir Horace, 33.
Russian protest against Indian sugar duties, 76–78.

S.

Samoan Arbitration as to losses by military operations in, 73, 74.
Sarawak vessels claimed to be public ships. See "Lorna Doone."
Seamen deserters. Effect of Australian legislation on Treaties, 66.
Search of houses in Zanzibar. Consul, not Judge, should order, 91–93.
Secrets, official. Disclosure of by retired public servants, 33.

1902

SEV—TUR.

Seven Stones (uncovered at low water). French fishing rights, 57–59.
Siam and Malay States. See Extradition.
" " See Order in Council.
Slaves in Zanzibar. Status of children of born after 1899, 97.
Somaliland. Lying letters about. As to prosecution of author, 27, 28.
Sugar. Protest against countervailing duties in India, 29–31, 76–78.
Sussex Peerage case in connection with marriage question, 69.
State (Colony) absorbed into another. Effect of her external engagements. See Queensland.
State. Separation of portion of for external relations, 49–52.
Switzerland. Expenses of French interned in during Franco-Prussian war, 21.

T.

Territorial waters. Steps to prevent hostilities in British. See "Bolivar."
" " See Seven Stones Rocks.
Trading rights in French Congo, in and out of free trade zone, 55–57.
Treaty. As to expenses of combatants taking refuge in neutral territory 21.
" Complaints as to infraction of. See Sugar.
" See Extradition.
" See Berlin Act.
" with Japan. How affected by entry of Queensland into Australian Commonwealth, 70–73.
" German-Zanzibar. As to date of termination, 90, 91, 95, 96.
" " " Question of its revision, 90, 91, 95, 96.
Treaties of Commerce. See Customs, Egypt, Persia.
" respecting seamen deserters. Effect of Australian legislation on, 66.
" with Zanzibar prevent foreigners waiving their extraterritorial rights, 94, 95.
Trial of Captain Keyes' murderers. See Keyes, Captain, C. V.
" Production of Foreign Office papers at, 65.
" Holt and Co. v. Sociétè, etc., du Haut Ogowe, 55.
" See also Courts.
"Truth" v. Cowen. Production of Foreign Office papers at trial. 65.
Turkish Commercial Treaties. As to their application to Egypt, 49–52.

VEN—ZAN.

V.

Venezuela insurrection. See Belligerents, also Blockade.
" Vessel fitted out by Colombia against. See "Ban Righ."
Vessel. Government ship engaged in trading is a public, 35.
" Claim for sinking of by "Naniwa." See "Kowshing."
" suspicious. Enforcement of neutrality. See "Ban Righ."
Vessels in Niger. Claims. See "Ardent" and "Faji."

W.

Waima arbitration. Collision on doubtful boundary, 52, 54.
War in South Africa. See Belligerents, Boers, Claims, Letters, Martial law, Neutrals, Oath of allegiance, Prisoners, Requisitions.
" " Right to expel from theatre of, 11.
" " Boers seek asylum in Portuguese territory, 19–23.
" " Claim for rent in respect of premises occupied by troops, 24–26.
" " As to enforcing requisitions on neutrals, 24–26.
War, Franco-Prussian. Expenses of French interned in Switzerland, 21.
" Hostilities between Venezuela and Colombia. Suspicious vessel. See "Ban Righ" and "Bolivar."
Whangpoo Conservancy Order in Council, 36, 37.
Whitfield, W. J., 67.

Z.

Zanzibar Treaty with Germany. Date of termination, 90, 91, 95, 96.
" " As to its revision, 90, 91, 95, 96.
" " Search of houses. Is an administrative not judicial act, 91–93.
" " Search devolves on Consul, not Judge, 93.
" " Leases, &c., on mainland. Clause compelling foreigners to submit to British jurisdiction, 93–95.
" " Mainland. Status of children of slaves born after 1889, 97.

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

Printed for the use of the Foreign Office. September 1903.

CONFIDENTIAL.

REPORTS BY THE LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN, &c.: 1902.

ABYSSINIA.

No. 1.

[November 17, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, September 10, 1902.

Jibuti–Harrar Railway: Validity of its Concession.

WITH reference to your letter of the 31st August, 1900, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list in regard to the Agreement of the 9th March, 1897, by which the Emperor Menelik of Abyssinia gave permission to M. Ilg, a Swiss engineer and His Majesty's principal adviser, to form a Company for the construction of a railway from the port of Jibuti, in the French Somaliland Protectorate, to Harrar in Abyssinia, and thence to Antoto and the White Nile.

A copy of your Report, referred to above, is inclosed for convenience of reference, and the map and other papers which you had before you when drawing it up are also forwarded herewith.

On the 6th February last, the Compagnie Impériale des Chemins de fer Ethiopiens, the Company formed in accordance with the permission given by the Emperor, concluded a Convention (see Paper H), with the Government of French Somaliland, by which the latter granted to the Company, on certain conditions, an annual subvention of 500,000 francs (20,000*l.*) for 50 years. The Convention contains, inter alia, the following stipulations:—

Article V provides that in future all members of the Council of Administration shall be Frenchmen, except in special cases sanctioned by the Ministers of the Colonies and of Foreign Affairs.

By Article VI the Company is forbidden to modify the course of the railway or to authorize the construction of any branch lines without the consent of the aforesaid Ministers.

Article XIV provides that at the end of 99 years from the opening of the line to Addis Harrar, the French Somali Coast Protectorate shall succeed to all the rights of the Company over the section of the railway between Jibuti and Addis Harrar.

By Article XV the Protectorate has the right of acquiring by purchase the portion of the line between Jibuti and the course of the Hawash at any time after the 1st January, 1920.

These two latter provisions are, however, by Article XVIII made subject to an agreement between the French and Abyssinian Governments in regard to those portions of the line which are outside French territory.

On the 7th February the French Government submitted a Bill to the Chamber of Deputies (Paper H), approving the Convention, guaranteeing on behalf of the French Republic the payment of the annual subvention of 500,000 francs to the Railway Company, and enacting that the subvention should be applied as specified in the Convention, viz., to the repayment of the advances obtained by the Company, to expenses of construction and improvement, and to covering deficit on working expenses.

1902

The Bill was adopted by the French Legislature, approved by the President on the 6th April last, and the arrangement was accepted soon afterwards at a general meeting of the Company. It will be observed that the provisions for the acquisition of the railway by the French Protectorate are inconsistent with the rights which were secured to the Abyssinian Government by the Agreement of the 9th March, 1897 (Paper B). In accordance with the terms of that Agreement, the portion of the line running through Abyssinian territory would become the property of the Abyssinian Government at the end of 99 years from its completion.

The arrangements between the Railway Company and the Government of the French Protectorate were made without the cognizance of the Emperor Menelik. His Majesty disapproves of them, and has informed the French Minister in Abyssinia that he cannot accept them.

It becomes matter for consideration whether in concluding the Convention with the French Protectorate and in accepting from the French Government a guarantee for the funds necessary for the construction of the railway, the Company have not so far transgressed the conditions of the Concession granted by the Emperor as to render that Concession liable to be cancelled or materially modified.

The Emperor appears, moreover, to have grounds for complaint against the Company in other matters in which the terms of the original Agreement have been disregarded or set aside.

Article 2 and the following Articles provide for the construction of a railway from Jibuti to Harrar. In view of the engineering difficulties which would be caused by the mountainous character of the country round Harrar, the Company have decided not to carry the line to that town, but to make the terminus at Addis Harrar, a locality situated about 60 miles to the north-west of Harrar. This decision appears clearly from the wording of the Bill submitted by the French Government to the Chamber of Deputies (see Inclosure in Paper H, page 2 and passim).

Further, Article 6 of the Agreement with the Emperor provides for the construction of a telegraph line to Harrar, to be placed at the disposal of the Abyssinian Government, but the telegraph is being taken as far as the terminus only.

In these circumstances the Emperor is considering whether, if it should be decided to construct a railway from a port in British Somaliland to the Abyssinian frontier, he would be justified in allowing it to be extended to Harrar, or in himself constructing the extension.

His Majesty has discussed the matter with Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington, His Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Abyssinia, and has informed him that he would be glad to obtain legal advice in regard to it.

I am to transmit to you a Memorandum by Colonel Harrington (Paper P) stating the principal points on which the Emperor desires to be advised, and I am to request that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion upon them, and generally with any observations which you may have to make on the matters referred to in this letter.

In your letter of the 31st August, 1900, you stated, with reference to Article 3 of the Agreement of the 9th March, 1897, that in your opinion it appeared clear that any line running from the coast to British Somaliland to Harrar would be both "competing" with the railway from Jibuti and "near" it.

Colonel Harrington, in his Memorandum, raises the question whether, now that the terminus of the Jibuti Railway will be at Addis Harrar and not at Harrar, a line from the British port of Berbera to Harrar, which at its nearest point to the French Railway would be 60 miles distant, could be considered as "near" or "competing."

I am to observe that, as Lord Lansdowne is now informed by Colonel Harrington that the Agreement was signed in the Amharic version only, and that version is therefore the only binding one, the question whether the line would be "competing," the expression used in the French translation need only be considered in so far as the general intention of the Article is concerned.

It seems, however, to Lord Lansdowne somewhat doubtful whether it could be successfully contended that a railway from the British Somali Coast to Harrar would be otherwise than "near" to the Jibuti-Addis Harrar line, and that the more material question is whether the arrangements made by the Railway Company with the Government of the French Protectorate, and the failure of the Company to carry out all the provisions of the Agreement of the 9th March, 1897, are sufficient grounds to justify the Emperor Menelik in giving his sanction to the construction of a railway from Harrar to join a line from the coast at a point on the frontier of the British Protectorate.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE

List of Papers.

(A.)	Map of Africa
(B.)	Sir E. Monson	(No. 498)	July	22, 1897.
(C.)	Ditto	(No. 500)	July	23, ,,
(D.)	Captain Harrington	(No. 40)	May	30, 1900.
(E.)	Ditto	(No. 48)	June	25, ,,
(F.)	Treaty between Great Britain and Ethiopia	(Library No. 1023)	May	14, 1897.
(G.)	Law Officers		August	31, 1900.
(H.)	Sir E. Monson	(No. 52)	February	14, 1902.
(I.)	To Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington	(No. 22)	March	14, ,,
(J.)	Sir E. Monson	(No. 93)	March	20, ,,
(K.)	Ditto	(No. 106)	March	29, ,,
(L.)	Ditto	(No. 111)	April	10, ,,
(M.)	The Earl of Cromer	(No. 57. Telegraphic)	May	19, ,,
(N.)	Sir E. Monson	(No. 173)	May	25, ,,
(O.)	Mr. Baird	(No. 11)	June	10, ,,
(P)	Memorandum by Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington		August	30, ,,
(Q.)	To Law Officers		September	10, ,,

Report.

We are of opinion that the Emperor Menelik could not be advised to grant a Concession or make a line of railway from the coast to Harrar so long as the monopoly under the existing Concession is in force. Whether proper grounds exist for cancelling this monopoly is a different question. We do not think that the fact that the concessionnaire has formed a French Company, with the assistance of the French Government, could, on the facts before us, safely be relied on as a ground for cancellation, as there is no such limitation or prohibition in the Concession. If, however, the concessionnaire fails to carry out the Agreement in any material particular, we think it might afford grounds for cancellation, and we think that if the concessionnaire fails to make the line to Harrar as provided by the Concession, that would be a good ground for putting an end to the monopoly granted by the Concession.

We do not think that any of the other grounds suggested by Colonel Harrington would entitle the Emperor to set aside the Concession.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY,
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
November, 17, 1902.

Annex.

Memorandum by Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington.

REGARDING the situation created by the Railway Company making a Convention with the French Government without the Emperor's consent, the points which I want legal opinion on are—

1. Does not the Company's making a Convention with a third Party invalidate the Concession, or at any rate give the Emperor the power of honourably altering the terms of the original Concession? So far as I remember, nothing in the Concession allows of its transfer to a third Party. The Company has accepted the Convention with a third Party, viz., the French Government, even though certain clauses are subject to approval by the Emperor.

2. The Concession was granted to private individuals, and gave them the right to form a Company. Are they not exceeding the powers granted them under the Concession in allowing the French Government to guarantee the money necessary for the completion of the line? Does not this action invalidate the Concession?

1902

3. The Concession was granted, so the Emperor states, on the distinct understanding that the Railway was to be built by a private Company, and that no Government was to have any share in it. Does not the Company's action in allowing the French Government to have an interest in the line invalidate the Concession as being beyond the Company's powers under the Concession?

4. Whether the Railway Company's action, if not forfeiting the Concession, entitles the Emperor to allow another Government to make a line to Harrar from the coast.

In fact, my contention is that the Company, having even negotiated, not to mention having made and approved a Convention with the French Government, which action is outside the powers conferred on them by the Concession, have thereby entitled the Emperor to honourably consider the terms of the Concession as having been exceeded and as no longer binding on him.

Am I right in my opinion that the Concession may be regarded as a contract between two parties, and that the fact of the concessionnaire not having kept his part of the contract entitles the grantor to repudiate it, or, at any rate, to alter the existing terms of the Concession?

Regarding the Concession irrespective of the situation at present created by the Railway Company's action, I would like legal opinion on the following points:—

1. Would a line from Berbera to Harrar, which at its nearest point to the French Railway would be 60 miles distant, be considered as near or competing?

2. Would not the Emperor be entitled under the existing terms of the Railway Concession to grant a Concession for a line from Harrar to a point on the British Somaliland frontier to a private individual or to a Government?

This would not be a line to the Red Sea or Indian Ocean.

3. Is there any clause in the Concession which would prevent—

(a.) The Emperor building such a line as described in (2) himself, or

(b.) Allowing another Government to build it?

4. Is there any clause in the Concession which prevents a foreign Government from building a line from the coast to Harrar?

5. Whether the engagement to establish telegraphic communication forthwith between Jibuti and Harrar in return for permission to undertake the Jibuti–Harrar section of the line not having been observed does not empower the Emperor to alter the terms of the Concession.

6. Whether the Concession having been granted for a line to Harrar, the fact that the Company have openly admitted that they have no intention of continuing the line to Harrar does not honourably admit of an alteration of the Concession by the Emperor.

7. Whether the provisions or part provisions of Articles I, III, and IV of the Treaty of the 14th May, 1897, between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Abyssinia (Paper F) as regards trade are not in conflict with Articles 9 and 10 of the Railway Concession, and, being of later date, do not affect the putting into force of these clauses on behalf of the Railway.

AFRICA.

No. 2.

[January 6, 1902.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, December 14, 1901.

M. van Beijnum, Dutchman, aiding Boers, made a Prisoner of War.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list, which relate to the case of M. van Beijnum.

The facts of the case are, briefly, as follows:—

M. van Beijnum is a Netherland subject by origin.

He was a teacher in a State-subsidized school at Ermelo (Transvaal), which was closed at the outbreak of the war, when he acted as Assistant-Postmaster for about two months. The school was open again from December 1899 to July 1901. On the 12th to 13th August, General Buller marched through Ermelo and gave him a pass to remain. The town was subsequently reoccupied by Boers, and he gave private lessons until the 18th October, when he was made a prisoner of war by General French, and taken successively to Heidelberg, Johannesburg, and Cape Town, where, after several requests from the Netherland Consul-General for his release, he was given a third-class passage in the steam-ship "Warrical," and, arriving at London, was given a ticket for Utrecht. M. Adank, when he returned to Ermelo in January 1900, found M. van Beijnum employed in the post-office, doing the work of the First Assistant-Postmaster, who had been commandeered, and also some of the work of Adank's son, who was also on commando.

The facts of the case are stated somewhat more fully in the Memorandum of the 19th September by Sir J. Ardagh, late Director of Military Intelligence, who has acted as British Agent before the Deportations Commission, and whose great knowledge of the laws and customs of war has on many occasions been utilized by this Department. The views expressed in the Memorandum are to be considered as Sir J. Ardagh's personal views, and, though they would probably command the general assent of His Majesty's Government, might not be accepted by them in all particulars.

Should you desire to know whether, and how far, any of them have in practice been adopted, information on such points as you may indicate will be procured.

I have the honour to request you to take these papers into your consideration, and to favour the Secretary of State with your opinion—

1. Whether the treatment accorded to M. van Beijnum by the British authorities, and especially whether his being made a prisoner of war, was justifiable in view of his actions and the circumstances in which they were committed;

2. Whether any compensation should be made to him, ex gratiâ or otherwise, on account of the treatment which he received from those authorities; and

3. With any observations which you may be good enough to offer on the case generally.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

Baron Gericke		January	30,	1901.
To War Office		February	4,	,,
War Office		June	25,	,,
To Baron Gericke		July	5,	,,
Sir H. Howard	(No. 31. Africa)	August	8,	,,
To Baron Gericke		August	14,	,,
Sir J. Ardagh (Memorandum)		September	19,	,,
To Sir H. Howard	(No. 31)	October	8,	,,
Sir H. Howard	(No. 49)	November	13,	,,

Report.

In our opinion the treatment accorded to M. van Beijnum was justifiable. Apart from the question of nationality, upon which we are not in a position to advise, it is clear from the statements of M. van Beijnum himself and of Mr. Adank that the former accepted employment under the Transvaal authorities during the progress of the war, and thereby enabled those whose office he took over to join commando on active service, and he cannot, in such circumstances, be considered as a neutral.

2. We do not see any reason why compensation, ex gratiâ or otherwise, should be awarded to M. van Beijnum.

3. We agree with Mr. Davidson and Sir John Ardagh that the question of nationality should not be abandoned, but it is unnecessary to determine it in consequence of the acts of M. van Beijnum as above indicated.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
January 6, 1902.

1902

No. 3.

[March 31, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, March 24, 1902.

Opening of letters in transit through British South African Colonies.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to inclose, for your consideration, a copy of a Memorandum communicated to his Lordship by the German Ambassador at this Court relative to the opening in Cape Colony of letters in transit through the Colony to German South-West Africa.

It will be seen that the Memorandum draws a distinction between the right to exercise censorship over correspondence posted in the Colony, or addressed to persons in the Colony, and that which passes in transit, to a neutral country, through British territory. With regard to the latter category, reference is made to the provisions of the International Postal Convention.

Article IV (1) of that Convention provides that "the right of transit is guaranteed throughout the entire territory of the Union." The same Article (2) goes on to say: "Consequently the several Postal Administrations of the Union may send reciprocally through the medium of one or of several of them, either closed mails or correspondence 'à découvert,' according to the needs of the traffic and the requirements of the postal service."

You will, however, observe from the Martial Law Regulations, which have been published and are in force in Cape Colony, and of which a copy is inclosed, that "all letters, telegrams, and the like, arriving or leaving by post or otherwise, are, if other than official, liable to be censored."

In pursuance of this Regulation, the military authorities have been in the habit of opening correspondence in transit to German South-West Africa, and of labelling those letters "opened under martial law." Steps have, however, been taken to discontinue this practice, and arrangements have been made which will, it is hoped, have the practical result of preventing further complaints.

Lord Lansdowne would, however, be glad if you will take the German Memorandum into your consideration and favour him with your opinion (1) whether, having regard to the provisions of the Postal Convention above cited, His Majesty's Government can properly maintain that the existence of martial law in the Cape Colony warrants the examination of correspondence passing in transit through that Colony; and (2) whether, in the event of your considering such a course justifiable, letters which may be found to contain dangerous matter may properly be detained by the military authorities, or whether, in the case of letters which in course of transit come within a theatre of war or an ambit wherein martial law has been proclaimed, the provisions of the Convention apply, or there is any obligation thereunder to forward them to their destination.

A note on the same subject has been received from the Netherland Minister. This note reiterates the contentions advanced in the German Memorandum, and is also inclosed.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

Memorandum (German Embassy)	March 5, 1902.
Baron Gericke	March 18, ,,
Martial Law Regulations.

Report.

1. We are of opinion that the provisions of the Postal Convention must be regarded as applicable to a state of peace, and that, in the event of war raging in an adjoining territory, letters transmitted under the Postal Convention are liable to examination in the same way as other letters. This right, however, is one which should, we think, be exercised with great forbearance, and, as it may be doubtful whether any information or supplies of money are likely to be transmitted to the enemy indirectly by means of such letters, it is a matter for consideration whether the right should be exercised.

2. Letters which may be found to contain dangerous matter may properly be detained.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
March 31, 1902.

No. 3A. [Colonial Office.]

[May 30, 1902.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, May 30, 1902.

Martial law in South African war. As to mode of legalizing.

WE were honoured with your commands, signified to us in Mr. Bertram Cox' letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by you to request our consideration of certain matters arising out of the establishment of martial law in South Africa and elsewhere, as the result of the present war, upon which, in view of the possible early restoration of peace, it was desirable that you should have the favour of our Report at as early a date as possible.

That martial law had been proclaimed throughout Natal and throughout Cape Colony. That it had also been proclaimed in Southern Rhodesia and in the areas occupied by the camps of confinement in those British Colonies in which prisoners of war and penal servitude prisoners have been detained.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to transmit to us copies of certain Reports and documents relating to martial law during the present war, and to draw our attention in particular to our Reports of the 25th January, 6th February, 16th March, 18th May, 1st June, and 17th July, 1900; 6th July, 1901; and 14th March, 1902.

That you assumed it to be a matter beyond all question that the proceedings taken under martial law would require the cover of legislative enactments to prevent action at law being taken against persons who administered martial law, and that Mr. Bertram Cox was to transmit to us copies of Act No. 6, 1900, passed by the Legislature of the Cape Colony, Ordinance No. 1 of 1901 of Southern Rhodesia, and Acts No. 15 of 1900 and No. 41 of 1901, passed by the Legislature of Natal, and of a Bill intended to be introduced in the present Session of the Natal Parliament.

That the Acts of the Cape Colony and Southern Rhodesia legalized retrospectively all proceedings taken under martial law up to the date of Act, but the Natal Act No. 41 of 1901, and the Bill shortly to be introduced, legalized not only what might have been done before the passing of the Act, but all Acts properly done, whether before, during, or after the existence of martial law.

That you presumed that sentences passed by Courts administering martial law would expire on the termination of martial law, unless legislation was passed to provide for their continuance, although the Judge Advocate-General and other legal advisers of the War Office, as we should observe, had advised to the contrary effect, and that in that connection Mr. Cox was to call our attention to our Report of the 6th July, 1901.

That another question which arose related to certain sentences passed by Courts administering martial law upon rebels taken in arms by His Majesty's forces. That a number of those had been sentenced to terms of penal servitude in Bermuda, and that legislation would be passed in Bermuda to legalize their detention in that island until they could be removed to the Seychelles, where similar legislation would be passed. That in that connection Mr. Cox was to call our attention to our Report of the 14th March, 1902.

That there would be no difficulty in legislating, either in Natal, Ceylon, Seychelles, Southern Rhodesia, or in any Crown Colony in which persons sentenced by Courts administering martial law might be confined, and probably no difficulty in Bermuda.

1902

But that difficulty would probably arise, should the war come to an early conclusion, in obtaining legislative authority for the detention of martial law prisoners in the Cape Colony, inasmuch as, apart from the fact that the Cape Parliament was not expected to meet until August, it was not certain that there would be a majority sufficient to pass legislation of this kind.

That it had accordingly been proposed to continue martial law in Cape Colony after the conclusion of the war, and the disaffected condition of that Colony would probably afford ample justification for that step being taken; but that you feared that, should that be done, it was possible that an undesirable conflict might arise between the Civil Courts of the Cape Colony and the authorities administering martial law.

That in the case ex parte D. A. Marais, reported in Law Reports, 1902, Appeal Cases, at p. 109, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decided that where war actually prevailed the ordinary Courts had no jurisdiction over the action of the military authorities; but that, assuming the South African War to have terminated, it might be doubted whether the Civil Courts would not have jurisdiction to call in question the propriety of the action of the military authorities, on the ground that no state of war existed, but only a state of more or less disturbance, and that those Courts had jurisdiction to inquire whether any sufficient danger to the public safety actually existed, and whether any measures taken under martial law were in fact justifiable. That in those circumstances a conflict between the military authorities and the Civil Courts on questions which it would be most undesirable to raise would be extremely probable, and might become inevitable.

That with regard to the sanction by local Legislatures of proceedings taken under martial law another difficulty arose. That prisoners sentenced to penal servitude in Bermuda were conveyed on the high seas from South Africa to that Colony, and that other prisoners sentenced to penal servitude, without stating the special place of confinement, had been conveyed to Bermuda and St. Helena, and that it was conceived that no Act passed either by the Cape Legislature or by the Legislatures of Bermuda or St. Helena could give legislative authority to acts done outside the territorial waters of those Colonies, and that technically the captain of the ship who conveyed the prisoners from South Africa to Bermuda or St. Helena might be liable to an action for illegally detaining them on board ship.

That you were aware that an Act of the Imperial Parliament could give protection under those circumstances, but that it was essential to avoid, if possible, inviting the Imperial Parliament to legislate, and that you considered that the risk of action being taken against the captain in the manner and for the reason described might, perhaps, be neglected.

That a further question arose as to prisoners of war. That it would not be possible or desirable to return them to South Africa immediately, and that it was proposed to return them by degrees, and in small numbers, and possibly, in some cases, to prohibit the return of certain notoriously disaffected prisoners altogether.

That it would be remembered that, besides burghers of the late Republics, there were among the prisoners of war an appreciable number of Germans, Hollanders, and other foreigners.

That the question therefore arose whether any, and what, legislative authority was necessary to carry out that policy, and by what legislative authority any enactment which might be found necessary should be passed.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was accordingly to request us to take the above matters into our consideration, and to advise you—

1. Whether any—and what—legislation was necessary to legalize the proceedings taken under martial law in the Colonies referred to? Whether the legislation already passed by those Colonies, and in particular by Natal, was sufficient, and if not, what further legislation was necessary, and what form such legislation should take?

2. What course should be taken with regard to prisoners sentenced either to penal servitude in Bermuda or to penal servitude, without stating the place of confinement, who had been conveyed to Bermuda or St. Helena? Whether any legislation was necessary, and, if so, of what nature, and by what legislative authority, any necessary enactment should be passed?

3. Whether, if martial law was continued in the Cape Colony after the conclusion of peace, the Civil Courts might discuss the question of the necessity for its continuance, and whether it was possible that a conflict of authority might arise in that case between the military authorities and the Civil Courts, and, if so, what legal means could be taken to avoid such conflict?

4. Whether the course proposed to be taken with regard to prisoners of war could be justified on grounds of international law, and whether any municipal legislation was necessary to carry out such a policy, and, if so, by what legislative authority the necessary enactments should be passed?

5. That you would be glad to be further favoured with any general observations as to the matters above referred to, which, in the consideration of those most important matters, might occur to us.

We have considered the questions which have been submitted to us, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That we are of opinion that legislation is necessary for this purpose.

Although acts done bonâ fide in the administration of martial law during the existence of a state of war are, in our opinion, lawful at common law, there is an absence of authority on the subject, and it is certain that a number of actions would, in the absence of an act of indemnity, be brought against those who have been concerned in the administration of martial law. The sentences passed by courts martial would, in our opinion, cease to be of effect when martial law comes to an end. We therefore think that legislation giving an indemnity to those who have been concerned in the administration of martial law, and confirming the sentences passed by Courts administering martial law, is proper and necessary.

2. In the case of prisoners in penal servitude in Bermuda or St. Helena, under sentence passed by Courts administering martial law, we think complete protection can be afforded only by an Act of the Imperial Parliament. Acts of the local Legislatures would not cover what has been done on the high seas in the course of the transmission of these prisoners. We observe that it is considered that the danger of actions in respect of what was done upon the high seas may be neglected, and Acts of the Legislatures of Bermuda and St. Helena would cover what has been done there; but there remains the difficulty which apparently exists in passing an Act, at a sufficiently early date, through the Legislature of the Cape of Good Hope.

3. In the case supposed, the Civil Courts might discuss the necessity for the continuance of martial law, and very awkward complications might ensue. The danger of such a conflict can be avoided only by legislation.

4. The course proposed with reference to the return of the prisoners of war to South Africa may be justified by the right of the Brisish Government to exclude from its own territory persons whose presence might endanger its peace. When the war ceases the prisoners of war are, subject to any special terms of peace, entitled to their freedom within a reasonable time, but it is open to His Majesty's Government to take steps to prevent their return to South Africa except under conditions demanded by the public safety, and they should not be permitted to return in such numbers, or at such times, as would menace the public tranquillity. For this purpose we think that legislation may be desirable. Local legislation would be sufficient, but if it is desired to exclude these prisoners from the Cape, an Act of the Imperial Parliament may be desirable in the present circumstances of that Colony.

5. Under all the circumstances, we think that Imperial legislation is expedient. It might have unfortunate effects if prisoners—under sentence by Courts administering martial law—were set at liberty on writs of habeas corpus issued by the Civil Tribunals on the restoration of peace, while actions were brought to recover damages from Lord Kitchener and the officers by whom martial law had been enforced, and there appears to be no likelihood that the necessary legislation can, so far as the Cape Colony is concerned, be carried through locally in time to avoid these results. If it were possible, local legislation would be much preferable, and liability for acts done on the high seas might perhaps be neglected, but such legislation does not appear to be possible in the Cape Colony.

We have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

1902

No. 4.

[June 4, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Mr. van Beijnum, serving in Boer Post-office: right to detain as prisoner of war.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, May 20, 1902.

I HAVE the honour to inform you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, that on the receipt of your Report of the 6th January last (Paper C), respecting the case of Mr. van Beijnum, his Lordship addressed a note (Paper A) on the subject to the Netherlands Minister embodying the conclusions at which you had arrived.

Baron Gericke has now replied in the accompanying note (Paper B), in which he adduces various reasons for dissenting from the views entertained by His Majesty's Government.

Baron Gericke maintains in the first place that the sense which His Majesty's Government attach to the Netherlands Law of Nationality is not one it can properly be made to bear; and in the second he contends that, putting aside the question of nationality altogether, and considering the case from the point of view of the duties of a neutral as defined by international law, Mr. van Beijnum's arrest was illegal.

In his opinion only such subjects of neutral Powers as have actually taken part in the operations of war, or have been attached to one or other of the belligerent armies, can properly be detained as prisoners of war,—a condition which cannot be said to have been fulfilled by Mr. van Beijnum, even if, as His Majesty's Government have asserted, he fulfilled the duties of an Assistant Postmaster and so "enabled those whose offices he took over and whose duties he fulfilled to join commandos on active service." In Baron Gericke's view these men were compelled by law to perform military service, and would have been bound to serve even if Mr. van Beijnum had not taken up their civil employment. Mr. van Beijnum's action merely assisted in fulfilling the "eminently peaceful" service of the Post-office, which would otherwise have remained without staff.

Lord Lansdowne does not think it worth while to press further the point that Van Beijnum had forfeited his Netherland nationality; but he would be obliged if you would favour him with your opinion as to whether Baron Gericke is correct in asserting that Van Beijnum's conduct was not such as to justify his arrest as a prisoner of war so long as he was the subject of a neutral Power, and generally with any further observations which you may desire to make on the case.

I am specially to draw your attention to Herr Holtzendorff's views respecting "persons liable to be made prisoners of war" as given in his "Handbuch des Völkerrechts," vol. iv, p. 429 (Paper E); as also to a Report dated the 27th February, 1854, of the then Queen's Advocate, respecting the position of British subjects in Russia during the Crimean War (Paper D).

The papers which accompanied Mr. Bertie's letter of the 14th December are returned for convenience of reference, as also your Report (Paper C) of the 6th January last.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

(A.)	To Baron Gericke	February 5, 1902.
(B.)	Baron Gericke	April 18, „
(C.)	Law Officers .. .. (Together with the papers therein mentioned.)	January 6, „
(D.)	Law Officers	February 2, „
(E.)	Extract from Holtzendorff's "Handbuch des Völkerrechts."

Report.

We are unable to agree with the view put forward in the despatch of Baron Gericke of the 18th April, 1902, that only those associated with the enemy's forces can be made prisoners. There is no doubt that reasons of military necessity may justify the arrest, detention, and removal of any person identified with the enemy, even though he has not been attached to the army. Whether persons so arrested are properly speaking to be described as prisoners of war is immaterial.

It is quite clear that Mr. van Beijnum had assumed the character of an enemy subject. He had not only resided for some years in the Transvaal, but had been in the employment of the State as a schoolmaster, and, after the war had broken out, he entered the service of the South African Republic as a postal official. The British Commander was therefore justified in dealing with him exactly as if he had been a burgher in every sense.

General French states that he was arrested and removed because his presence at Ermelo was undesirable for military reasons. The statement of what these reasons were is extremely meagre and unsatisfactory; but we do not feel justified in assuming that there was anything oppressive or contrary to the laws of war in what was done. In any case it appears to us that His Majesty's Government cannot admit any claim on behalf of a person who had identified himself with the enemy Government by entering into their service, under such circumstances, in respect of any hardship incurred by him by the action of His Majesty's troops any more than it could admit such a claim on behalf of a burgher of the South African Republic.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 4, 1902.

No. 5.

[June 5, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Orders in Council for African Protectorates: Papers and drafts.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, March 19, 1902.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list relating to the preparation of an Order in Council for the Uganda Protectorate, together with the drafts of two Orders prepared by Mr. A. Gray in execution of the instructions given him by his Lordship.

The Order in Council at present in force in Uganda is the Africa Order in Council, 1889 (Paper A). After the East Africa Orders in Council, 1897 and 1899 (Papers B and C) had been applied to the East Africa Protectorate it was considered that it would be convenient to assimilate as closely as possible the legislation of the two Protectorates, and the views of the Commissioners and legal advisers of those Protectorates were obtained. The result has been the preparation of the two draft Orders now submitted to you. The Memorandum by Mr. A. Gray (Paper D) which accompanies them explains their scope and purport, and I am to request that you will take them into your consideration, and favour the Marquess of Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether they may properly be laid in their present shape before His Majesty in Council, or whether they require any, and if so what, alterations or modifications.

Revised Orders in Council for the East Africa Protectorate on the lines of those now sent to you are in course of preparation.

The draft of that relating to East Africa is sent so as to show its nature. The Appeals Order will be suspended until it is passed.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CLEMENT Ll. HILL.

1902

List of Papers.

(A.)	Africa Order in Council, 1889 (5846, Confidential).
(B.)	East Africa Order in Council, 1897 (6933, Confidential).
(C.)	East Africa Order in Council, 1899 (7189*, Confidential).
(D.)	Mr. Gray (Memorandum)	February 10, 1902.
	To ditto	March 12, 1900.
	Mr. Gray	August 9, 1901.
	To ditto	December 2, „
	Mr. Gray	February 24, 1902.
	Ditto	March 5, „
	Two draft Orders in Council.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Draft East Africa Order in Council.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, March 31, 1902.

WITH reference to my letter of the 19th instant, forwarding for your consideration drafts of the proposed Uganda and East Africa and Uganda Appeal Orders in Council, I have now the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the draft of the East Africa Order in Council, 1902,* and to request that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether it may, in its present shape, properly be submitted with the other draft Orders to the King in Council for His Majesty's approval, or whether its terms require modification in any, and if so what, respects.

I have, &c.

(Signed) CLEMENT Ll. HILL.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Draft British Central Africa Order in Council.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, May 27, 1902.

WITH reference to my letter of the 31st March last, forwarding for your consideration a draft of the proposed East Africa Order in Council, 1902, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you two copies of the draft of the British Central Africa Order in Council, 1902, and to request that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether it may in its present shape properly be submitted with the other draft Orders now before you, viz., the East Africa Order in Council, 1902, the Uganda Order in Council, 1902, and the Protectorates (Appeal) Order in Council, 1902, to the King in Council for His Majesty's approval, or whether its terms require modification in any, and if so in what, respects.

I have, &c.

(Signed) CLEMENT Ll. HILL.

Report.

As altered in red ink† and initialled by us the draft of the British Central Africa Order in Council, 1902, may, in our opinion, properly be submitted to the King in Council for His Majesty's approval. We do not think it necessary to insert a saving of the Royal prerogative of mercy, and think that the power of deportation is wide enough as drafted.

The East Africa and Uganda Orders in Council should be harmonized with the British Central Africa Order in Council, and it would be as well that the numbering should be uniform.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 5, 1902.

---

* Not printed here.

† Printed in italics.

Annex.

Draft British Central Africa Order in Council.

(February 1902.)

WHEREAS the territories of Africa situate within the limits of this Order are under the protection of His Majesty the King, and are known as the British Central Africa Protectorate:

And whereas by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, His Majesty has power and jurisdiction in the said territories:

Now therefore, His Majesty, by virtue, and in exercise of the powers on this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise, in His Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

Preliminary.

1. This Order may be cited as "The British Central Africa Order in Council, 1901."

The limits of this Order are the territories of Africa bounded on the north by German East Africa and Lake Nyassa, on the east by German East Africa and the Portuguese territories, on the south and south-west by the Portuguese territories, and on the west by North-Eastern Rhodesia.

The said territories are in this Order referred to as British Central Africa and "the Protectorate."

If His Majesty is pleased to direct that any other territories, for the time being under the protection of His Majesty, shall form part of the Protectorate, those territories shall, from and after a date to be fixed by an order of the Secretary of State, be deemed to be within the limits of this Order. In like manner, if His Majesty is pleased to direct that any territories for the time being forming part of the Protectorate shall cease to form part thereof, those territories shall, from and after a date to be fixed by an order of the Secretary of State, cease to be within the limits of this Order.

2. In this Order—

"Secretary of State" means one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State;

"Crown Lands" means all public lands in the Protectorate which are subject to the control of His Majesty by virtue of any Treaty, Convention, or Agreement, or of His Majesty's Protectorate, and all lands which shall have been acquired by His Majesty for the public service or otherwise howsoever;

"Gazette" means the Gazette of the Protectorate;

"Person" includes Corporation.

Words importing the plural or the singular may be construed as referring to one person or thing, or to more than one person or thing, and words importing the masculine as referring to females (as the case may require).

3.—(1.) Where this Order or any Ordinance confers a power or imposes a duty, then, unless a contrary intention appears, the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed from time to time as occasion requires.

(2.) Where this Order or any Ordinance confers a power or imposes a duty on the holder of an office, then, unless a contrary intention appears, the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed by the holder of the office for the time being, or by a person duly appointed to act for him.

(3.) Where this Order or any Ordinance confers a power to make Rules, Regulations, or Orders, then, unless a contrary intention appears, the power shall be construed as including a power, exercisable in the like manner and subject to the like approval and conditions (if any) to rescind, revoke, amend, or vary the Rules, Regulations, or Orders.

(4.) Expressions defined in this Order shall have the same respective meanings in any Ordinances, Rules, or Regulations made under this Order, unless a contrary intention appears.

Administration.

4.—(1.) His Majesty may by Commission under his Sign Manual and Signet appoint a fit person to administer the Government of British Central Africa under the designation of Commissioner or such other designation as His Majesty thinks fit, and the person so appointed is hereinafter referred to as the Commissioner.

(2.) In the event of the death, incapacity, removal, or absence from the Protectorate of the Commissioner for the time being, all and every the powers and authorities by this Order granted to him shall, until His Majesty's further pleasure is signified through the Secretary of State, be vested in the Deputy Commissioner or other principal officer of the Protectorate Government for the time being in the Protectorate.

(3.) The Commissioner shall administer the Government of the Protectorate in the name and on behalf of His Majesty, and shall do and execute in due manner all things that shall belong to his said command and to the trust thereby reposed in him, according to the several powers and authorities granted or appointed to him by virtue of this Order and of his Commission, and according to such instructions as may from time to time be given to him under His Majesty's Sign Manual and Signet, or by order of His Majesty in Council, or by His Majesty through a Secretary of State, and according to such laws as are or shall hereafter be in force in the Protectorate.

1902

5. The Commissioner shall have an official seal, bearing the style of his office, and such device as a Secretary of State from time to time approves, and such seal shall be deemed the public seal of British Central Africa, and may be kept and used by the Commissioner for the sealing of all things whatsoever that shall pass the public seal. And, until a public seal shall be provided, the seal of the Commissioner may be used as the public seal.

6.—(1.) The Commissioner may, with the approval of the Secretary of State, by Proclamation, define any boundaries of the territories for the time being within the limits of this Order, and divide those territories into provinces or districts in such manner and with such subdivisions as may be convenient for purposes of administration, describing the boundaries thereof and assigning names thereto.

(2.) If a question arises whether any place is or is not within the Protectorate, or within any province, and such question does not appear to be determined by any such Proclamation or other evidence, it shall be referred to the Commissioner, and a certificate under his hand and seal shall be conclusive on the question, and judicial notice shall be taken thereof.

7.—(1.) All rights of His Majesty in or in relation to any Crown lands shall vest in and may be exercised by the Commissioner for the time being in trust for His Majesty, or if the Secretary of State at any time with respect to all or any such lands, by order under his hand so directs, in such other trustee or trustees for His Majesty as the Secretary of State may appoint.

(2.) The Secretary of State may, when he thinks fit, by a like order remove any trustee so appointed, and may appoint any new or additional trustee or trustees.

(3.) The Commissioner, or such other trustee or trustees, may make grants or leases of any Crown lands, or may permit them to be temporarily occupied, on such terms and conditions as he or they may think fit, and to the provisions of any Ordinance.

(4.) All mines and minerals being in, under, or upon any lands in the occupation of any native tribe, or any members thereof, or of any person not possessed of the right to work such mines and minerals, shall vest in the Commissioner, or such trustee or trustees, in like manner as the mines and minerals being in, under, or upon any Crown lands.

8. The Commissioner may, as he shall see occasion, in His Majesty's name and on his behalf, grant to any offender convicted of any offence in any Court in the Protectorate, a free and unconditional pardon, or a pardon subject to such conditions as may be lawfully thereunto annexed, or remit or commute any sentence in whole or in part.

9. The Commissioner may, as he shall see occasion, in His Majesty's name and on his behalf, remit any fines, penalties, or forfeitures which may accrue or become payable to His Majesty.

10.—(1.) A Secretary of State, or the Commissioner, subject to the directions of a Secretary of State, may, on behalf of His Majesty, appoint, or authorize the appointment of, such public officers for the administration of the Protectorate, under such designations as he may think fit, and may prescribe their duties.

(2.) The Commissioner may, upon sufficient cause to him appearing, suspend from the exercise of his office any such public officer, which suspension shall continue and have effect only until His Majesty's pleasure therein shall be made known and signified to the Commissioner.

(3.) Subject to the provisions of any Ordinance, the Commissioner may appoint, or authorize Heads of Departments to appoint, such clerks and other subordinate officers as may be required; and unless other provision is made, all subordinate officers shall be removable by the respective officers by whom they were appointed.

11. All Ordinances, Proclamations, Regulations, Rules, or other public Notifications shall be published in the Gazette, and also in such other manner, if any, as the Commissioner may direct in the case of any particular Notification.

Legislation.

12.—(1.) The Commissioner may make Ordinances for the administration of justice, the raising of revenue, and generally for the peace, order, and good government of all persons in British Central Africa.

(2.) The Commissioner shall observe any general or special instructions of the Secretary of State with respect to the previous submission to the Secretary of State of draft Ordinances, to the making of Ordinances for particular purposes, to the amendment of Ordinances or draft Ordinances, and to other matters in relation thereto; but nothing in this provision shall affect the validity of any Ordinance.

(3.) In making Ordinances, the Commissioner shall respect existing native laws and customs except so far as the same may be opposed to justice or morality.

(4.) The Commissioner shall sign every Ordinance made by him, and shall at the first available opportunity transmit an authenticated copy thereof to the Secretary of State.

(5.) The Secretary of State may disallow any Ordinance, wholly or in part, and upon such disallowance being publicly notified in the Gazette, the provisions so disallowed shall thereupon cease to have effect, but without prejudice to anything lawfully done or suffered thereunder.

(6.) The Ordinances of each year shall be numbered consecutively, and each may be cited by its number and year, or by its short title, if any.

(7.) Where a date for the commencement of an Ordinance is not fixed in the Ordinance, it shall come into force on the day on which it is promulgated by the Commissioner,

(8.) An Ordinance may apply to the Protectorate any Act or Law of any Legislature of India or of any Colony, subject to any exceptions and modifications.

(9.) The Commissioner shall, at the first available opportunity after any Rules or Regulations are made under the provisions of any Ordinance, transmit an authenticated copy thereof to the Secretary of State.

(10.) An Ordinance shall not be repealable by any Rules or Regulations made under an Ordinance.

(11.) An Ordinance varying or affecting any Order in Council relating to the Protectorate, which is not repealed by this Order, shall not come into force unless it has been previously approved by the Secretary of State, and such approval shall be recited therein.

Application of Law.

13. The enactments described in the First Schedule to "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," shall apply to British Central Africa as if it were a British Colony or possession, but subject to the provisions of this Order and to the exceptions, adaptations, and modifications following, that is to say:—

(i.) The Commissioner is hereby substituted for the Governor of a Colony or British possession and the High Court is hereby substituted for a Superior Court or Supreme Court, and for a Magistrate or Justice of the Peace of a Colony or British possession.

(ii.) For the portions of the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 and 1867, referred to in the said Schedule, shall be substituted Part XIII of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894."

(iii.) In section 51 of "The Conveyancing (Scotland) Act, 1874," and any enactment for the time being in force amending the same, the High Court is substituted for a Court of Probate in a Colony.

(iv.) With respect to "The Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881":—

(a.) So much of the 4th and 5th sections of the said Act as relates to sending a report of the issue of a warrant, together with the information, or a copy thereof, or to the sending of a certificate of committal and report of a case or to the information to be given by a Magistrate to a fugitive, shall be excepted, and in lieu of such information the person acting as the Magistrate shall inform the fugitive that in the British possession or Protectorate to which he may be conveyed he has the right to apply for a writ of habeas corpus or other like process.

(b.) So much of the 6th section of the said Act as requires the expiration of fifteen days before issue of warrant shall be excepted.

(c.) The Commissioner shall not be bound to return a fugitive offender to a British possession unless satisfied that the proceedings to obtain his return are taken with the consent of the Governor of that possession.

(d,) For the purposes of Part II of the said Act, Uganda, Zanzibar, the East Africa Protectorate, and all British possessions and Protectorates in Africa south of the Equator shall be deemed to be one group of British possessions.

14. Where, under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, or any amending Act, anything is authorized to be done by, to, or before a British Consular officer, such thing may be done in any place in the Protectorate, at which there is no Consular officer, by such officer of the Protectorate Government as the Commissoner may appoint.

Courts of Justice.

15.—(1.) There shall be a Court of Record styled "His Majesty's High Court of British Central Africa" (in this Order referred to as "the High Court") with full jurisdiction, civil and criminal, over all persons and over all matters in the Protectorate.

(2.) Such civil and criminal jurisdiction shall, so far as circumstances admit, be exercised in conformity with the substance of the law for the time being in force in England, and with the powers vested in and according to the procedure and practice observed by and before Courts of Justice and Justices of the Peace in England according to their respective jurisdictions and authorities, except so far as may be otherwise provided by law.

(3.) The High Court shall sit at such place or places as the Commissioner may appoint.

(4.) The High Court shall have a seal bearing the style of the Court and a device approved by the Secretary of State; but until such a seal is provided, a stamp bearing the words "High Court of British Central Africa" may be used instead thereof.

16.—(1.) The High Court shall be a Court of Admiralty, and shall exercise Admiralty jurisdiction in all matters arising upon any lake or other navigable inland waters or otherwise relating to ships and shipping.

(2.) The following enactments of "The Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, 1890," that is to say, section 2, sub-sections (2) to (4), sections 5 and 6, section 16, sub-section (3), shall apply to the High Court as if in the said sections the said Court were mentioned in lieu of a Colonial Court of Admiralty, and the Protectorate were referred to in lieu of a British possession.

1902

(3.) Admiralty jurisdiction may be conferred by Ordinance on any Court subordinate to the High Court.

(4.) Any Ordinance varying or affecting the Admiralty jurisdiction of any Court or conferring Admiralty jurisdiction on any Court shall not come into force unless it has been previously approved by the Secretary of State, and such approval shall be recited therein.

17.—(1.) There shall be as many Judges of the High Court as may from time to time be required.

(2.) Every Judge shall be appointed by His Majesty and shall hold office during pleasure.

(3.) When there are more Judges than one, the principal Judge shall have such distinguishing title as the Secretary of State may approve.

(4.) In any case of death, illness or absence, or in any other emergency, the Commissioner may appoint an Acting Judge.

18.—(1.) Courts subordinate to the High Court or any Courts of special jurisdiction may be constituted by or under the provisions of any Ordinance as occasion requires.

(2.) Provision may be made by Ordinance for the hearing and determining of appeals from any such Court by the High Court or otherwise.

19. Article 10 of this Order shall apply to the appointment of all Judges and Magistrates (other than Judges of the High Court), and to Registrars and other principal officers of the High Court, in like manner as it applies to public officers; and the provisions of that Article relating to clerks and subordinate officers shall apply to all Courts.

20 In all cases, civil and criminal, to which natives are parties, every Court (a) shall be guided by native law so far as it is applicable and is not repugnant to justice and morality or inconsistent with any Order in Council or Ordinance, or any Regulation or Rule made under any Order in Council or Ordinance; and (b) shall decide all such cases according to substantial justice without ~~excessive~~ undue regard to technicalities of procedure and without undue delay.

21. If any sentence of death is pronounced by the High Court, a copy of the evidence shall be transmitted to the Commissioner, and the sentence shall not be carried into effect until confirmed by him.

22. Subject to the provisions of any Ordinance, the High Court may, with the approval of the Commissioner, make Rules for regulating the practice and procedure of the High Court and of all other Courts which may be established in the Protectorate.

The power to make Rules under this Article shall include (a) a power to fix fees and scales of remuneration, and (b) a power to regulate the conditions on which persons may be admitted to practise as advocates or solicitors in the Courts of the Protectorate.

At the first available opportunity after any such Rules are made, the Commissioner shall transmit an authenticated copy thereof to the Secretary of State.

23.—(1.) A Court under this Order shall not exercise any jurisdiction in any proceeding whatsoever over the Commissioner or his official or other residences, or his official or other property.

(2.) This Article shall not operate in bar of any proceeding against the Commissioner in his official capacity, where it is sought to establish any liability of the Government of the Protectorate.

Removal and Deportation.

24. Where an offender convicted before any Court is sentenced to imprisonment, and the Commissioner, proceeding under section 7 of "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," authority in that behalf being hereby given to him, considers it expedient that the sentence should be carried into effect ~~within His Majesty's dominions~~, outside of the Protectorate, he may order the offender to be removed to a place in some part of His Majesty's dominions out of the United Kingdom, the Government whereof consents that offenders may be sent thither under this Article.

25.—(1.) Where it is shown by evidence on oath, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner, that any person is conducting himself so as to be dangerous to peace and good order in British Central Africa, or is endeavouring to excite enmity between the people of the Protectorate and His Majesty, or is intriguing against His Majesty's power and authority in the Protectorate, the Commissioner may, if he thinks fit, by writing under his hand and official seal, order that person to be deported from the Protectorate, to such place as the Commissioner may direct.

(2.) The place shall be a place in some part (if any) of His Majesty's dominions to which the person belongs, or the Government of which consents to the reception of persons deported under this Order.

(3.) An appeal shall not lie against an order of deportation made under this Article.

(4.) If any person deported under this Order returns to the Protectorate without the permission, in writing, of the Secretary of State (which permission the Secretary of State may give), he shall be deemed guilty of an offence, and liable on conviction to imprisonment for any period not exceeding three months, with or without a fine not exceeding 50*l.*; and he shall also be liable to be forthwith again deported.

(5,) The Commissioner, by order under his hand and official seal, may vary or rescind any order of deportation under this Article.

(6.) The Commissioner shall forthwith report to the Secretary of State every order made by him under this Article, and the grounds thereof, and the proceedings thereunder.

26.—(a.) Where, under this Order, a person is to be removed or deported from the Protectorate, he shall, by warrant of the Commissioner under his hand and seal, be detained, if necessary, in custody, or in prison, until a fit opportunity for his removal or deportation occurs, and then if he is to be deported beyond sea, be put on board one of His Majesty's vessels of war, or, if none is available, then on board some other British or other fit vessel.

(b.) The warrant of the Commissioner shall be sufficient authority to the person to whom it is directed or delivered for execution, and to the Commander or master of the vessel, to receive and detain the person therein named, in the manner therein prescribed, and to remove, and carry him to the place therein named, according to the warrant.

(c.) In case of removal for any purpose other than deportation, the warrant of the Commissioner shall be issued in duplicate, and the person executing it shall, as soon as practicable after his arrival at the place therein named, deliver, according to the warrant, with one of the duplicates of the warrant, to a constable, or proper officer of police or keeper of a prison, or other proper authority or person there, the person named in the warrant, to be produced on the order of the proper Court or authority there, or to be otherwise dealt with according to law.

27. Subject to the other provisions of this Order, all expenses of removal of prisoners and others, and the expenses of deportation, and of the sending of any person to any part of His Majesty's dominions or Protectorates, including expenses of maintenance, shall be defrayed in such manner as the Secretary of State directs.

Supplementary.

28. On the commencement of this Order, the following Orders in Council, in this Order referred to as the Africa Orders, shall cease to apply to British Central Africa, that is to say:—

"The Africa Order in Council, 1889."
"The Africa Order in Council, 1892."
'The Africa Order in Council, 1893."
"The Africa (Acquisition of Lands) Order in Council, 1898," and
"The Africa Protectorate (Capital Sentences) Order in Council, 1898."

Provided as follows:—

(1.) Where other provision is not made by Ordinance, any law, practice, or procedure, established by or under the Africa Orders, shall remain in force until such other provision is made.

(2.) All legal proceedings begun under the Africa Orders and pending at the commencement of this Order shall be continued as if this Order had not been passed.

(3.) All Regulations and Rules made under the Africa Orders shall remain in force until otherwise provided by Ordinance.

29. This Order shall commence and have effect as follows:—

(1.) As to the making of any warrant or appointment, the framing of Ordinances and Rules of Procedure, the issue of instructions, and as to any other provisions necessary for bringing this Order into effect, immediately from and after the date of this Order.

(2.) As to all other matters and provisions comprised and contained in this Order, immediately after this Order is first published in the Gazette, and the time of such publication shall be deemed to be the time of the commencement of this Order.

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Lansdowne, K.G., one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 6.

[June 7, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Draft East African Protectorates (Court of Appeal) Order in Council.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 3, 1902.

WITH reference to my letters of the 19th and 31st March last and the 27th ultimo, forwarding drafts of the proposed Uganda, East Africa, and British Central Africa Orders in Council, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to forward to you a draft of the Eastern African Protectorates (Court of Appeal) Order in Council, which has been framed with a view to establish a Court for the hearing and determining of appeals from His Majesty's Courts in the Protectorates of East Africa, Uganda, and British Central Africa.

I am to request that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether the draft may in its present shape properly be submitted with the other draft Orders to the King in Council, for His Majesty's approval, or whether its terms require modification in any, and if so in what, respects.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CLEMENT Ll. HILL.

1902

Report.

In our opinion the draft Order, as initialled by us, may properly be submitted to His Majesty in Council for approval.

(Signed) EDWARD CARSON.
R. B. FINDLAY.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 7, 1902.

Annex.

Eastern African Protectorates.

Court of Appeal.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means His Majesty has power and jurisdiction within the territories of Africa known as the East Africa, Uganda, and British Central Africa Protectorates (in this Order referred to as "the said Protectorates"):

And whereas it is expedient that a Court should be established for the hearing and determining of appeals from His Majesty's Courts in the said Protectorates:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in His Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as "Eastern African Protectorates (Court of Appeal) Order in Council, 1902."

2. A Court shall be constituted, called His Britannic Majesty's Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa (in this Order referred to as "The Court of Appeal"), which shall exercise such appellate jurisdiction and such other powers in relation to the High Courts and other Courts in the said Protectorates as may from time to time be conferred by Ordinances passed under the provisions of the Orders in Council relating to the said Protectorates respectively.

3. The members of the Court of Appeal shall be the Judge or Judges for the time being of His Majesty's Court for Zanzibar, and the Judge or Judges for the time being of the High Courts of the said Protectorates respectively, and such other competent person or persons, if any, each being a member of the Bar of England, Scotlaed, or Ireland, of not less than five years' standing, as the Secretary of State may from time to time appoint.

4. The precedence of the Judges of the Court of Appeal shall be determined according to instructions to be given from time to time by the Secretary of State.

5. For the hearing and determining of appeals, three Judges of the Court of Appeal shall sit together; but provision may be made by Rules of Court for the hearing of any specified classes of cases by less than three Judges.

6. The Court of Appeal may sit at such places in Zanzibar, or in any of the said Protectorates as may be fixed by Rules of Court.

7. The Secretary of State may appoint a Registrar and such other officers of the Court of Appeal as may be necessary.

8.—(1.) The Court of Appeal may make Rules of Court with respect to all matters of procedure relating to the exercise of its jurisdiction.

(2.) Rules of Court when allowed by the Secretary of State shall have effect as if contained in this Order: Provided that in case of urgency declared in the Rules, the same shall take effect before such allowance, and shall continue to have effect unless and until they are modified or altered by the Secretary of State, and are published by the Court of Appeal as so modified or altered.

9.—(1.) When a final judgment or order of the Court of Appeal made in a civil action involves the amount or value of 10,000 rupees or upwards any party aggrieved thereby may, within such time as may be prescribed by Rules of Court, or if no time is prescribed, within three months after the same is made or given, apply by petition to the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal to His Majesty the King in Council.

(2.) The applicant shall give security to the satisfaction of the Court of Appeal to an amount not exceeding the amount or value of 5,000 rupees for prosecution of the appeal, and for such costs in the event of the dismissal of the appeal for want of prosecution as the Court of Appeal may award, and for payment of all such costs as may be awarded to any respondent by His Majesty in Council, or by the Lords of the Judicial Committee of His Majesty's Privy Council.

(3.) He shall also pay into the Court of Appeal a sum estimated by that Court to be the amount of the expense of the making up and transmission to England of the transcript of the record.

(4.) If security and payment are so given and made within such time as may be prescribed by Rules of Court, then, and not otherwise, the Court of Appeal shell give leave to appeal, and the appellant shall be at liberty to prefer and prosecute his appeal to His Majesty in Council according to the Rules for the time being in force respecting appeals to His Majesty in Council from his Colonies, or such other Rules as His Majesty in Council from time to time thinks fit to make concerning appeals from the Court of Appeal.

(5.) In any case the Court of Appeal, if it considers it just or expedient to do so, may give leave to appeal on the terms and in the manner aforesaid.

10.—(1.) Where leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is applied for by a person ordered to pay money, or do any other act, the Court of Appeal shall direct either that the order appealed from be carried into execution, or that the execution thereof be suspended pending the appeal, as the Court thinks just.

(2.) If the Court of Appeal directs the order to be carried into execution, the person in whose favour it is made shall, before the execution of it, give security to the satisfaction of the Court for performance of such order as His Majesty in Council may think fit to make.

(3.) If the Court of Appeal directs the execution of the order to be suspended, the party against whom it is given shall, before an order for suspension is made, give security to the satisfaction of the Court for performance of such order as His Majesty in Council may think fit to make.

11. This Order shall not affect the right of His Majesty at any time, on the humble petition of any person aggrieved by a decision of the Court of Appeal, to admit his appeal on such terms and in such manner as His Majesty in Council may think fit, and to deal with the decision appealed from in such manner as may be just.

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Lansdowne, K.G., one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 7.

[June 10, 1902.]

Sir H. MacDonell to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received June 4.)

(No. 9. Africa.)
(Telegraphic.) Lisbon, June 4, 1902.

War in South Africa. Boers interned in Portugal, and French prisoners in Ceylon. Also as to Oath of Allegiance.

MINISTER for Foreign Affairs has called to inform me that as His Majesty's Government have officially announced surrender of Boers, he is of opinion that Portuguese cannot rightly continue to exercise same supervision, and that as British subjects the prisoners are now freed by the law of nations.

Those who claim foreign nationality will be handed over to their respective Consuls, and the Portuguese Government will continue, until some arrangement is come to, to provide for the women and children.

As the same appears to be urgent, I requested Minister for Foreign Affairs, in the name of His Majesty's Government, to leave question in statu quo for forty-eight hours until I received your Lordship's instructions.

If liberated, these prisoners will be on my and the Consul's hands.

Memorandum (A) by Lord Lansdowne.

Sir H. MacDonell's telegram No. 9.

We shall have to confer with the Colonial Office and War Office as to this.

I do not see how we can prevent the Portuguese Government from handing over the prisoners who have been interned in Portugal to their respective Consuls; and our Consul must be responsible for those delivered to him until we have found some means of disposing of them. Up to the present time they have been provided for by the Portuguese Government, although I am told there is some possibility that a demand will be made upon us to refund the expenses incurred. I think we might tell Sir H. MacDonell that we are ready to make arrangements for repatriating the Boer prisoners, provided they will take the oath of allegiance in such form as the Colonial Office may determine. If they refuse to do so, I do not see why we should take any responsibility for them. In that case they would be thrown upon the hands of the Portuguese Government. I do not know if there is any poor law in Portugal, but the Portuguese Government could probably be trusted to make them so uncomfortable that they would either make the necessary declaration, or find some means of getting out of the country.

1902

We ought to ascertain how it is intended to deal with the foreign prisoners, who ought to be prevented, if possible, from returning to South Africa.

Mr. Davidson should see and advise before we apply to the Colonial Office.

L.

Foreign Office, June 5, 1902.

Memorandum (B) by Lord Lansdowne.

M. Cambon has asked us to make early arrangements for the repatriation of the French prisoners now detained in Ceylon.

A [I think he should be told that if the French Government will make arrangements at its own expense for removing them we shall raise no objection, but unless this is done these prisoners must take their chance with the rest.] We have intimated that the prisoners are to be released at such time and in such order as we may find convenient, and we cannot be expected to go out of our way in order to give priority to these men, who had less excuse than any one for taking the field against us.

We ought, also, I think, to stipulate that the French Government should take whatever precautions may be possible in order to prevent them from returning to South Africa. Mr. Davidson should see.

L.

Foreign Office, June 5, 1902.

Memorandum by Sir M. Ommanney.

Boers interned in Portugal.

A. Foreigners will be handed over to their Consuls. We cannot prevent their leaving Portugal; but they must be told that they will not be allowed to return to the Transvaal or the Orange River Colony, and the existing system of permits will prevent them from landing in any part of British South Africa. His Majesty's Minister should be instructed to obtain a list of the names and the descriptions of these persons for communication to Lord Milner and the military authorities in the Cape and Natal.

B. Burghers of the late Republics. It does not seem possible to ask Portugal to retain these men. Those who have means will be granted a permit to return to the two Colonies on their duly making such a declaration of allegiance to the King as we shall prescribe; and those who can prove to the satisfaction of our Consul that they are necessitous will be given free passages back on the same condition.

M. F. O.

June 5, 1902.

High Commissioner Lord Milner to Mr. Chamberlain.

(Telegraphic.) June 4, 1902.

I think that it would be well that the formal oath of allegiance adopted in South Africa be applied to the prisoners of war camps before a person qualified to administer oaths, with whom a Dutch minister of religion should be associated, if possible. The form should be in triplicate, one copy retained by the person taking the oath, one sent to the Secretary to the Administration of the Transvaal or Orange River Colony respectively, and the third retained and sent to High Commissioner when each camp is finally closed. The form of oath is as follows:—

Begins: Whereas at the time of the outbreak of hostilities between the Government of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria and the Governments of the late South African Republic and the late Orange Free State, I, the Undersigned (here insert full name of the burgher taking the oath), of (here insert the name of farm, or town, ward, and district) now residing at   was a burgher of the Transvaal (or Orange River Colony); and whereas the said Transvaal (or Orange River Colony) has been annexed to and become part of the Empire of His Majesty King Edward the VIIth; and whereas I am desirous of formally claiming and securing all and sundry the rights and privileges of a British subject, to which, by reason of the fact of annexation, I am now justly entitled; I do now, therefore, hereby formally declare that I acknowledge myself to be a subject of His Majesty King Edward the VIIth, and I do sincerely promise that I will be true and faithful and bear true allegiance to His Most Gracious Majesty King Edward the VIIth, his heirs and successors, according to law. Signature of applicant, sworn and declared before me at   , this   day of   , 190 . Signature of Special Commissioner. Ends.

Memorandum by Mr. Davidson.

(a.) Interned Prisoners in Portugal.

The position of the interned prisoners appears to be this: Portugal, having allowed them to take asylum in her territory during the continuance of hostilities, was bound to take effective measures to prevent their return to the seat of war, or resumption of the position of combatants, so long as the war continued. It was technically open to Portugal to decline to allow these combatants to enter Portuguese neutral territory, and to prevent them, if necessary by force, from so doing. But the mitior usus of modern civilized warfare recognizes that in such cases internment in the neutral country until the conclusion of the war is the reasonable course. Primâ facie, the expenses of such internment should be borne by the Government of the interned combatants, and it is to such Government that the interning Government would, in normal circumstances, look for reimbursement in respect of the maintenance, lodging, and subsistence of those interned. For instance, in the case of the troops of General Bourbaki's army, who crossed the Franco-Swiss frontier into Switzerland, and were subsequently interned for a long period in Geneva and other towns of the Confederation, the French Government in 1872 paid direct to the Government of the Swiss Confederation a sum of over 12,000,000 fr.

It is true that an Agreement or Convention was entered into between General Clinchant on behalf of the French and General Herzog on behalf of the Confederation before the French troops crossed the frontier of the neutral State; but I think that, in the absence of any such Agreement, the French Government would have come under an equitable obligation to reimburse that of the Confederation.

In the present case, the then Governments of the Boer Republics have ceased to exist, and the British Government has become their representative in title and estate. It is therefore, in the absence of any special Agreement on the matter, to the British Government that Portugal may probably look for reimbursement in respect of the interned combatants.

Technically, I think that all these interned combatants became, on the formal conclusion of conditions of peace (or, I should rather say, terms of surrender), free men, at liberty—subject to their having the necessary funds to do so—to go where they listed subject to the laws of the land to which they choose to go, and to any conditions made binding on them by the Boer Representatives when they signed the terms of surrender.

Having regard to the circumstances in which Portugal undertook their custody, I do not think that we can allow Portugal to be at any charges respecting them. Our Consuls should do all they properly can do in the matter; but I do not think that we can compel the interned Boers to place themselves under the direction or control of our Consuls. Nor, I think, could we impose, in Portugal, conditions as to their quitting that country, except with the acquiescence of the Portuguese Government and the consent of the men themselves. Nor, on the other hand, could we object to Portugal, if their general law allows of the ejection of aliens, turning them out of that country.

The proper time and place to impose condition either in esse or in posse will either be on their attempting to land, or in contemplation of their avowed intention of landing, in British South Africa. We can prevent their returning to South Africa unless they comply with these conditions; and we can make the grant of free passages or other assistance enabling them to return to South Africa contingent on their taking the oath of allegiance, and giving other guarantees for their future good behaviour if allowed to return.

1902

(β.) French Prisoners detained in Ceylon.

I agree that French prisoners of war are not entitled to special consideration at our hands, but rather the reverse—if there should be any difference of treatment. They embroiled themselves, for whatever reason, in a quarrel which was not their own, and are entitled to none of the sympathy which is naturally to be extended to a vanquished opponent who has been fighting in defence of his own country and his own fireside.

I think, however, that everyone, of whatever actual nationality, who has hitherto been in custody as a prisoner of war, is legally in precisely the same position. On the conclusion of the war by formal Agreement or Declaration, every prisoner of war becomes ipso facto of the conclusion of peace a free man. "Cessante ratione cessat et ipsa lex" (captivitatis). I do not think that we have, strictly speaking, any right to keep prisoners of war in captivity after war has ceased—though the general principle is subject to the qualification that "their return to their own country (i.e., the late belligerent country) may be subordinated to such rules, and they may so far be kept under military surveillance as may be dictated by reasonable precaution against misconduct or even by reasonable regard for the convenience of the State by which they have been captured." (Hall, "International Law," 4th Ed., p. 580.)

I do not think that we can detain French prisoners of war who wish and have the means to return to France, although we may put conditions on them as to their return to British South Africa.

It might be desirable, if Lord Lansdowne thinks well, that, before we write officially to the Colonial Office, I should see Mr. Cox privately, and ascertain whether these views have his general concurrence. Possibly, also, it might be useful if he and I were to see the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General and discuss these points with them.

W. E. D.

June 8, 1902.

Mr. Davidson,

I should be glad if you would do this. The sooner we can give an answer the better (vide Sir H. MacDonell's telegram).

I should like to be able to speak to M. Cambon on Wednesday in the sense of my Minute (vide passage marked "A"), reserving the right to impose whatever conditions the Colonial Office may desire to insist upon.

L.

Opinion of the Law Officers.

We agree generally with the terms of Lord Lansdowne's Memoranda as to the Boers in Portuguese territory and as to the French prisoners.

It does not seem desirable that the foreign prisoners should be allowed to return to South Africa, and the British Consul at Delagoa Bay should act with regard to the persons interned only under definite instructions from home.

No liability to the Portuguese Government should be admitted in respect of the cost of maintenance of those interned.

R. B. F.
E. C.

June 10, 1902.

Lord Lansdowne,

The Law Officers say:—

"No liability to the Portuguese Government should be admitted in respect of the cost of maintenance of those interned."

As a matter of equity and policy, we ought to pay for the keep of those interned. It would have a very bad effect if, standing as we do in the shoes of the Transvaal ex-Government, we treated the Portuguese less well than the French did the Swiss.

There can be little doubt that when the Boer refugee combatants crossed into Portuguese territory we should have been quite ready to undertake to pay the Portuguese for their safe keeping during the remainder of the war if we had been asked to do so. We have had the benefit of these Boer refugees having been removed far from the theatre of the war, and we ought not to make use of any technical plea to ride out of what really is an honourable liability.

It is quite possible that the Portuguese Government will not accept payment; but we ought to make the offer to our ancient ally, who has behaved well.

F. B.

June 11, 1902.

Mr. Bertie,

I do not differ, but this point is not raised distinctly in these papers. Will you go over to Colonial Office and find out whether they agree to my Minutes marked "A" and "B"?

L.

No. 7A. [Colonial Office.]

[June 30, 1902.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, June 30, 1902.

Return to South Africa of prisoners of war and other burghers.

WE were honoured with your commands signified to us by Mr. Bertram Cox in his letter of the 25th instant, stating that he had been directed by you to transmit to us a copy of a Memorandum* prepared in your Department, dealing with various questions connected with the release and repatriation of prisoners of war and other burghers.

That Mr. Cox was to inquire whether we saw any legal objection to His Majesty's Government proceeding on the lines laid down in that Memorandum.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your command, have the honour to

Report—

That there are only two points on which we have any observations to offer on this Memorandum from the legal point of view.

The first relates to allowing foreigners to go to their own country "on the understanding that they will not go to South Africa." There might be some difficulty in exacting from these persons an undertaking not to return to South Africa, but they might very well be informed that they will not be permitted to land there. If an undertaking were exacted questions might arise as to there being any right to detain any such persons who refused to give it.

The second point relates to the treatment of burghers who have not lost their German or other nationality of origin. We think that on the terms of surrender difficulties might arise as to asserting a right on the part of His Majesty's Government to refuse return on taking the oath of allegiance in the case, at all events, of those who have been domiciled in South Africa for a long period, as they may be said to be not the less burghers because they also retain their old nationality, just as the 7th section of our own Naturalization Act, 1870, contemplates that a naturalized alien may retain his old nationality.

It is possible that special cases may arise in which special treatment in this respect might be equitable, and we do not desire to express any opinion on this except in view of all the circumstances of any such case if it arises.

We are, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

---

* African No. 696 (Colonial Office Paper).

1902

No. 8.

[October 10, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 13, 1902.

Claim of Oost Afrikaansche Compagnie for rent for premises occupied by troops.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the Papers noted in the accompanying list, respecting a claim which was put forward, on the 21st September last, by the Netherlands Chargé d'Affaires on behalf of the Oost Afrikaansche Compagnie for rent for the occupation of their store at Machadodorp by British troops. (Paper A.)

The claim was referred in due course to the General Officer Commanding-in-chief in South Africa, and, on his report in regard to it (Paper B) being received, it appeared that no claims for rent for the use of buildings necessarily occupied by the military in South Africa were being admitted by the Local Compensation Boards.

The attention of the Secretary of State for War was accordingly drawn to the fact (Paper C) that the principle followed in the Egyptian War in regard to such questions (see Sir J. Ardagh's Memorandum of the 7th January, 1883), (Paper D), had been that the owner of private property in a country invaded or occupied in time of war has an equitable claim to be indemnified by the invading or occupying Power if his house is temporarily used for the accommodation of that Power's troops; and the inquiry was made whether Mr. Brodrick had approved of the principle laid down in the matter by Lord Kitchener, and, if so, what were the grounds on which he had decided to depart from the course followed in assessing the Egyptian War claims.

The War Office, in their reply (Paper E), maintained that the theory as to compensation laid down in Sir J. Ardagh's Memorandum was conclusively disproved by the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown, which he himself quoted in § 10, p. 4, of his Memorandum (Paper D), and they further pointed out that the cases cited in support of that officer's argument seem hardly conclusive. For example, the French Government voted 106,000,000 fr. after the Franco-German War of 1870–71 to indemnify its own citizens, but the compensation was for damage or destruction of real or moveable property—not for the temporary occupation of private buildings for public purposes The German Government, moreover, did not pay rent to French citizens or residents in Alsace and Lorraine on account of the temporary occupation of their houses by the German troops. Nor did the German Government pay rent to Frenchmen or others for houses temporarily occupied in other parts of France.

The War Office concluded by saying that, while there were precedents for compensation on account of loss, damage, or destruction of private property, they could find no precedent, except that of Egypt, for the payment of rent on account of the temporary occupation by troops of private buildings during war, and that it therefore seemed possible that there had been special circumstances attending the occupation of Egypt in 1882, which rendered it advisable to make the unusual concession recommended in 1883 by Sir J. Ardagh, and approved by Her late Majesty's Government. They were not, however, prepared to accept the action taken in Egypt as a precedent, all the less as it did not appear to have been based on authoritative legal opinion.

The opinion of the Law Officers to which reference is made in Sir J. Ardagh's Memorandum (Paper D) seems to relate not so much to the payment of rent as to the existence of a legal right on the part of neutrals to exemption from military contributions; it is agreed that no such right exists. (See Law Officers of the 26th August, 1870, and the 28th February, 1871.) (Paper F.) But in view of the fact that in this war requisitions are to be paid for as an act of grace, the question arises whether the forced occupation of a building for purposes in connection with the war comes within the term "requisition." A further question arises whether payment for the use of buildings so occupied is rendered necessary by the terms of any of the Proclamations (Paper G) issued by the Commanders-in-chief in South Africa. Lord Roberts' Proclamation of February 1900 (p. 1 of Paper G) states that persons who do not join in the contest shall not suffer in their persons or property, and that requisitions for food, forage, fuel, or shelter will be paid for on the spot. This promise to pay for requisitions, though the date of payment was postponed until the end of hostilities, has been repeated (see the Proclamation of May 1900, p. 7 of the collection, Paper G, above referred to, and the Proclamation, Paper I), and in these circumstances the question arises whether His Majesty's Government have contracted themselves out of their legal right to requisition without payment.

When the German armies entered France the inhabitants were at once informed that they would have to meet requisitions for the sustenance of the German forces (Paper H). The German Government subsequently referred persons who claimed payment for requisitions to the French Government, on whom the expenses of the war were to fall, and who were at liberty to compensate persons living on French territory for the losses they had sustained. If, therefore, the use of premises comes within the term "requisition," the fact to which the War Office letter (Paper E) draws attention—viz., that the Germans did not pay rent—is hardly conclusive; on the contrary, the German Government had expressly declared that they intended to avail themselves of their legal right to make the invaded territory meet requisitions without payment. There is, moreover, a further reason which appears to render the German precedent inapplicable: the fact, namely, that His Majesty's Government have annexed the Transvaal. The appropriate German precedent would, therefore, have to be looked for in Alsace and Lorraine and it is understood that in those countries compensation was given for losses, though no doubt only as an act of grace. The award of compensation being an act of grace, the German Government were free not to include rent among the subjects on account of which compensation would be given.

The War Office further remark that the French Government did not give compensation for the occupation of private buildings; but it was within the competence of the French Government also to say for which classes of losses they would, as an act of grace, give compensation; whereas it seems possible that, considering the Proclamations, His Majesty's Government are not in a like condition of freedom.

It is urged, however, by the War Office, in a further letter (Paper M) dealing with this point, that neither of the Proclamations referred to above can be said to deprive His Majesty's Government of the legal right to occupy private buildings without payment.

Since the preparation of this reference was commenced, terms of surrender have been arranged with the Boer forces in the field. The terms will be found at p. 12 of the accompanying Parliamentary Paper (Paper K). Article 10 of the terms provides for the liquidation of sums secured by receipts given by officers in the field of the late Republics, in those cases in which it is found that the receipts were issued in return for valuable consideration. It will in practice be necessary to treat receipts issued by British officers not less favourably than those issued by the officers of the enemy's forces. But although it is thought right to call your attention to this stipulation, it is improbable that it will affect the main question on which your advice is sought.

I am to request you to take these observations and the above-mentioned Papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether any payments strictly in the nature of rent, as opposed to compensation for actual damage done to the tenement, ought to be made for the occupation of buildings used for military purposes during the course of the present war, either on account of the various Proclamations which were issued in South Africa or upon any other ground; and, generally, with any observations on the case which you may see fit to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Baron Schimmelpenninck	September 21, 1901.
(B.)	War Office	March 5, 1902.
(C.)	To War Office	March 17, „
(D.)	Sir J. Ardagh (Memorandum)	January 7, 1883.
(E.)	War Office	April 11, 1902.
(F.)	War Office (with Law Officers' Reports of August 26, 1870 and February 28, 1871)	April 24, „
(G.)	Collection of Proclamations during Boer War.
(H.)	German Proclamations on entering France.
(I.)	Army Order of December 17 1900 (postponing payment till end of hostilities).

1902

(K.) Correspondence respecting the terms of surrender of Boer forces still in the field (Parliamentary, 4105) [C. 1096].
(L.) Colonial Office	May	20, 1902.
(M.) War Office	August	16, „

Report.

We are of opinion that there is no obligation on His Majesty's Government to make payments in the nature of rent for the occupation of buildings for military purposes during the war.

Where an occupant has been expropriated and has thereby suffered actual damage it is a question of policy whether he should be compensated, but in such cases any compensation should be estimated on the basis of actual loss, and not on that of rent, and should be paid ex gratiâ only.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
October 10, 1902.

No. 9.

[November 18, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Bishops in Uganda, Mombasa, and Zanzibar: Limits of Jurisdiction.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 6, 1902.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list on the subject of a proposal made by His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury for the rearrangement of the areas of Episcopal authority exercised by the Bishops of Uganda, Mombasa, and Zanzibar respectively.

In this connection I am to invite your attention to the Reports furnished by the then Law Officers of the Crown, dated the 7th February, the 6th May, and the 19th August, 1890, on a somewhat similar question of the jurisdiction of Bishops of the Church of England in China, Japan, and Corea.

I am to inclose the drafts of Warrants which have been prepared by His Grace's directions, assigning new limits for the Bishops of Uganda, Mombasa, and Zanzibar. These drafts have been approved by and on behalf of the Bishops concerned, the Church Missionary Society, and the Universities' Mission to Central Africa; and I am to request that, in taking these papers into your consideration, you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether the terms of the Warrants are such as may properly be submitted to the King for His Majesty's approval and signature.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.) Law Officers' Reports of February 6, May 6, and August 19, 1890.
(B.) Mr. H. W. Lee	September	, 1899.
(C.) To Archbishop of Canterbury	October	2, „
(D.) Mr. F. H. Lee	October	28, 1902.
(E.) Drafts of Warrants proposed to be issued in the cases of the Bishops of Uganda, Mombasa, and Zanzibar.

Report.

We see no reason why the Warrant should be addressed to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and it does not appear to have been so framed in the form approved by our predecessors in 1890.

We also think that it would be advisable to have one Warrant only defining the limits in the several cases. The form settled by our predecessors should be adhered to.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
November 18, 1902.

No. 10.

[December 8, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

D. O. Galmore Greene's spurious letters about Somaliland

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 17, 1902.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to bring to your notice the following facts:—

On the 20th and 23rd ultimo there appeared in the public press certain letters, which are inclosed herein, as marked in the accompanying list, purporting to have been addressed to a person calling himself D. O. Galmore-Greene by an individual in Somaliland.

These letters profess to give an account of the state of affairs existing in that country as regards the military expedition against the Mullah, and caused no little stir and uneasiness in the public mind at the time they appeared.

On the 22nd ultimo the accompanying letter was addressed by Major Close, R.E., to the Superintendent of African Protectorates, administered under the Foreign Office, stating that Captain Crosthwait, R.E., had allowed him to see a letter from the person styling himself Galmore-Greene, in which the latter admitted that the letters above referred to were invented and written by himself.

Lord Lansdowne is extremely anxious that the gravity of his offence should, if possible, be brought home to the author of these spurious letters.

There appears to his Lordship to be some room for doubt whether an offence has been committed, even if the facts are established. There is very little authority on the subject, and the text-book writers do not seem to be agreed.

In Starkie on "Libel" (Folkard, 1869), page 660, it is said that probably the fabrication and publication of false news, producing any serious public detriment, would be regarded as criminal and punishable.

This is slightly extended in "Russell on Crimes" (Vol. II, page 458, 6th edition), in the chapter on Cheats and Frauds at Common Law, where it is said that probably the fabrication and publication of news likely to produce any public detriment would be considered as criminal.

The authority advanced in favour of these statements is very meagre, and consists chiefly of the summing up of L. C. J. Scroggs, in the case of R. v. Harris, 32 Car. II, 7 State Trials (Howell), page 926.

In the 3rd and 4th editions of the "Digest of the Criminal Law," by the late Mr. Justice Stephen, spreading false news was stated, but with some hesitation, to be a misdemeanour, and was attributed, not to the Common Law but to the Statute 3 Edw. I, cap. 34, the "Statute of Newes," part of the Statute of Westminster I, and the words of that Statute appear to have been wide enough to cover this case. Unfortunately the Statute was repealed by "The Statute Law Revision Act (1887)" (50 & 51 Vict., cap. 59), and in the 5th edition of Stephen's "Digest," all reference to this misdemeanour is omitted.

The position, therefore, appears to be that if the suggested misdemeanour of publishing false news, &c., was of statutory origin, the Statute to which it must be attributed is no longer in force; if of Common Law origin there is room for doubt whether the offence is complete unless serious public detriment has been produced.

1902

A copy of a letter which appeared in the "Morning Post" over the initials "A. K. S." and which is conjectured to have been written by the well-known King's Counsel, who until recently filled the offices of Treasury Solicitor and Director of Public Prosecutions, is also inclosed.

I am to request that you will take the matter into your consideration, and will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to—

1. Whether the fabrication and publication of false news calculated to alarm the public mind is an offence punishable under the Criminal Law irrespective of the effect that may be produced upon the public by such publication.

2. Whether the fabrication and publication of false news is an offence where serious public detriment is actually caused.

3. Whether any steps can be taken against a newspaper publishing, without a reasonable effort having been made to determine its authenticity, news of this character fabricated by a third person.

If, in your opinion, the answers to any of these questions should be in the affirmative, his Lordship proposes to send the papers to the Director of Public Prosecutions with a view to possible further action in the particular case.

Lord Lansdowne would also be glad to be furnished, at the same time, with any general observations you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CLEMENT Ll. HILL.

List of Papers.

Extract from the "Daily News"	October 20, 1902.
Extract from the "Daily Chronicle"	October 23, "
Major Close	October 22, "
Extract from the "Morning Post"	October 25, "

Report.

1. In our opinion the answer to this question is in the negative unless such fabrication and publication amounts to a seditious libel.

2. We think there is authority for contending that when serious public detriment ensues by the fabrication and publication of false news, and the intent to cause such detriment may be reasonably inferred, an indictment could be maintained.

3. Unless it can be inferred that those responsible for the newspaper contemplated the public detriment which ensued we do not think the prosecution could be maintained.

Generally, we do not advise a prosecution in this case.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
December 8, 1902.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

No. 11.

[July 19, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, July 8, 1902.

Gentlemen,

Austrian protest against Indian sugar duties.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to an Act recently passed in India for imposing on sugar imported from Germany and Austria-Hungary certain duties additional to the countervailing duties provided for by the Indian Act of 1899. The Act remains in force only until the 1st September, 1903—the date fixed for the Brussels Sugar Bounty Convention to come into operation—and is thus intended merely to tide over the interval.

It should be explained that at the Conference for the suppression of sugar bounties the British, Belgian, and French Delegates maintained that bounties additional to direct bounties arose on exportation from some countries owing to the operation of trusts or cartels. These trusts or cartels are a combination of sugar-producing and refining interests, which take advantage of the protection afforded by the surtax, or excess of import duty over excise, so to raise the price to the home consumer as to enable sugar to be exported at a price considerably below the price of the world's market, the large profits gained at home amply compensating for the losses incurred by selling below cost price abroad. The result is a bounty upon all sugar exported abroad.

After prolonged discussion it was ultimately agreed at the Conference and laid down in the Convention (Article IV) that the bounty derived from any given surtax should be taken as amounting to half the excess of such surtax beyond 6 fr. per 100 kilog. The recent Indian Act, in assessing the additional duties, adopts the same basis of calculation.

As you will perceive, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador at this Court has made a formal protest against the imposition of the additional duties, as being inconsistent with the terms of the Treaty of Commerce between the United Kingdom and Austria-Hungary of 1876, and contrary to the spirit of the arrangements come to by the recent Conference at Brussels.

It is proposed to reply to his Excellency in the terms of the accompanying draft, and I shall be obliged if you would state whether you concur in its terms or whether you have any suggestions to offer by way of amendment.

In connection with this question I have the honour to refer to the Report of the Solicitor-General of the 23rd June, 1899, when countervailing duties on bounty-fed sugar were first enacted in India.

I shall at the same time be glad if you will favour me with any general observations which you may wish to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) MARTIN GOSSELIN.

List of Papers.

Treaty of Commerce with Austria-Hungary	(Treaty. No. 601)	December 5, 1876.
To Lord Chancellor		June 20, 1899.
To Solicitor-General		" 20, "
Solicitor-General		" 23, "
The Lord Chancellor		July 5, "
To Austrian Ambassador		" 14, "
Procès-verbaux of Brussels Sugar Conference		1901–1902.
Brussels Sugar Convention	(Parliamentary. No. 4098)	March 5, 1902.
Indian Tariff Act. No. 8 of 1902.
Austrian Ambassador		June 3, "
Sir H. Bergne	(Memorandum)	" 6, "
To India Office		" 9, "
India Office		" 23, "
Draft note to Austrian Ambassador.

1902

Report.

We concur in the terms of the proposed draft initialled by us.

The only suggestion we have to make is that a paragraph* should be added just before the last paragraph of the draft, pointing out that it was never suggested that the Indian Act of 1899 was an infraction of the most-favoured-nation clause, and that the present Act is merely the application of the same principle to another form of bounty.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 19, 1902.

The Attorney-General to Mr. Davidson.

My dear Davidson.
House of Commons, July 22, 1902.

IN view of the unofficial protest in 1899, the addition we proposed should simply refer to the Act of 1899, and point out that the present Act is merely the application of the same principle to another form of bounty.

Though we cannot put it as strongly as we had hoped, I think the reference to the 1899 Act useful.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Annex.

Draft of Letter from the Marquess of Lansdowne to Count Deym.

Your Excellency,
Foreign Office, July 28, 1902.

I HAVE the honour to state that His Majesty's Government have considered with the most serious attention your Excellency's note of the 3rd ultimo on the subject of the Indian Act increasing the customs duties on sugar imported from countries where a surtax in excess of 6 fr. per 100 kilog. exists.

In this communication your Excellency informs me that the Austrian and Hungarian Governments have decided to make a formal protest against the measure in question, and that you have been directed to address an urgent request to His Majesty's Government to prevent its application to consignments from Austria-Hungary.

Your Excellency's representation is based apparently upon two grounds:—

1. That it is not open to the Government of India to increase the duties on Austrian and Hungarian sugars (a) because there was some implied understanding at the Brussels Conference that no action of the kind would be resorted to in the interval before the Convention should come into force, and (b) because the Brussels Convention is not yet in operation;

2. That such action is inconsistent with the Treaty of Commerce between the United Kingdom and Austria-Hungary of 1876.

In regard to the appeal to the proceedings in Conference, His Majesty's Government are unable to find in the records any vestige of such an implied understanding; the records of the Conference show, on the contrary, that at its termination each Power had reserved to itself the most complete liberty of action during the interval before the Convention should come into force. More especially was this necessary for Great Britain when in opposition to the wishes of the British Government the date of operation of the Convention was deferred until the 1st September, 1903; the Declaration made by the British Delegates at earlier stages were, in consequence, expressly and formally renewed at the 15th sitting.

Mr. Phipps on that occasion (see p. 201 of the procès-verbaux) expressly confirmed the previous Declarations by which the British delegation had formally reserved the right of their Government to take in the interval the measures which might be necessary for the protection of British interests if the date of operation of the Convention were fixed at a date later than September 1902. His Majesty's Government are not aware of any statements made or pledges given by the British Delegates which could lead to a contrary conclusion, and I should be happy to learn if the Austro-Hungarian Government can point to anything which could give colour to such a contention.

In the absence of any such evidence, His Majesty's Government must assume that their entire freedom to take during the interval any steps which may become necessary for the protection of British interests, and which at the same time are not incompatible with existing Treaty engagements, cannot seriously be questioned.

---

* Printed in italics.

I pass on therefore to the contention that the exact method which has been adopted by the Indian Government for the computation of the amount of the bounties arising under the operation of the surtax ought not to have been adopted, because the Brussels Convention is not yet in force.

It is quite true that this method of computation is not yet obligatory as between the Contracting States; but His Majesty's Government must claim that the Indian Government have shown in this respect a due regard for international comity, inasmuch as, for the assessment of the new duties, they have adopted a method of computation which was considered by the Representatives of all the Powers at Brussels to be the most equitable that could be devised, and which was fully accepted by the Austro-Hungarian Delegates and embodied in Article IV of the Convention.

It remains for me to examine the contention that the action of the Indian Government is inconsistent with the terms of the Treaty of 1876 between Great Britain and Austria-Hungary. British India is undoubtedly a party to that Treaty, but His Majesty's Government cannot admit that their action in countervailing the bounty arising from the operation of the surtax is a violation of its stipulations.

In my predecessor's note of the 14th July, 1899, when explaining to your Excellency the reasons which had led the Indian Government to resort in the first instance to countervailing duties, the Marquess of Salisbury made the following statement: "Her Majesty's Government are not disposed to admit that any Government has the right by such means (i.e., by a system of bounties) to override the clear intention of the most-favoured-nation clause, which is, that goods shall enjoy equality of treatment, but not preferential advantages, as compared with goods of the most favoured nation. When an artificial preference of such a character is produced by the direct legislative Act of a foreign Government which is a party to a most-favoured-nation stipulation, Her Majesty's Government consider that it should be open to the other Contracting Party, if such action should seem expedient, to redress the balance of trade which has thus been artificially disturbed. The remedy in such a case lies in the hands of the Government which grants the bounty, the discontinuance of which would cause the counteracting measures to disappear."

The argument thus quoted applies with exactitude to the present case; for the surtax, by means of which the cartels flourish and produce heavy bounties, is produced by the direct legislative Act of the Austro-Hungarian Government, which also has the power to discontinue it, in which case the extra duty imposed in India would no longer apply to Austro-Hungarian sugars.

The Act now passed by the Indian Government is, in fact, merely the application to another form of bounty of the principle contained in the Indian Act of 1899.*

In conclusion, I may state that the Indian Government have been impelled to the imposition of these duties by no motives of a nature unfriendly to Austria-Hungary, but solely by the imperative necessity of safeguarding an important native industry, which might otherwise have suffered irretrievable injury before the Brussels Convention could come into force; I trust that I may have convinced your Excellency that the action of the Indian Government, far from having been incorrect or opposed to existing Treaty engagements, has been necessitated by the circumstances of the case, and has been strictly consistent with the international obligations of this country.

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 12.

[September 5, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Declaration amending Extradition Treaty with Austria-Hungary.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, August 19, 1902.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the draft of an Order in Council, carrying into effect a Declaration between the United Kingdom and Austria-Hungary which was signed at London on the 26th June, 1901. This Declaration amends Article XI of the Treaty of Extradition of the 3rd December, 1873, and the ratifications were exchanged at London on the 25th June last.

I am to inclose the accompanying letters from the Home, Colonial, and India Offices, expressing concurrence in the terms of the draft Order in Council; and I have

---

* Wording suggested by the Attorney-General.

1902

the honour to request that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether it may, in its present form, be laid before the King in Council for His Majesty's approval.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

List of Papers.

Draft Order in Council ..	July 28, 1902.
Home Office	July 31, „
Colonial Office	August 14, „
India Office

Report.

We approve of the draft Order in Council as altered and initialled by us, and are of opinion that it may be laid before His Majesty in Council for His Majesty's approval.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
September 5, 1902.

Annex.

WHEREAS by the Extradition Acts, 1870 to 1895, it was amongst other things enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, His Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that His Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in, or suspected of being in, the part of His Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient;

And whereas a Treaty was concluded on the 3rd day of December, 1873, between Her late Majesty Queen Victoria and His Majesty the Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, in the case of which Treaty "The Extradition Act, 1870," was applied by Order in Council of the 17*th March,* 1874;

And whereas a Declaration was concluded on the 26th day of June, 1901, between His Majesty and His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary, amending Article XI of the said Treaty of the 3rd December, 1873, for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, which Declaration is in the terms following:—

[Here follows the text of the Declaration.]

And whereas the ratifications of the said Declaration were exchanged at London on the 25th day of June, 1902:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by and with the advice of His Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to him by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the * day of , 1902, the said Acts shall apply in the case of Austria and Hungary, ~~and of~~ under and in accordance with the said Treaty as amended by the said Declaration ~~with His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Hungary~~ above set forth.

Provided always that the operation of the said Acts shall be and remain suspended within the Dominion of Canada so long as an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Criminals," shall continue in force there, and no longer.

R. B. F.
E. C

---

* Date to be inserted by Council Office, and to be a date ten days after publication in "London Gazette."

No. 13.

[November 13, 1902.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

(Secret.)

Foreign Office, November 8, 1902.

Gentlemen,

Sir H. Rumbold's Article in "National Review." As to prosecution under "Official Secrets Act."

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to call your attention to an article on the Emperor of Austria, of which copy is herewith inclosed, published in the "National Review," and written by the Right Honourable Sir Horace Rumbold, who held the appointment of British Ambassador at Vienna from October 1896 to September 1900, when he retired on pension, and who continues to be a Member of His Majesty's Privy Council.

The article contains some strong expressions of opinion as to the feelings and disposition of the German nation towards Great Britain, which are inconvenient and embarrassing as coming from a gentleman who so recently held so high and confidential a diplomatic appointment, and are especially unwelcome at the moment when the German Emperor is coming on a visit to this country.

Sir Horace Rumbold further quotes an observation made to him as Ambassador by the Emperor of Austria, which could scarcely have been intended to be published in the press, and he gives an account of communications which passed between him and the Austrian Government, and which were at the time regarded as strictly confidential, as to the means of preventing the publication of caricatures of the late Queen.

It appears to Lord Lansdowne to be important to maintain the principle that revelations of this kind should not be made by retired Diplomatic servants of the Crown without their first obtaining the consent of the Secretary of State who is the proper judge whether the publication will or will not be injurious to the public interest.

It would appear from the opinion given in March 1888, by the then Law Officers of the Crown, of which copy is inclosed for convenience of reference, that there would be considerable difficulty in making such indiscretions, however objectionable, a ground for withholding a pension granted under "The Diplomatic Salaries, &c., Act, 1869," but Lord Lansdowne would be glad to be informed whether, in your opinion, the publication of official information by a retired Diplomatic Officer, if clearly contrary to the public interests, would be an offence under section 2 (i) of "The Official Secrets Act, 1889" (52 & 53 Vic. cap. 52), as being "contrary to the writer's official duty" even though he should no longer be holding any active appointment. It will be observed that the section refers to information acquired by any person "by means of his holding or having held an office," and it may presumably be considered that the official duty of secrecy in regard to confidential information continues after retirement.

Lord Lansdowne would wish also to be favoured with your opinion how far the point is affected by Sir H. Rumbold's position and duties as a Privy Councillor and with any observations which may occur to you on the question generally.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

In our opinion the publication of official information by a retired Diplomatic Officer—if clearly contrary to the public interests—might be an offence under section 2 (i) of "The Official Secrets Act, 1889," and the fact that he no longer held any active appointment would not constitute any defence.

We do not, however, on the information before us, regard the present case as one in which it would be proper to institute a prosecution.

The position of the writer as a Member of the Privy Council does not, in our opinion, affect this question. Of course, the name of any Privy Councillor may, for adequate reason, be removed from the list.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
November 13, 1902.

1902

BELGIUM.

No. 14.

[January 24, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, January 15, 1902.

Gentlemen,

Extradition Treaty with Belgium. Draft Order in Council.

I HAVE the honour to inclose the draft of an Order in Council for giving effect to a Treaty of Extradition recently concluded between the United Kingdom and Belgium, of which the ratifications were exchanged at Brussels on the 6th ultimo.

The various Departments of His Majesty's Government which are interested in the matter have concurred in the terms of this draft, and I am now to inquire whether, in your opinion, it may properly be submitted to the King in Council for His Majesty's approval.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

Report.

In our opinion the draft Order in Council, as initialled by us, may properly be submitted to the King in Council.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
January 24, 1902.

(Annex.)

Whereas by the Extradition Acts, 1870 to 1895, it is amongst other things enacted that, where an arrangement has been made with any foreign State with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals, His Majesty may, by Order in Council, direct that the said Acts shall apply in the case of such foreign State; and that His Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent Order, limit the operation of the Order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in the part of His Majesty's dominions specified in the Order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient;

And whereas a Treaty was concluded on the 29th day of October, 1901, between His Majesty and His Majesty the King of the Belgians for the mutual extradition of fugitive criminals, which Treaty is in the terms following:—

[Treaty follows.]

And whereas the ratifications of the said Treaty were exchanged at Brussels on the 6th day of December, 1901:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, and in virtue of the authority committed to him by the said recited Acts, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the * day of , 1901, the said Acts shall apply in the case of Belgium, and of the said Treaty with Belgium.

Provided always that the operation of the said Acts shall be and remain suspended within the Dominion of Canada so long as an Act of the Parliament of Canada passed in 1886, and entitled "An Act respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Criminals," shall continue in force there, and no longer.

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

---

* Date to be inserted by Council Office, and to be a date ten days after publication in "London Gazette."

BORNEO.

No. 14A. [Colonial Office.]

[August 11, 1902.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, August 11, 1902.

Sir,

Sarawak Government vessels to be considered public ships.

WE were honoured with your commands, signified in Mr. C. P. Lucas' letter of the 30th July last, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 1st August, 1901, upon the question whether the "Lorna Doone," a vessel belonging to the Rajah of Sarawak, and used partially for trading purposes, was entitled to the privileges of a "public vessel," he was directed by you to submit for our consideration the further correspondence noted in the margin* which had passed upon the subject.

That from that correspondence it would be seen that the Rajah possessed a number of steamers of small tonnage, all of which, with one exception, were habitually employed for the purposes of trade, though they were stated to be "primarily employed as despatch vessels to keep up communication with coast stations, and as transports."

That for all those vessels the Rajah claimed the rights and privileges enjoyed by public ships, and that Mr. Lucas was accordingly to request us to take the further papers into our consideration and to report—

1. Whether the facts now brought before us were such as to lead to any modification of our Report of the 1st August, 1901, as to the status of the "Lorna Doone";

2. Whether any of the vessels in question (other than the armed yacht "Zahora") was entitled to the privileged character of a public ship;

3. How such vessels should be treated in future if not so entitled.

We have taken the further papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1 and 2. That we see no reason to modify our Report of the 1st August, 1901, as to the status of the "Lorna Doone" upon the facts now brought before us.

We think that, upon the statements made by Sir Charles Brooke, all the ships mentioned should be treated as public vessels. It appears that all the ships are public property of the State and in their possession, that the officers hold Commissions from the State, and that they are used by the State for public purposes.

Although the vessels are engaged in trading, we think that, upon the facts here stated, this trading is merely subsidiary to their employment as despatch vessels and as transports, and the ancillary use for trading purposes does not deprive them of the character of public vessels. (See the "Parlement Belge," L.R. 5 P.D. 192.)

We have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

---

* Colonial Office to British North Borneo Company, August 29; British North Borneo Company to Colonial Office, October 17; Colonial Office to Rajah Brooke, October 24; Rajah Brooke to Colonial Office, October 25; Foreign Office to Colonial Office, November 11; Colonial Office to Rajah Brooke, December 5, 1901; Rajah Brooke to Colonial Office, February 1; Colonial Office to Foreign Office, February 11; Foreign Office to Colonial Office, March 1; Rajah Brooke to Colonial Office, May 22; Colonial Office to Foreign Office, July 4; Foreign Office to Colonial Office, July 14, 1902.

1902

CHINA.

No. 15.

[January 24, 1902.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, January 17, 1902.

Gentlemen,

Whangpoo Conservancy Order in Council.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list with regard to a draft Order in Council (Paper A) which has been prepared by Mr. Albert Gray for the purpose of making binding upon British subjects the Regulations (which are to be found in the Schedule to that Order) respecting the constitution, powers, and revenues of a Conservancy Board for the improvement and control of the navigation of the River Whangpoo.

This Board has been established by Article XI of the Final Protocol (Paper B) which was signed by the Representatives of the Powers and the Chinese Plenipotentiaries at Peking on the 7th September last, and the Regulations are contained in Annex 17 to that instrument.

I have the honour to request that you will take the draft Order into your consideration and favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether it may be submitted to the King in Council.

His Lordship would be glad to be furnished at the same time with any general observations which you may be good enough to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

(A.)—Letter from Mr. A. Gray, November 29, 1901, inclosing draft Order in Council.
(B.)—Article XI of the Final Protocol. ("China No. 1 (1902)," pp. 244 and 245.)

Report.

The draft Order in Council, as initialled by us, may properly be submitted to the King in Council for His Majesty's approval.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
January 24, 1902.

Annex.

The China (Whangpoo River Conservancy) Draft Order in Council, 1902.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, His Majesty the King has jurisdiction within the dominions of the Emperor of China;

And whereas by Article XI of the Final Protocol, signed at Peking on the 7th day of September, 1901, by the Envoys and Plenipotentiaries of China and of certain other Powers, including His Majesty the King, provision is made for the establishment of a Conservancy Board for the improvement and control of the navigation of the River Whangpoo;

And whereas the detailed Regulations with respect to the constitution, powers, and revenues of the said Conservancy Board are contained in Annex No. 17, appended to the said Protocol, a translation of which Annex appears in the Schedule to this Order;

And whereas it is expedient that the said Regulations should be made binding upon British subjects:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in His Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of the Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. The Regulations contained in the said Annex No. 17, a translation of which appears in the Schedule to this Order, are hereby declared to be binding upon all British subjects.

2. In like manner, any modifications of the said Regulations, and any Ordinances or Regulations of the said Conservancy Board enacted in pursuance thereof, shall, when brought into force in accordance with the provisions of those Regulations, be binding upon, and be observed by, all British subjects.

3. Any proceedings by the said Conservancy Board, or by any Consul or Municipality against any British subject in respect of any tax or duty payable, or any dispute or matter arising, under the said Regulations, or under any such Ordinances or Regulations of the said Board, shall be taken in the proper British Court, in accordance with the provisions of the Orders in Council for the time being in force relating to the exercise of His Majesty's jurisdiction in China.

4. All fines imposed by a Court under any Ordinances or Regulations to which effect is given by this Order shall, when recovered, be disposed of in such manner as may be prescribed by such Ordinances or Regulations, or, if the disposal thereof is not so prescribed, in such manner as the Secretary of State may direct.

5. This Order shall come into force on such day as His Majesty's Minister in China shall by public notification appoint.

6. This Order may be cited as "The China (Whangpoo River Conservancy) Order in Council, 1902."

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Lansdowne, K.G., one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

Schedule.

[Translation of Annex No. 17 to the Final Protocol.*]

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 16.

[March 26, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, March 21, 1902.

Gentlemen,

"Kowshing" Arbitration: Modification of Protocol.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the correspondence noted in the accompanying list, which has passed respecting the case of the steam-ship "Kowshing," since the receipt of your last report on the subject, dated the 8th June, 1901.

The Chinese Minister was informed on the 8th August last (see Paper C) that, unless the Chinese Government would accept the draft Protocol for submitting the question to arbitration which was inclosed in Lord Lansdowne's note of the 1st April, 1901, His Majesty's Government would have to seek reparation by other means.

No reply was received to this communication, and His Majesty's Minister at Peking was instructed by telegram on the 12th December (Paper D) to remind the Chinese Government of the reservation made by His Majesty's Government, in the event of arbitration not taking place.

In the meantime, the Indo-China Steam Navigation Company have again urged (Paper E) that some steps should be taken to procure a settlement of the case.

It has been privately suggested to Lord Lansdowne that the Chinese Government might possibly agree to waive the inclusion, on which they have hitherto strenuously insisted, in the submission to arbitration of any reference to the action of the "Naniwa" as a violation of the law of nations, for the consequences of which they

* "China No. 1 (1902)," pp. 270 to 272.

1902

(the Chinese Government) could not be held responsible, if His Majesty's Government, on their side, would consent to omit the recital alleging in terms that the conduct of the Chinese officers and troops on board the "Kowshing" was the cause which led to her destruction.

The draft Protocol as approved by the Law Officers on the 21st March last year with the addition in brackets and underlined in black ink of the sentence respecting the action of the "Naniwa," the insertion of which is desired by Chinese Minister and objected to by His Majesty's Government, is transmitted herewith (Paper F).

If the suggestion now made were adopted the result would involve the omission of all the words (from "it is alleged" to "for the consequences thereof") which are underlined in red and in black ink respectively on Paper F.

I am to request that you will take this suggested modification of the terms of the Protocol into your consideration and will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion whether the terms of reference so modified would effectively exclude all possibility of any question of the legality or otherwise of the action of the "Naniwa" being entertained by the Arbitrator, if the Chinese Government should attempt to raise it before him, and whether you consider that His Majesty's Government may having regard to the statement made to the Chinese Minister at this Court on the 8th August last, and repeated to His Majesty's Minister at Peking in the despatch of that date (Paper C), and in the telegram of the 12th December last (Paper D), properly propose them for the acceptance of the Chinese Government.

His Lordship would be glad to receive, at the same time, any general observations which you may have to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

(A.)	To Sir C. Lofêngluh	July 2, 1901.
(B.)	Sir C. Lofêngluh	July 31, „
(C.)	To Sir E. Satow .. ..(No. 184)	August 8, „
(D.)	Ditto .. .. .. (No. 353. Telegraphic)	December 12, „
(E.)	Indo-China Steam Navigation Company	March 4, 1902.
(F.)	Draft reference.
(G.)	Law Officers' Report	June 13, 1885.
(H.)	Ditto	August 2, 1894.
(I.)	Ditto	August 3, „
(J.)	To Law Officers	September 28, „
(K.)	Ditto	January 25, 1895.
(L.)	Ditto	May 22, 1896.
(M.)	Ditto	September 22, 1898.
(N.)	Ditto	April 3, 1900.
(O.)	Ditto	August 13, „ September 5, „
(P.)	Ditto	March 14, 1901.
(Q.)	Ditto	June 3, „

Report.

We are of opinion that the modification suggested may be conceded without detriment to the British case, and with a view to terminating this matter.

It would be impossible to say, whether the words proposed to be omitted were retained or struck out, that the question of the legality of the action of the "Naniwa" can be entirely excluded from the arbitration, but we do not think that the striking out of the words underlined in red ink will make any serious difference in that respect.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
March 26, 1902.

No. 17.

[June 3, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 21, 1902.

A. F. Bott and Co.'s claims for damage during Boxer rising.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to a claim put forward by Messrs. A. F. Bott and Co. for an indemnity for losses incurred in connection with the disturbances which took place in North China in the summer of 1900.

By the Protocol signed at Peking on the 7th September, 1901, between the Representatives of the Powers and the Chinese Plenipotentiaries, the Chinese Government undertook to pay a sum of 450,000,000 taels, which the Powers agreed to accept in satisfaction of all claims, both public and private.

Previous to this date, the Diplomatic Body at Peking had entrusted to a Committee composed of the Representatives of Belgium, Germany, the Netherlands, and the United States the task of laying down principles to serve as a common basis on which the claims of Societies, Companies, and private individuals should be examined and assessed by the different Legations. Their Report was considered by the Diplomatic Body, and certain amendments having been introduced, it was finally adopted. An English translation of the Report is inclosed in Sir E. Satow's despatch of the 19th March, 1901, which is printed at page 45 of Parliamentary Paper, China, No. 1, 1902 (Paper A). It will be seen that all claims of an indirect or consequential character are excluded.

In consequence of the large number of British claimants, and the legal points involved in dealing with the claims, His Majesty's Minister, in April 1901, applied for the services of Mr. H. P. Wilkinson, Crown Advocate at Shanghae, who was then on leave of absence in this country, to assist in examining and adjudicating upon the British private claims. A copy of a letter addressed to Mr. Wilkinson by Lord Lansdowne's direction instructing him to proceed to Peking for this purpose is annexed (Paper B). On his arrival at Peking he was furnished by His Majesty's Minister with a letter appointing him Commissioner "for the examination of all private British claims arising out of the disturbances of the summer of 1900." (Sir E. Satow's telegram No. 108 of the 11th May last (Paper C).) Mr. Wilkinson accordingly examined the claims, and decided the amounts to be awarded in each case, and Sir E. Satow observes that he has always held and stated in answer to inquiries that he had no power to revise Mr. Wilkinson's decisions.

Messrs. Bott and Co. entered into a contract on the 30th April, 1900, with the Chinese Engineering and Mining Company for the construction of certain harbour works at Chingwantao, North China. Work thereon was begun on the 3rd May and proceeded until the 17th June, when the state of affairs in North China rendered the then continuance of operations impossible. In the autumn work was gradually resumed, and has since been completed. A claim for compensation for losses incurred in consequence of the enforced stoppage of work was forwarded by Messrs. Bott and Co. through His Majesty's Consul-General at Tien-tsin to His Majesty's Legation at Peking. The claim as originally filed amounted to 145,277 dollars, and included an item of 62,500 dollars for "reasonable profit to be expected out of capital for the working season of 1900."

This item was subsequently withdrawn, but in its place the following additional claim was put in by the Company, and considered by Mr. Wilkinson at the hearing:—

	Dollars
On difference in cost of labour	72,448
On difference in local material and freight	9,231
On loss through extra cost of Jarrah timber from Australia, 1,500*l.*	15,000

Mr. Wilkinson's decision was given on the 25th September, 1901, and forms Inclosure 4 in Sir E. Satow's despatch No. 49 of the 24th February last (Paper D). The items for increased cost of labour and materials (72,448 dollars and 15,000 dollars), were disallowed as being "indirect, and not the necessary natural result and consequence of Boxer rising." The decision further states that "all damages suffered up to and during hostilities have been allowed for; no contract in regard to materials other than those dealt with already has been proved as existence" [sic] "at the beginning of the trouble, no goods other than those above dealt with were ordered before the trouble at a certain rate could not be delivered, and have since been purchased at a higher rate. On the 'Rules' (Paper A) and on 'Hadley v. Baxendale,' the claim for increased cost of materials and labour is disallowed."

1902

Messrs. Bott and Co., being dissatisfied with the decision, referred the matter to their solicitors, Messrs. Knapp, Fisher, and Sons, who, in their letter of the 5th December, 1901 (Paper E) forwarded a copy of an opinion taken by them from Mr. C. A. Cripps, K.C., M.P. Mr. Cripps considers that the Rules laid down in "Hadley v. Baxendale" are not applicable to the case, and that the claim is one which should have been allowed. Further letters on the subject from Messrs. Knapp, Fisher, and Sons are also inclosed (Papers F and G). A copy of Mr. Cripps' opinion was at the same time transmitted to His Majesty's Minister at Peking, and referred to Mr. Wilkinson, who has furnished a Memorandum on the subject (see Paper D) explaining the reasons for which he is unable to adopt the view taken by Mr. Cripps, and adhering to his decision.

It appears to Lord Lansdowne that having regard to the Agreement between the Powers to demand from China a lump sum as an indemnity, and for the examination by the Legations of the private claims of their nationals, as well as to the appointment by His Majesty's Minister of a duly qualified lawyer for the purpose of examining the claims of British subjects, the Awards of Mr. Wilkinson must be regarded as final, subject only to revision by the Secretary of State, in the event of his being of opinion that sufficient grounds have been shown to necessitate a reconsideration of the case.

I am to accordingly request that you will take the papers submitted herewith into your consideration and that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether, in the circumstances, Mr. Wilkinson's decision on the claim of Messrs. Bott and Co. is right and proper. In the contrary event, his Lordship would be glad to know in what manner and to what extent it should be revised.

His Lordship would also be glad to be furnished with any general observations you may desire to offer in connection with the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

(A.)	"China No. 1 (1902)." (Parliamentary, 4088.)
(B.)	To Mr. Wilkinson	..	May 12, 1901.
(C.)	Sir E. Satow	(No. 108. Telegraphic)	May 11, 1902.
(D.)	Ditto	(No. 49)	February 24, ,,
(E.)	Messrs. Knapp, Fisher, and Sons	..	December 5, 1901.
(F.)	,, ,,	..	November 25, ,,
(G.)	,, ,,	..	April 14, 1902.

Report.

We have not before us the materials for revising Mr. Wilkinson's conclusions, even if it were desirable that such a task should be undertaken.

His conclusions may depend largely upon questions of fact, as to which he had evidence and local knowledge, which are not at our disposal.

The case cannot be treated as if it depended merely on a question of law. We do not feel justified in assuming that it was established in point of fact that, owing to the suspension of the works caused by the Boxer rising, this additional cost was incurred by reason of the rise in market prices in the interval. The latter part of Mr. Wilkinson's Memorandum seems to indicate the contrary. A vast number of circumstances would have to be taken into account in arriving at a decision on such a question.

If it were established as a matter of fact that the loss had been so occasioned, we do not think it would be too remote on the principles of English law or the rules laid down in the "Rapport."

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 3, 1902.

No. 18.

[June 3, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, May 26, 1902.

J. A. Hay's property destroyed at Peking during riots: claims for.

WITH reference to my letter of the 21st instant respecting the indemnity claims of British subjects and societies for losses incurred in connection with the disturbances in North China in 1900, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, a despatch from His Majesty's Minister at Peking, forwarding a Report by Mr. H. P. Wilkinson on the claim of Mr. John A. Hay, for property destroyed at Peking.

Mr. Hay, a mining engineer, in the employ of the Eastern Pioneer Company, claimed 14,619 dollars as compensation for the contents of a house in his occupation at Peking, which was totally destroyed during the disturbances. Of this amount 2,861 dollars were disallowed by Mr. Wilkinson.

On the 5th February last Mr. Hay's solicitors, Messrs. Lawrence, Webster, Messer, and Taylor, addressed a communication to this Department (Paper B) protesting against these reductions. They forwarded at the same time a copy of a document received by Mr. Hay from Mr. Wilkinson, in which the various headings are enumerated under which the above-named sum has been disallowed; but the particular items rejected are not stated.

A copy of Messrs. Lawrence and Co.'s letter was forwarded to His Majesty's Minister at Peking for his observations, but no reply has yet been received.

In the meantime a claim has been put before Mr. Wilkinson on behalf of the Eastern Pioneer Company, the employers of Mr. Hay, which includes a great part of the items claimed for by Mr. Hay, and it will be seen that in the Company's claim the value of the property destroyed is put at much less than the amount in respect thereof already allowed to Mr. Hay.

Mr. Wilkinson now asks that Mr. Hay may be informed that the allowance of 11,758 dollars on his claim has been cancelled, and states that he is issuing a new certificate for the amount allowed on his personal belongings only, viz., 2,855 dollars.

He also states that he intends to deal with the claim for furniture and fittings of the house referred to as part of the claim of the Eastern Pioneer Company, and that he will issue a separate certificate to Mr. Bassitt Watts, Mr. Hay's clerk, for the amount allowed in respect of his effects, which had originally been included in Mr. Hay's claim.

Lord Lansdowne, as at present advised, is inclined to think that the procedure above indicated is incorrect, and should be disallowed.

There appears to be no allegation that the original Award was obtained by fraud or misrepresentation on the part of Mr. Hay, and if the goods claimed for by him should turn out to have been in reality the property of his employers, the latter can recover the amount allowed in respect of them from him. The claim of the Eastern Pioneer Company can be rejected so far as already covered by the previous Award.

A telegram has been sent to His Majesty's Minister at Peking instructing him to inform Mr. Wilkinson that if he has not already cancelled his original Award on Mr. Hay's claim and issued the new certificates, he should not, pending further instructions, do so.

I am to request that you will take the papers submitted into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Mr. Wilkinson on the subject, and also with your view as to the course which should be followed in the event of his having already acted in the manner proposed by him.

1902

In the absence of further information it is presumed that you will not be in a position to express an opinion on the deductions made by Mr. Wilkinson on the original claim.

His Lordship will also be glad to receive any observations of a general character which you may wish to offer on the papers.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

1.	Sir E. Satow	(No. 69)	March 20, 1902.
2.	Messrs. Lawrence, Webster, Messer, and Taylor		February 5, „

Report.

We think that the proper course is to suspend any action on the certificate given to Mr. Hay until all the facts as to his claim and that of the Company have been ascertained by Mr. Wilkinson. Mr. Hay and the Company should both have the opportunity of being heard. On Mr. Wilkinson's final Report the Secretary of State can direct what should be done.

There is no occasion to cancel Mr. Hay's certificate, it has no binding effect, but he will, of course, be informed that no action can be taken upon it until the whole matter has been investigated.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 3, 1902.

[War Office.]

No. 18A.

[June 30, 1902.]

The Attorney-General's Opinion.

Jurisdiction of Consular Courts over military forces.

I AM of opinion that, in the case of members of a British force in military occupation of a foreign country, there would be an answer to any proceedings in the Consular Court in respect of any acts done in the discharge of military duty in the course of such occupation. In respect of such acts the Consular Courts cannot exercise jurisdiction.

This does not apply to offences committed, or acts done which have no connection with the military occupation.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

The Solicitor-General's Opinion.

I AGREE with the first portion of the opinion of the Attorney-General.

I am, however, of opinion that the Consular Courts have no jurisdiction over members of a British force in military occupation for any offences committed by them.

(Signed) EDWARD CARSON.

Law Officers' Department,
June 30, 1902.

No. 19.

[July 3, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, June 28, 1902.

A. F. Bott and Co.'s claim in connection with Boxer Rising. Knapp, Fisher and Sons' views.

I HAVE the honour to state, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, that, on the receipt of your opinion of the 3rd instant (Paper A), Messrs. Knapp, Fisher and Sons were informed (Paper B) that his Lordship could not intervene in the matter of the disallowance by the British Claims Commissioner of a part of Messrs. A. F. Bott and Co.'s claim on account of losses incurred owing to the disturbances in North China in 1900.

Messrs. Knapp, Fisher and Sons have replied (Paper C), inquiring the grounds on which this decision has been arrived at, and whether it is suggested that Mr. Cripps' opinion (Paper D), that the rules laid down in Hadley v. Baxendale, are not applicable to the case, and that the claim is one which should have been allowed, is wrong in law.

They repeat, in a further letter (Paper E), that if there is any doubt as to the opinion given by Mr. Cripps, they would be glad to know the reasons for such doubt, and state that they are prepared to have that opinion submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Messrs. Knapp, Fisher and Sons.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Law Officers' Report	June 3, 1902.
(B.)	To Messrs. Knapp, Fisher and Sons	June 16, „
(C.)	Messrs. Knapp, Fisher and Sons	June 17, „
(D.)	„ „ „	December 5, 1901.
(E.)	„ „ „	June 18, 1902.

Report.

We have nothing to add to our previous report in this matter. If it is considered advisable to do so, we see no objection to the reasons stated in our opinion being communicated to Messrs. Knapp, Fisher and Sons.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 3, 1902.

1902

COLOMBIA.

No. 20.

[March 19, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, January 18, 1902.

Gentlemen,

Liability as to fitting out of "Ban Righ" for use against Venezuela.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to the case of the steam-ship "Ban Righ."

The facts of this case briefly stated are as follows:—

In consequence of information having been furnished to the Commissioners of Customs and the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty that a steamer named the "Ban Righ" was being fitted out in the Thames apparently for warlike purposes, The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty gave orders on the 9th November last that the vessel should be detained, and she was detained accordingly by the Commissioners of Customs, as it was considered that there was a primâ facie case for the detention of the vessel pending satisfactory explanations, on the ground that there was reasonable cause to suspect a breach of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870" (Papers A, B, and C).

On the 14th November the Customs communicated to this Department a letter (Paper D) from the Consul-General for Colombia in London stating that the "Ban Righ" was "for the Colombian Government, and consigned to Colon;" and on the same day the Board of Admiralty informed the Foreign Office that, as the further steps to be taken in the matter must be determined by such facts as might be known to the Foreign Office, and by considerations of general policy, they trusted that the future conduct of the case would be undertaken by this Department (Paper E).

The matter was then informally referred to His Majesty's Attorney-General, who was of opinion that the vessel might be permitted to sail, provided assurances were obtained—

1. From the Colombian Minister at the Court that the vessel had actually been purchased by the Colombian Government.

2. From the Governments of Colombia and Venezuela respectively that each Government held that no state of war existed between the two Republics.

Lord Lansdowne consequently addressed a formal inquiry to the Colombian Minister on the first point, and received a note in reply stating, on the authority of an Agent of his Government who had just arrived in London, that the vessel was intended for the service of the Colombian Government, and requesting that she might be permitted to depart. He added that he was informed by the then registered owner (M. Rudolph de Paula), that his Agreement contemplated the delivery of the vessel at Colon, that she would sail under the British flag and under his ownership until the contract should be completed (Papers F and G).

With regard to the second point, telegraphic instructions were addressed to His Majesty's Ministers at Carácas and Bogotà (Paper H), from whom replies were received, in the case of the former, to the effect that no state of war existed between Venezuela and Colombia, and in that of the latter, that the Colombian Government did not consider that a state of war existed with Venezuela (Papers I and J).

On receipt from Carácas of the explicit reply above recorded, as it was known that communications with Bogotà were much retarded, and as the views of Venezuela, the country exposed to injury by the contemplated proceedings of the "Ban Righ," were deemed to be of chief importance, it was decided to inform the Customs, and they were informed (Paper K) that the vessel might be released, and she accordingly was released on the 22nd November (Paper L).

Subsequent intelligence was received from His Majesty's Consul-General at Antwerp, and from the British Vice-Consul at Flushing (Papers M and N), to the effect that the "Ban Righ" had proceeded direct to Antwerp, where she took in a large supply of arms, ammunition and coal, and sailed out of the Scheldt on the 30th November bound, according to the master's statement, for the West Indies.

No information to which reliance can be attached is available as to the movements of the "Ban Righ" after she left European waters; but a telegram was received from His Majesty's Minister at Carácas on the 1st instant reporting that she was stated to be at Martinique, and that the Venezuelan Government had issued a Proclamation declaring her to be a pirate, and purporting to authorize any public ship or any private ship bearing Venezuelan letters of marque to capture her, and had offered the vessel and her cargo as a prize to the captor, together with a reward of 2,000*l.* (Paper O). From information subsequently received from His Majesty's Minister, and from the Commander-in-Chief on the North America and West Indies Station, it appears probable that this action on the part of the Venezuelan Government was based on a suspicion or conviction that the "Ban Righ" was intended to be used against them by one of the parties now in a state of rebellion against the de jure Government of the Republic under General Castro's Presidency, and was about to land arms, and possibly men, on some point of the Venezuelan coast (Papers P, Q, and R). His Majesty's Consul at Martinique, who was requested to telegraph information relative to the proceedings of the vessel during her stay at that island and her subsequent movements, reported that she had cleared under the British flag for Colon. The master and three British subjects were on board, the rest of the crew having returned to Southampton on the 2nd instant (Papers T and U).

The register of the "Ban Righ," a copy of which (Paper V) has been obtained through the Board of Trade, shows that the vessel was built at Govan in 1870, was registered at Aberdeen in 1888, was bought by Mr. Rudolph de Paula on the 26th October, 1901, and registered in his name as sole owner on the 29th of that month. It has further been ascertained, by inquiry at the Home Office, that M. R de Paula is a Prussian by birth, and became a naturalized British subject in 1876. The "Ban Righ" has not, so far as His Majesty's Government are aware, been handed over either to the Colombian Government or to any private Colombian citizen, nor is there any evidence to show that she has ceased to be on the British Register and entitled to fly the British flag. She was last seen, according to a recent telegram from His Majesty's Minister at Carácas, some 450 miles off the coast of Venezuela, and was stated to have been engaged in smuggling arms, but under what flag was not known (Papers R and S).

A further and separate reference will ultimately be made to you as to whether proceedings should be instituted against the registered owner, or any other persons, for an infraction of the provisions of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870." The scope of the present reference is confined to the consideration of the immediate aspects of the case, and of the action which may be necessary for dealing with it. With this object, I am directed to invite your special attention to the following points:—

It has been suggested that the "Ban Righ" (which, according to the public prints, has been renamed the "Libertador") may probably commit depredations on the coasts of Venezuela while still under the British flag. His Majesty's ship "Tribune" is now at La Guaira, and the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have been requested by the Captain to furnish him, by telegraph, with instructions as to what action, if any, should be taken in the event of the "Ban Righ" being attacked by Venezuelan vessels of war (Paper W)—(α) on the high seas; or, (β) in the territorial waters of Venezuela. The Captain has been given temporary instructions to the effect that no protection is to be given to the "Ban Righ" either inside or outside Venezuelan waters, but that British life and property should be protected if disturbances arise; and that further instructions will be sent if found necessary (Paper X).

It seems clear that, in these circumstances, a British man-of-war would have no legal justification for proceeding into Venezuelan territorial waters for the purpose of capturing or restraining the "Ban Righ" (even if she were otherwise justified in so doing) except at the invitation or on the appeal of the Venezuelan Government.

But the further questions arise—

1. Whether, if such an appeal be made, it is either justifiable or desirable that the "Tribune" should accede to it.

2. Whether, in the event of depredations being committed by the "Ban Righ" while she is still under the British flag, any liability on the part of His Majesty's Government to compensate persons injured thereby would arise.

3. If a British man-of-war should fall in with the "Ban Righ" sailing under the British flag on the high seas, after she had committed acts of violence within the territory of Venezuela, or if, in such circumstances, she should visit, for the purpose of revictualling or otherwise, a British Colonial port—what action, if any, is desirable.

1902

Search has been made in the archives of this Office for precedents which might be of assistance in dealing with these questions, but none precisely in point have been discovered.

The Admiralty have also been requested to furnish details as to any cases which appear to be relevant, but they have hitherto not been able to supply further information on the subject.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion on the questions submitted in this letter, and with any observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Customs		November 8, 1901.
(B.)	Admiralty		„ 9, „
(C.)	„		„ 12, „
(D.)	Customs		„ 14, „
(E.)	Admiralty		„ 14, „
(F.)	To Señor Ponce		„ 15, „
(G.)	Señor Ponce		„ 15, „
(H.)	To Messrs. Haggard and Welby	(Telegraphic)	„ 15, „
(I.)	Mr. Haggard	(Telegraphic)	„ 21, „
(J.)	Mr. Welby	(Telegraphic)	„ 23, „
(K.)	To Customs		„ 21, „
(L.)	Customs		„ 22, „
(M.)	Consul-General Perry	(No. 22)	„ 28, „
(N.)	Mr. Leveson Gower	(Telegraphic)	„ 30, „
(O.)	Mr. Haggard	(No. 14. Telegraphic)	January 1, 1902.
(P.)	„ „	(No. 178. Confidential)	November 26, 1901.
(Q.)	Admiralty		January 9, 1902.
(R.)	Mr. Haggard	(No. 1. Telegraphic)	„ 12, „
(S.)	„ „	(No. 2. Telegraphic)	„ 12, „
(T.)	To Consul Japp	(Telegraphic)	„ 10, „
(U.)	Consul Japp	(Telegraphic)	„ 11, „
(V.)	Register of "Ban Righ."
(W.)	Admiralty		„ 10, „
(X.)	Admiralty to British Naval Officer, La Guaira		„ 11, „

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, February 8, 1902.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, further papers, as noted in the accompanying list, which I am to request you will take into your consideration in connection with my letter of the 18th ultimo, relative to the case of the steam-ship "Ban Righ."

From the telegrams which have been received, subsequent to the information already supplied to you, it will be perceived (Paper A) that the steam-ship "Libertador," formerly the "Ban Righ," flying the British merchant flag, has visited Savanilla, having on board the Venezuelan Insurgent leader, General Matos, who declares himself the owner of the vessel.

In these circumstances Mr. Hudson, the Acting British Consul at Panamá, has inquired (Paper D) whether a protest should be made to the master of the "Ban Righ" against the use of the British flag, and whether the local authorities at Savanilla should be informed officially that the "Libertador" is not a British vessel, in order to avoid responsibility, in the event of complications between Venezuela and Colombia, arising out of an abuse of the British flag.

There being, however, no information to show that the steamer has changed hands or ceased to be a British vessel, Mr. Hudson has been instructed (Paper E) to endeavour to ascertain—

1. Whether she has been purchased by General Matos or any one else; if so, by whom, when, and where, and if transferred by bill of sale? and

2. Whether she is under charter to General Matos or any one else, and if so, what are the terms of charter?

Mr. Hudson reports (Paper F) that His Majesty's ship "Psyche" has proceeded to Savanilla for the purpose of investigating the matter, and the result will be duly communicated to you.

I am at the same time to transmit to you a letter from the Colonial Office (Paper G) inclosing copies of correspondence from the Governor of Trinidad on the subject of the "Ban Righ." His Excellency inquires what action should be taken in the event of that vessel arriving in the Colony.

This being one of the questions raised in my previous letter, Lord Lansdowne awaits your reply thereto before returning an answer to the Secretary of State for the Colonies on this point.

Mr. Chamberlain has, in the meantime, been informed of the inquiries which have been addressed to the Acting Consul at Panamá, and a copy of your Report, when received, will be forwarded to the Colonial Office for his confidential information.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

P.S.—Since the above letter was written, the accompanying telegram (Paper H) has been received from the Acting Consul at Panamá.

A further telegram, copy of which is also inclosed (Paper I), has since been sent to Panamá, and a copy of the reply will be communicated to you as soon as it is received.

F. H. V.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Telegram from Acting British Consul, Panamá	January 27, 1902.
(B.)	„ „ „ „	„ 27, „
(C.)	„ to „ „ „	„ 29, „
(D.)	„ from „ „ „	„ 30, „
(E.)	„ to „ „ „	February 1, „
(F.)	„ from „ „ „	„ 3, „
(G.)	Colonial Office	January 31, „
(H.)	Telegram from Acting British Consul, Panamá	February 7, „
(I.)	„ to „ „ „	„ 8, „

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, March 6, 1902.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, further papers,* which I am to request that you will take into consideration with those already before you, relative to the proceedings of the steam-ship "Ban Righ."

You will observe from the last paragraph of the Colonial Office letter of the 5th March, that the contingency of the vessel's arriving in British waters may now arise at any moment, and I am therefore to request that you will be good enough to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion on the various points involved at your earliest possible convenience.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

---

* Colonial Office, March 5, 1902. Mr. Haggard, No. 13, Telegraphic, March 5, 1902.

1902

List of Papers submitted separately.

Telegram from Acting British Consul, Panamá	February	11, 1902.
Board of Trade	"	11, "
" "	"	14, "
Mr. Haggard, No. 10	January	24, "
" " No. 12	"	25, "
Acting British Consul, Panamá, No. 2, Political	February	3, "
Admiralty	"	18, "
Colonial Office	"	19, "
Telegram to Mr. Haggard, No. 12	March	6, "
Telegram from Mr. Haggard, No. 15	"	9, "
Colonial Office	"	11, "
" "	"	12, "
Telegram from Mr. Haggard, No. 16	"	11, "
Mr. Haggard, No. 26	February	18, "
Telegram from Mr. Haggard, No. 20	March	14, "

Report.

We have delayed answering your letter as additional instructions have from time to time been sent to us until within the last few days. The information received in the last batch of documents puts an entirely new aspect on the case. It now appears that the "Pan Righ," under the name of the "Bolivar" is flying the Colombian national flag, and is ostensibly at least a Colombian man-of-war. Under these circumstances His Majesty's Government ought not to direct any action against this vessel even if the Venezuelan Government request that such action should be taken. If she is a Colombian public vessel any such action would be an act of war against Colombia.

There is no liability on the part of His Majesty's Government for any depredation committed by this vessel. The circumstances under which she was permitted to leave this country are such that no charge of negligence can properly be put forward by the Venezuelan Government against His Majesty's Government; and any use which has been made of the British flag since her arrival at Martinique, and the transfer there effected, has been merely a wrongful act for which His Majesty's Government is not responsible. The use of the British flag would render the vessel liable to seizure, but as she is now stated to be a Colombian public vessel no attempt should be made to enforce this liability.

It would appear that this vessel is carrying on hostile operations against the Venezuelan Government. Under these circumstances she ought not to be allowed to coal, or in any way fit out, in British ports, or in any way to use any British port as a base for her operations. If a state of formal war existed between Venezuela and Colombia, a Colombian man-of-war would be allowed to coal at a British port only for the purpose of proceeding home,* and would not be allowed to coal repeatedly except after adequate intervals. The fact that, although no formal war exists, she is engaged in hostilities of an irregular description seems to us to be sufficient ground for excluding her from British ports altogether unless she were in actual distress. His Majesty's Government cannot permit the British Colonies to be made a base for operations of this description.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
March 19, 1902.

---

* i.e., to the nearest port of her own nation.—W. E. D.

EGYPT.

No. 21.

[December 16, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, November 17, 1902.

Customs arrangements between Egypt and Persia: Bearing of Turkish Treaties on.

I HAVE the honour to transmit, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the accompanying papers relating to Customs arrangements between Egypt and Persia.

It will be seen that your predecessors were consulted in 1890 in regard to the position in which Egypt was placed by the termination of all hitherto existing Commercial Treaties between the Porte and certain foreign Powers, and that, with the concurrence of the then Law Officers, a despatch was addressed to His Majesty's Agency at Cairo, Paper (C), stating the views of His Majesty's Government as to the position of Egypt in regard to commercial arrangements with foreign Powers.

I am to draw your particular attention to the following passages in that despatch:—

"In the view of Her Majesty's Government, the result of the Firmans from which I have quoted is that Egypt acquired by them commercial liberty so far as the Porte could grant it. The Sultan could not, by arrangement with a vassal, abolish the rights of foreign States under Treaties then existing, but by the Firman of 1873 His Majesty divested himself of any right in the future to conclude commercial arrangements for Egypt, and only stipulated that the commercial arrangements to be made by the Khedive with foreign Powers should not affect the Sultan's political rights.

"Foreign Powers not having made protest against the Firmans should, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, be held to have accepted their effect on their own position whenever their then existing Treaty rights should lapse, and no foreign Power has ground for setting up as against Egypt the stipulations in commercial matters of a Treaty with the Porte of a date subsequent to the Firman of 1873."

* * * * * *

"No Power can claim the application in Egypt of a Tariff agreed upon since 1873 between such Power and the Porte. Such Tariff might be accepted by agreement between any Power and the Egyptian Government, but it would then come into force as a Commercial Convention made by Egypt, and the right to claim the benefit of stipulations contained in other Commercial Conventions made by Egypt would depend upon the terms of the Agreement itself."

It appears to Lord Lansdowne, to follow from the principle thus laid down, that it is not in the power of the Turkish Government, in conjunction with another Power having Treaties with Turkey of earlier date than 1873, to enter into any arrangement, whether revising, adding to, prolonging, or abrogating them, which could in any way affect the Treaty relations between that other Power and Egypt.

The commercial relations between Turkey and Persia before the issue of the Firman of 1873, were governed principally by the Treaties of Erzeroum of 1823 and 1847, and by an Arrangement of 1870,* which fixed the import duties of each country on the goods of the other at 6 per cent.

Persia now wishes to increase her revenue by raising her customs duties. She has on the one hand the above arrangement with Turkey, on the other hand she is bound towards Russia by the Treaty of Commerce, signed at Turkmanchai in 1828, providing for the levy of an import duty not exceeding 5 per cent. on Russian goods imported into Persia.

The latter country has negotiated a new Tariff with Russia which, as in some classes the rate is higher than 6 per cent., she cannot enforce without the consent of Turkey, Turkey having a Commercial Agreement with Persia, in which that rate of duty is stipulated.

She has accordingly concluded with Turkey a new arrangement, Paper (D),

---

* The actual wording of this Arrangement is contained in Lord Cromer's despatch No. 91, Commercial, of October 24, 1902.

1902

which, as she believes (though there is doubt on the point), releases her from her Tariff obligations towards Turkey, so far as any specific rate is concerned. If this belief is correct, the question arises whether she is also relieved of her engagements towards Egypt in this respect.

The proposed Russo-Persian Tariff is in some respects unfavourable to British, and especially Indian, trade, and British goods imported into Persia will be subject to the rates specified in that Tariff—this country having only a most-favoured-nation arrangement with Persia—unless His Majesty's Government are able to claim that the former Treaties between Turkey and Persia are still in force as regards Egypt.

Persia cannot plead ignorance of the position created by the Firman of 1873, for discussions on the subject took place in the years 1887 and 1894 when she signed with Egypt two separate Conventions regarding tobacco, the first for ten years; the second, which replaced it, for twenty-two years. It appears to Lord Lansdowne that, by entering into these arrangements, she admitted that Egypt was a separate country for customs purposes.

When Venezuela broke off her connection with the United States of Colombia she was still held bound by the Treaty of Commerce with the United Kingdom, concluded by the parent State; and the United Kingdom, the other party to the bargain, continued to incur, as regards Venezuela, the responsibilities as well as to enjoy the rights involved in the mutual undertaking.

Similarly, it would seem that Egypt is bound by the old Turkish Treaties, and that Persia is also bound by them as regards both Egypt and the Porte.

It may be argued that, though Egypt continued to be subject to the old Treaties between Turkey and Persia, Persia on her side may at any time repudiate them, as regards Egypt, on the ground that her original contracts were with a single State, that it is an intolerable inconvenience to her, amounting to a complete change in the condition of those contracts, to have to deal with two separate States instead of one; and that she is entitled to maintain that her contracts were with Turkey, and that she can recognize no other party to them. The answer to this contention seems to be that it was open to Persia to make a declaration to that effect when the Firman was first brought to her notice, and to have maintained that position by steadily declining to negotiate with Egypt, but that it is not competent for her to revert to an attitude of protest after concluding separate Conventions with Egypt in regard to tobacco.

I am to draw your attention to the Memorandum (Paper T) relating to the action taken by Egypt, on her own account and without reference to the Sultan, to terminate the Turkish Treaty of Commerce with Great Britain of 1861 and similar Treaties with other foreign Powers. These Treaties were limited in their duration, that is to say, they ran for successive terms of seven years; option being reserved to either party to terminate their Treaty at the end of the first or any other period by giving one year's notice. Negotiations subsequently took place between this country and Egypt, and they resulted in a Commercial Convention signed on the 3rd March, 1884, which, however, by common agreement, will not come into operation until all the other Powers have concluded similar arrangements.

The old Treaties between Turkey and Persia are not limited as to time and are essentially reciprocal engagements, and it is difficult to see how one party can remain bound under such an arrangement and the other can be free.

If the view that the position of Egypt and Persia towards one another under the old Treaties cannot be affected by any arrangement between Turkey and Persia subsequent to the Firman of 1873 be sound, then Egypt will apparently be entitled to the continuance for her goods of the existing Persian Tariff, and His Majesty's Government, under the most-favoured-nation stipulation in the Treaty between this country and Persia of 1857, will be able to insist on receiving the same treatment.

I am to request that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether this view be correct, and I am to add that his Lordship would also be glad if you would at the same time favour him with any observations of a general nature which you may have to offer on the subject.

As the matter is somewhat urgent, he will be much obliged if you will give it your attention at the earliest convenient moment.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Law Officers' Report		June	11, 1890.
(B.)	Ditto		July	22, „
(C.)	Lord Salisbury to Mr. Portal		July	29, „
(D.)	Arrangement between Persia and Turkey, September 5, 1902. (In Sir N. O'Conor's No. 145, Commercial, September 19.)
(E.)	Memorandum on Tombac Convention by Mr. Ball		October	22, 1902.
(F.)	Memorandum on position of Egypt as regards Turkish Commercial Treaties by Mr. Ball		October	13, „
(G.)	To Lord Cromer	(No. 5. Commercial. Telegraphic)	October	8, „
(H.)	Lord Cromer ..	(No 13. Commercial. Telegraphic)	October	11, „
(I.)	To Lord Cromer	(No. 6 Commercial. Telegraphic)	October	16, „
(K.)	Ditto	(No. 7. Commercial. Telegraphic)	October	17, „
(L.)	Lord Cromer ..	(No. 15. Commercial. Telegraphic)	October	22, „
(M.)	Ditto ..	(No. 16. Commercial. Telegraphic)	October	22, „
(N.)	To Lord Cromer	(No. 8. Commercial. Telegraphic)	October	22, „
(O.)	Ditto	(No. 9. Commercial. Telegraphic)	October	30, „
(P.)	Lord Cromer ..	(No. 17. Commercial. Telegraphic)	October	31, „
(Q.)	To Lord Cromer	(No. 10. Commercial. Telegraphic)	October	31, „
(R.)	Lord Cromer ..	(No. 18. Commercial. Telegraphic)	November	4, „
(S.)	Ditto ..	(No. 19. Commercial. Telegraphic)	November	6, „
(T.)	Memorandum by Mr. de Bernhardt		November	10, „
(V.)	Lord Cromer	(No. 97. Commercial)	November	6, „
(W.)	Treaty between Turkey and Persia	("State Papers," Vol. 11, p 836)	July	28, 1823.
(X.)	Ditto	(Ditto, Vol. 45, p. 874)	May	31, 1847.
(Y.)	Convention between Turkey and Persia	(Ditto, Vol. 67, p. 542)	December	20, 1875.

Attorney-General's Opinion.

1. I am of opinion that after the Firmans of 1867, 1873, and 1879 Turkey could not, in the case of a Power which, like Persia, had recognized and acted upon these Firmans, put an end so far as Egypt is concerned to an anterior Treaty as to commercial relations. To abrogate a Treaty requires a new Treaty or Convention, which ex hypothesi must affect commercial relations, and Turkey by these Firmans renounced the right of entering into any such Treaty or Convention in relation to Egypt.

2. But further, the note of the 5th September, 1902, stipulates for most-favoured-nation treatment. This is clearly a new Convention as to commercial relations, which Turkey could not enter into on behalf of Egypt, and which neither Turkey nor Persia could in face of the Firmans have intended to apply to Egypt. The ancillary stipulation annulling all previous dispositions inconsistent with the new arrangement cannot, I think, be fairly read as applying to Egypt, to which the main arrangement for most-favoured-nation treatment did not and could not apply, whatever effect the exclusion of Egypt might have upon the most-favoured-nation arrangement between Turkey and Persia.

I, therefore, think that the Tariff provided by the anterior Treaties is still in force as regards Egypt.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Solicitor-General's Opinion.

In my opinion, the granting of the Firmans of 1867, 1873, and 1879 by the Porte did not affect the existing Treaty with Persia, and although after the Firmans it would have been impossible for the Porte to impose a new Treaty affecting commercial relations upon Egypt, I am of opinion that the right of Persia to terminate the existing Treaty by agreement with Turkey still existed, as the Parties to the Treaty were not changed by the granting of the Firmans and the notice thereof given to Persia. I think to hold otherwise would be to place Persia, through no act of her own, in the position of not being able to terminate the Treaty without the consent of a party with whom Persia had never contracted. I am inclined to agree that the note of the 5th September, 1902, might be construed in strictness as only altering the Tariffs between Persia and Turkey and still leaving the Treaty in operation in all other respects, including the Tariffs as then applicable to Egypt, but I think that cannot have been the intention of Turkey and Persia as the result of conceding a most-favoured-nation clause would be to set up again as between these countries the Tariffs applicable to Egypt, which was the very thing they were attempting to get rid of.

1902

I am therefore of opinion that the effect of the Arrangement of the 5th September, 1902, was to put an end to the existing Treaties so far as Tariffs were concerned as well for Egypt and Turkey, and that after this Arrangement Egypt was free to enter into such a Commercial Treaty with Persia as might be agreed upon.

(Signed) EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
December 16, 1902.

FRANCE.

No. 22.

[January 13, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, December 24, 1901.

Waima Arbitration: British Reply to French Answer.

WITH reference to your Report of the 7th ultimo I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you a copy (A) of the Mémoire on the subject of the collision at Waima which the French Government have submitted to the Arbitrator, together with the draft (B) of the reply of His Majesty's Government, which has been prepared under the terms of Article III of the Arbitration Convention of the 3rd April last.

I have the honour to request you to take the draft reply into your consideration, and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion whether it adequately sets forth the arguments which can be advanced on behalf of His Majesty's Government in the matter.

His Lordship will at the same time be glad to be favoured with any further observations of a general nature which you may have to offer on the subject.

A copy (C) of the original British Case in regard to the collision at Waima, as also the papers (D) in the case which have already been before you, are annexed for convenience of reference.

Lord Lansdowne would be glad to be favoured with your reply to the present reference at as early a date as possible.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.) French Waima Case.
(B.) Draft reply.
(C.) British Waima Case.
(D.) Papers previously submitted.

Report.

We approve of the draft reply (as initialled by us) of the British Government to the answer of the French Government. We see no necessity to add anything to it.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
E. CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
January 13, 1902.

Annex.

Reply of the British Government to the Answer of the French Government in connection with the Collision at Waima in 1893.

THE answer of the French Government, excluding the introduction and the conclusion, is divided into two chapters, of which the first is directed, as stated in the Introduction (p. 2), to answering certain statements ("diverses assertions") in the British Case, and the second to an estimate of the figure at which the indemnity should be fixed.

1. The first point made in the first chapter is that, at the moment when the collision took place, the adjustment of boundaries between the British and French territories in the region in question could not be considered as complete, and that the understanding recorded in M. Ribot's note of the 4th March, 1892, did no more than furnish the germ of a delimitation to follow ("le germe d'une délimitation ultérieure").

British Case, Appendix, pp. 59, 60.

It is submitted that this is not the effect of the language of the note in question. That note recorded a precise and definite understanding to the effect that, while to the north of Tembikunda the line of demarcation should be deflected so as to give to France possession of both banks of the Niger and its principal affluents, it should to the south of Tembikunda follow the 13th* meridian west of Paris. In fact, as the note itself shows, the very point which the understanding was designed to set at rest was whether the 15th meridian should be exactly followed or not. That meridian, moreover, is referred to as the Anglo-French frontier in Article II of the Franco-Liberian Arrangement of the 8th December, 1892, by which France abandoned to Liberia the country to the east of such meridian and south of the parallel of Tembikunda. This Arrangement was ratified on the 10th August, 1894.

In the French answer (p. 7) it appears to be suggested that the 13th meridian was not definitely agreed on as the boundary between the British and French possessions until the declarations exchanged between the Marquess of Dufferin and Ava and M. Hanotaux on the 22nd January, 1895. But it is clear, from the terms of the Arrangement with Liberia, that the French Government considered itself in a position to dispose of the country to the east of the 13th meridian by virtue of the understanding embodied in the note of the 4th March, 1892, and it follows that it must have considered the territory to the west of it as, in an equal degree, at the disposal of Great Britain.

It cannot but be assumed that if the scene of the collision had been to the east of the 13th meridian the Government of the Republic would have repudiated any responsibility; and it is, in fact, so stated in their answer now under reply (p. 11).

2. The next point made by the French answer is that the Government of the Republic were under no obligation to inform their officers of the arrangement embodied in M. Ribot's note, and, further, that, even had they done so, the collision, owing to the difficulty of ascertaining the longitude on the spot, might not have been prevented. His Majesty's Government submit that this is not an admissible argument.

The French officers in this territory were left by their Government under the impression that France possessed a liberty of action in these regions wider than was consistent with the observation of the terms of the note of the 4th March, 1892. In these circumstances, it is not to the purpose to contend that Lieutenant Maritz had not the means of knowing when he arrived at the 13th meridian. The point is that, even if he had known, he would not have paused. It is for the French Government to explain the presence of French troops outside the French sphere, and all that appears is that the one step which might have prevented it was not taken.

His Majesty's Government, further, do not admit that Lieutenant Maritz, had he been informed of the necessity for so doing, could not have formed a correct idea of his whereabouts. It is to be observed that Colonel Ellis, judging the situation by reference to the neighbouring rivers and to the hills which could be seen from Waima, was confident from the first that Waima was well within his sphere,† of the limits of which he was obviously informed. It is true, as stated in the French Case, that this was disputed after the collision, and that the point stood over for scientific verification. But Colonel Ellis' opinion was ultimately found to be correct. It must further be pointed out that Lieutenant Maritz came to Waima directly from Tembikunda; and he could hardly have failed to ascertain the compass bearing of that place from Waima, had he been aware of any circumstance that made it desirable to do so. Now, Tembikunda was known at that time to be west of the 13th meridian. It is so shown on M. Desbuissons' map appended to the French answer; and it is clear that in March 1892, the date of M. Ribot's note, it was assumed on all hands that a frontier following the 13th meridian would lie further to the east than one following the meridian of Tembikunda itself.

For the reasons above given His Majesty's Government submit that, had proper information been given him, Lieutenant Maritz would have been able to avoid carrying his forces beyond his own sphere, and that, as in that case no collision would have taken place, its occurrence cannot be regarded as a misadventure which could not have been avoided. That Lieutenant Maritz had no reason to anticipate that a British force was in the neighbourhood, and that the collision itself was the result of a pure mistake is not, and never has been, disputed by His Majesty's Government.

3. The last portion of the first chapter of the French answer deals with the incidents of the conflict itself. His Majesty's Government do not consider that these have any importance, either as increasing or decreasing the responsibility of the French Government. When once the French

---

* In the Appendix to the British Case, pp. 19 and 59, this is misprinted 12.

† See his telegram, British Case, pp. 21, 61; and his despatch, French Case, pp. 58, 62.

1902

troops moved to the attack on Waima the mischief was, in the view of His Majesty's Government, done. How the casualties occurred is not material. It is not suggested that either party continued the combat after the mistake had been discovered. It was not discovered on the British side until the first of the wounded was found. The British were the party attacked, and, necessarily, continued firing till the attack ceased. No complaint is made in the British Case of anything that occurred after the attack was once delivered. The only reference to the details of the conflict was with regard to the statement that it was a sentinel on the British side that fired the first shot; and it was submitted that, under the circumstances, that was immaterial.

The French answer deals at some length with a sentence in Colonel Ellis' telegram, in which he attributes the death of three British officers to Lieutenant Maritz personally. No reference whatever was made in the British Case to that surmise of Colonel Ellis. It was natural that Colonel Ellis, in reporting to his superior, should state what he believed had led to the disproportionate loss of officers in the conflict. The telegram had obviously to be printed in the British Appendix, and could only be printed in its entirety. But neither Colonel Ellis, in framing, nor His Majesty's Government in printing that telegram, should be suspected of desiring to throw any slur on Lieutenant Maritz. Imagining he was attacking Sofas, Lieutenant Maritz would be quite right (assuming he did so) in endeavouring to kill those whom he believed to be their leaders. So far as Colonel Ellis is concerned, it can hardly be denied that he acted with perfect chivalry towards Lieutenant Maritz on a somewhat trying occasion; and His Majesty's Government desire to be distinctly understood as making no complaint whatever with reference to the particular part, whatever it may have been, which the French Commander personally took in the conflict.

4. The second chapter of the French answer deals with the figure at which the compensation should be assessed. It is contended by the Government of the Republic that the Arbitrator ought merely to award such annual payment, or its capitalized value, as will reimburse to His Majesty's Government the expense incurred, and to be incurred, by them in the payment of such pensions, gratuities, or allowances as the rules of His Majesty's Service enjoin or permit. Nothing, according to the French contention, is payable for the benefit of the wounded, and nothing in respect of native soldiers killed. The further point is also made that, in respect of the death of Lieutenant Wroughton and two men of the Constabulary, no compensation ought to be awarded on the ground that (as Colonel Ellis thought) they fell in the confusion of the conflict by the hands of their comrades.

His Majesty's Government have read these contentions with some surprise. The payments made out of public funds in the case of casualties occurring among the forces of the Crown are partly exigible as matter of right and partly allowed as matter of bounty at the discretion, subject to strict limits, of the War Office authorities. In any case, they are estimated on the footing that the casualty has occurred in the ordinary course of duty, and that no grievance exists. His Majesty's Government are at a loss to understand on what principle such a scale is to be regarded as measuring the compensation due from those whose acts have produced the injury.

The Convention was not made with reference to the Regulations as to pensions and allowances obtaining in the British army. If the only object had been to ascertain the amount of the payments made by the British Government, in order that the burden of them might be assumed by the French Government, there would have been no need for arbitration. It was obviously proper to insert in the Appendix to the British Case the circumstances affecting the cases of the officers and men killed; but it was not anticipated that the French Government would seek to treat the pensions and allowances thus disclosed as the sole measure of their liability.

With regard to the contention that no compensation is to be made for the death of Lieutenant Wroughton and two men of the Constabulary, His Majesty's Government submit that this is not the fair effect of the Convention. Whether the bullets which killed them proceeded from British or from French rifles, it is clear that they were "victimes de l'affaire de Waima" within the meaning of Article I of the Convention.

It is urged in the French Case that the British Government is not itself entitled to compensation in respect of the conflict at Waima. In answer to this His Majesty's Government say that none is claimed on their behalf. What is claimed is a lump sum, such as the Arbitrator shall think reasonable, for the casualties, fatal or otherwise, which occurred on the British side under the circumstances which are now before the Arbitrator. His Majesty's Government will distribute the fund among the sufferers and their families.

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 23.

[February 13, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, December 25, 1901.

Holt and Co. in French Congo. Judgment of Libreville Court.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers mentioned in the inclosed list, which relate to the complaints made by British firms trading in the French Colony of the Congo.

It does not appear necessary to trouble you with a repetition of the facts of this case, as they were fully stated in my letter of the 19th February last, which will be found among the inclosed papers (Paper 56).

The several papers mentioned in that letter have been retained in the same numerical series for greater facility of reference.

You reported on the 22nd May last (Report of that date, Paper 66) that you could not see any ground of legal right for representations to the French Government as regarded territory outside of the free-trade zone, though Messrs. Holt and Co. had no doubt been very hardly treated. Any representation on their behalf in this respect could, you stated, be based only on the moral claim to equitable consideration which their past dealings might be considered to have established.

Messrs Holt and Co.'s letter of the 4th instant (Paper 111) inclosed a copy of an important Judgment delivered by the Court of Appeal at Libreville in a suit between Messrs. Holt and Co. and the "Société Commerciale, Industrielle, et Agricole du Haut-Ogowé," one of the Companies to which a Concession of a usual type has been granted. The land, the subject of the Company's Concession, is situated outside of the Conventional Basin of the Congo, to which alone the provisions of the Berlin Act apply. The 15th paragraph of the Judgment (marked with a "X" in the margin) appears to be of especial importance, as the Court seems to suggest that the firm has an equitable claim on the French Government, although it has none in law.

The Judgment of the Court of First Instance in the suit under consideration will be found in Messrs. Holt and Co.'s letter of the 21st June, 1899 (Paper 4).

I have the honour to request you to take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion whether the Judgment of the Court of Appeal furnishes material for any further or more pressing representation to the French Government in the matter of the rights of British trading firms in territories outside the Conventional Basin of the Congo than were suggested in your Report of the 22nd May last (Paper 66).

And, generally, with any observations which will, in your opinion, be of assistance to his Lordship in dealing with this case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

Nos.
1 to 55.	Papers previously submitted.
56.	To Law Officers		February	19, 1901.
57.	"Liverpool Courier"		April	16, "
58.	Holt and Co.		April	23, "
59.	Ditto		April	23, "
60.	To Holt and Co.		April	28, "
61.	Holt and Co.		April	30, "
62.	To Law Officers		May	3, "
63.	To Holt and Co.		May	4, "
64.	To ditto		May	4, "
65.	To Law Officers		May	4, "
66.	Law Officers		May	22, "
67.	Nil.
68.	To Sir E. Monson	(No. 73)	June	13, "
69.	To ditto	(No. 74)	June	13, "
70.	Holt and Co.		June	15, "
71.	Sir E. Monson	(No 50)	June	22, "
72.	Ditto	(No. 51)	June	22, "
73.	Holt and Co.		July	12, "
74.	Holt and Co. to Mr. Farnall		July	12, "
75.	Ditto		July	17, "

Nos.			July 29, 1901.
76.	To Holt and Co.		July 29, „
77.	To ditto	(No. 79)	August 6, „
78.	Sir E. Monson	(No. 84)	August 22, „
79.	Ditto		August 31, „
80.	Holt and Co.		September 2, „
81.	To ditto		September 7, „
82.	Aborigines Protection Society	(No. 131)	September 11, „
83.	To Sir E. Monson	(No. 133)	September 12, „
84.	To ditto	(No. 95)	September 13, „
85.	Sir E. Monson		September 16, „
86.	To Holt and Co.	(No. 101)	September 25, „
87.	Sir E. Monson		October 1, „
88	Liverpool Chamber of Commerce		October 3, „
89.	Holt and Co.		October 11, „
90.	Ditto		October 14, „
91.	Ditto		October 14, „
92.	To Liverpool Chamber of Commerce	(No. 160)	October 23, „
93.	To Sir E. Monson
94.	Nil.
95.	Nil.
96.	Nil.		October 24, „
97.	To Holt and Co.		October 24, „
98.	From ditto	(No. 117)	October 29, „
99.	Sir E. Monson		October 30, „
100.	Holt and Co.		October 30, „
101.	Ditto	(No. 119)	November 1, „
102.	Sir E. Monson	(No. 172)	November 8, „
103.	To ditto		November 11, „
104.	To Holt and Co.		November 11, „
105	Memorandum (Mr. Farnall)		November 14, „
106.	Memorandum (Sir M. Gosselin)		November 19, „
107.	Liverpool Chamber of Commerce		November 25, „
108.	To ditto	(No. 184)	November 26, „
109.	To Sir E. Monson	(No. 130)	November 28, „
110.	Sir E. Monson		December 4, „
111.	Holt and Co.	(No. 134)	December 5, „
112.	Sir E. Monson		December 6, „
113.	Extract, "Journal of Commerce"		December 7, „
114.	Ditto	(No. 193)	December 11, „
115.	To Sir E. Monson	(No. 139)	December 13, „
116.	Sir E. Monson	(No. 206)	December 20, „
117.	To ditto	(No. 210)	December 24, „
118.	To ditto		December 24, „
119.	To Holt and Co.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, January 16, 1902.

WITH reference to my letter of the 25th ultimo, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you a letter from Messrs. Holt and Co.,* inclosing the text of the Judgment delivered by the Libreville Appeal Court on the 27th November, 1901, in an action brought by the firm in question against the Compagnie Française du Congo Occidental for having seized rubber belonging to the firm.

This Judgment, unlike that which was delivered by the same Court on the 27th October, 1901, in a suit between Messrs. Holt and the Société du Haut Ogowe, which is now under your consideration, deals with incidents arising admittedly within the Congo free-trade zone, and it discusses at length the two questions: (1) "whether the rights of third parties can be exercised adversely to the rights of the concessionnaires," and (2) "whether the terms of the Decree of the 26th May, 1899" (i.e., the Decree according the Company its Concession) "are irreconcilable with the provisions of the Berlin General Act."

On the first point, the Court holds that the fact of Messrs. Holt having traded in rubber with the natives during the past twenty years does not confer upon them any "droits acquis" within the meaning of Article 1 of the Decree of Concession and Article 2 of the "Cahier des Charges," entitling them to continue such trade for an indefinite time.

On the second point, the Court holds that the exclusive right of "exploitation" given to the Company does not constitute a commercial monopoly such as is contemplated by Article V of the Berlin Act. The right to collect the rubber through the instrumentality of the natives is not, the Judgment says, a commercial privilege: for the rubber is the property of the Company, having been ceded to it by the State, which had the right of reserving such property to itself, and the collection of the rubber through the instrumentality of the natives is, therefore, not a "commercial transaction." No commercial transaction, in fact, takes place until the Company eventually exchanges the rubber in the way of trade.

---

* Messrs. Holt, January 7, 1902.

On these grounds the Court decides that the rubber seized is the property of the concessionnaire Company, and orders that it shall be handed over to the Company on their paying Messrs. Holt the amount of remuneration ordinarily given to the natives for collecting it.

The Court forbids Messrs. Holt for the future to gather, or cause to be gathered, any of the natural products of the land included in the Concession, and orders them to pay all the costs of the action.

I am to request you to take Messrs. Holt's letter into your consideration in connection with the papers already before you on the subject of their treatment by the authorities of the French Congo, and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion whether there is anything in the copy of the Judgment of the Libreville Appeal Court which can properly form the subject of representation to the French Government.

Lord Lansdowne would also be glad to be furnished with any observations of a general nature which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

1. In reply to your Lordship's letter of the 25th December, 1901, we do not think we can add anything to our Report of the 22nd May, 1901. The Judgment of the Court of Appeal at Libreville of the 24th October, 1901, is, so far as the legal questions are concerned, in accordance with the opinion we expressed in that Report.

We think a further representation might be made to the French Government urging the claim of Messrs. Holt to equitable consideration in respect of the hardship upon them. The Judgment itself seems to indicate this as the proper course.

2. In reply to your Lordship's letter of the 16th January: that we see no reason to modify our opinion of the 22nd May, 1901, as regards territories within the free-trade zone.

We think that the effect of the Judgment of the same Court of Appeal of the 27th November, 1901, should be brought to the notice of the French Government, and that the representation should be pressed that the result is to deprive, in contravention of the Act of Berlin, Messrs. Holt of rights of trading.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 13, 1902.

No. 24.

[February 14, 1902.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, October 22, 1901.

French fishing-boats at Seven Stones and in British ports.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the accompanying papers, as marked in the accompanying list, relating to the right of French fishing-vessels to fish at the Seven Stones, a group of rocks lying between Scilly and the mainland, and described as being about 9 miles distant from the nearest land, and uncovered at low water only.

I am to request that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion as to—

1902

1. Whether the right of French fishing-boats to fish at the rocks above mentioned can be questioned;

2. Whether you concur in the opinion expressed by the Legal Advisers of the Board of Trade (see letter from that Department of the 23rd September), that the statutory power to enforce Article 86, amongst others, of the Regulations of 1843 has been expressly repealed by section 30 and Part I of the Second Schedule to the Sea Fisheries Act of 1883; and

3. Whether the annexed draft of a letter to Mr. Dorrien Smith meets with your concurrence.

His Lordship would also be glad to receive any other observations of a general nature which you may have to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) MARTIN GOSSELIN.

Report.

1. We are of opinion that French fishing-vessels have the right to fish at the Seven Stones.

2. French fishing-vessels cannot, in our opinion, be prevented from coming into British ports to sell their fish. The enactment preventing them was contained in Articles 85 and 86 of the Schedule to "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1843." Section 19 of "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1868," abolished all restrictions in England on the sale of sea fish, not being unfit for food.

Notwithstanding this enactment, the provisions of "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1843," were, so far as regards French fishermen, revived by section 15 of "The Fisheries (Oyster, Crab, and Lobster) Act, 1877," but this section 15 was repealed by section 30 and Schedule II of "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1883," so that the provisions of section 19 of "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1868," again became operative. Moreover, by section 30 and Schedule II of "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1883," so much of the Schedule to "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1843," as prohibits French fishing-boats from approaching the coast of the United Kingdom within the limit of 3 miles, and so much of the rest of the Act as relates to that portion of the Schedule, were repealed. We think that this repeal, when read by the light of section 24 of the same Act, extends to the last paragraph of Article 86 of the Schedule to "The Sea Fisheries Act, 1843," which is closely connected with Article 85, directly forbidding approach within the limit of 3 miles, and this paragraph is, we think, comprised under the general description of the repeal.

3. We approve the terms of the draft letter to Mr. Dorrien Smith.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 14, 1902.

List of Papers.

Fishery Convention with France		August 2, 1839.
Sea Fisheries Act of 1843 (6 and 7 Vic., c. 79).
Law Officers to Colonial Office	(Jurisdiction in Pacific)	March 25, 1875,
North Sea Fisheries Convention	(Treaty, No. 727)	May 6, 1882.
Memorandum	(Mosquito Keys)	October 16, 1886.
Law Officers to Board of Trade	(Goodwin Sands)	June 7, 1888.
Board of Trade		August 9, 1901.
Ditto		September 6, ,,
To Board of Trade		September 16, ,,
To Admiralty		September 16, ,,
Board of Trade		September 23, ,,
To Board of Trade		September 28, ,,
Admiralty		October 7, ,,
Board of Trade		October 15, ,,
Draft reply to Mr. D. Smith.

Annex.

Draft of Letter to Mr. Dorrien Smith.

Sir,

WITH reference to previous correspondence on the subject of French boats fishing off the Seven Stones Rocks, I am directed by the Board of Trade to state that they are unable to find that foreign boats are precluded from fishing at that locality.

I am to add that there is no power to prevent foreign boats visiting British ports in the intervals of fishing outside British jurisdiction.

I am, &c.

No. 25.

[April 7, 1902.]

M. Geoffray to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received April 3.)

Ambassade de France en Angleterre,
Londres, le 1$^{\text{er}}$ Avril, 1902.

M. le Marquis,

Murderers of Captain Keyes: As to mode of trial.

POUR répondre au désir exprimé par votre Seigneurie à M. Cambon au cours de ses récents entretiens sur l'affaire des trois Français détenus à Jebba pour le meurtre d'un officier Anglais à Argoungou, je suis chargé de lui donner les indications suivantes sur la situation dans laquelle ils se trouveront placés aux yeux de l'Administration Française après qu'ils lui auront été restitués conformément à sa demande:—

Ces inculpés ayant été livrés aux autorités de la Nigeria par un fonctionnaire non qualifié et contrairement aux prescriptions de la Convention conclue à cet effet entre les deux pays, l'extradition doit être considérée comme nulle. Par voie de conséquence, cette annulation rend nul également l'ensemble de la procédure suivie contre les accusés en territoire Britannique et les condamnations prononcées contre eux. Dans ces conditions, si le Gouvernement Britannique veut bien déclarer que lui aussi considère comme nulles l'extradition et les condamnations qui s'en sont suivies, et maintenir la plainte qu'il a déposée contre eux pour le meurtre d'Argoungou, les nommés Bendart, Buret, et Desamblanc, tombant sous le coup de l'Article 5 du Code d'Instruction Criminelle Français comme accusés d'un crime commis hors du territoire et pour lequel ils n'auront pas encore été définitivement jugés, seront poursuivis de ce chef devant nos Tribunaux. L'affaire serait alors déférée à la juridiction compétente par le Ministère Public, et c'est dans ce sens que des instructions seraient données à M. le Gouverneur-Général de l'Afrique Occidentale Française.

J'ajoute que, dans le cas présent, la juridiction compétente sera la juridiction militaire, car les inculpés sont déserteurs de l'armée, et bien qu'ils soient appelés à bénéficier de la loi d'amnistie pour le fait de désertion, ils auront, dès leur rentrée sur le territoire Français, à être réintégrés au régiment pour compléter le temps de service qu'ils avaient à faire au moment où ils ont déserté.

En me chargeant de porter à la connaissance de votre Seigneurie les informations ci-dessus, mon Gouvernement m'exprime le désir d'être avisé le plus promptement possible de la décision qu'aura prise le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté. Il est tout disposé, pour sa part, et afin d'éviter les conséquences que pourrait avoir pour les accusés, en raison du climat local, la prolongation de leur détention à Jebba, à donner par câble toutes les instructions nécessaires aux autorités Françaises dans l'Afrique Occidentale.

Veuillez, &c.
(Signé) GEOFFRAY.

Opinion.[*]

We think that before these men are given up explicit assurances ought to be obtained from the French Government on two points:—

1. That these men will be tried by the French in West Africa at some place

---

[*] Mr. Cox and I went to a conference with the Law Officers at the House of Commons on this matter this afternoon (the 7th April, 1902), when, after discussing the terms of M. Geoffray's note of the 1st April, the Law Officers wrote this Opinion.—W. E. D.

1902

convenient for the necessary witnesses. If the trial took place in France or at some remote spot in French West Africa there might be a failure of justice from want of evidence.

2. There ought further to be an assurance that the French Government are advised by their legal experts that to sentence in British territory will be no bar to a prosecution in French territory, i.e., that no plea of what here would be called autrefois convict would be admissible.

If these conditions be complied with, we think that the men may be given up and an Ordinance passed reciting that their surrender was the result of mistake, and that the French Government have undertaken that they shall be tried before the proper French Tribunal, and enacting that the proceedings shall be annulled.

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

Royal Courts of Justice,
April 7, 1902.

No. 26.

[May 27, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Murderers of Captain Keyes. Further as to handing over to French authorities.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, May 16, 1902.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, and with reference to the opinion which you were good enough to furnish on the 7th ultimo, to transmit to you herewith the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the method of dealing with the men who have been convicted of the murder of Captain Keyes, one of whom, as will be seen from the Colonial Office letter of the 1st instant, has since died.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your early consideration, and that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether the statements contained in M. Cambon's note of the 19th ultimo may be regarded as a sufficient assurance that the previous proceedings against the prisoners will not be held to be a bar to their conviction in a French Court, and may be safely accepted by His Majesty's Government.

2. Whether the provisions of the draft Proclamation inclosed in the Colonial Office letter of the 10th instant are apt and proper for the purpose for which they are intended.

3. Whether, in view of the difficulties that will ensue from the trial of the prisoners at so great a distance from Northern Nigeria as St. Louis, in Senegal, an undertaking should be obtained from the French Government before the prisoners are handed over that they will be tried at Porto Novo, in Dahomey, or at some other suitable place to be agreed upon with His Majesty's Government; and whether, if French legislation should be necessary in order to carry out this object, His Majesty's Government would be justified in requiring from the French Government, as a condition precedent to the surrender of the prisoners, a guarantee that such legislation would be obtained.

4. Whether the proposal to take the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution by means of "Commissions Rogatoires" addressed by the French Court to the Tribunals of Northern Nigeria is one that can or should be agreed to by His Majesty's Government, and, if not, what are the special grounds on which the proposal may most appropriately be declined.

His Lordship will at the same time be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may desire to offer in connection with the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

M. Geoffray	April 1, 1902
Law Officers	April 7, "
To M. Geoffray	April 9, "
To Colonial Office	April 9, "
M. Cambon..	April 19, "
To Sir E. Monson	April 23, "
To Colonial Office	April 30, "
Colonial Office	May 1, "
To Colonial Office	May 8, "
Colonial Office	May 10, "

Report.

1. We think M. Cambon's assurances on this point satisfactory.

2. Subject to the alterations which we have made, we think the terms of the draft Proclamation apt and proper.

3 and 4. If it is established to the satisfaction of His Majesty's Government that evidence taken on "Commissions Rogatoires" will be as available for use in the prosecution in the French Court as if the witnesses attended, we think that His Majesty's Government may concur in the course proposed in this respect. Arrangements should also be suggested for the taking of the evidence while the prisoners are still in British territory that they may have the opportunity of attending and cross-examining.

It would, we think, be difficult for His Majesty's Government to refuse the surrender unless the French pass a law providing for trial at Porto Novo, as there may be circumstances which make this impracticable, and it is clear that the original surrender of the prisoners was without authority.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
May 27, 1902.

Annex.

Draft Proclamation (as altered and amended by Law Officers).

WHEREAS certain prisoners of French nationality, now confined at , by name respectively Desamblanc and Buret, together with one Bendard, since deceased, did, on the 21st day of June, 1901, at Argungou, within Northern Nigeria, ~~feloniously, wilfully, and of malice aforethought,~~ kill and murder certain persons, by name C. V. Keyes, Madugo, and Lawani;

And whereas the said prisoners were, together with the said Bendard, arrested by the French authorities in , and surrendered by them to the High Commissioner for trial ~~in due form of law,~~ and were, in the month of October 1901, duly brought to trial before the Supreme Court of Northern Nigeria, and being found guilty of murder were ~~lawfully~~ sentenced to death;

And whereas the Government of the French Republic have represented, and have established to the satisfaction of His Majesty's Government, that the surrender of the prisoners aforesaid to the High Commissioner was made without due authority, and have requested that they may be delivered over to the French authorities in order that they may be tried by the proper French Tribunals for the murder aforesaid, and for any other offences committed by them;

And whereas the Government of the French Republic have given full and complete assurances to His Majesty's Government that the aforesaid prisoners, if delivered up, will be duly brought to justice and tried ~~at~~ for the murder aforesaid, and that all proper facilities will be afforded for the ~~attendance of the witnesses~~ production of evidence at such trial, and that upon the enactment of this Proclamation it will not be competent for the prisoners to rely on the defence that they have already been tried and convicted for the aforesaid murder, and that under the provisions of French law no impediment will exist to prevent the due trial and conviction of the said prisoners for the murder of the said C. V. Keyes, Madugo, and Lawani, if upon the evidence produced at such trial they shall be found to have been guilty of the said crime;

1902

And whereas His Majesty's Government is satisfied with the aforesaid assurances of the French Government, and it is expedient that provision should be made for the surrender of the aforesaid prisoners to the French authorities for trial;

Be it therefore enacted by the High Commissioner of Northern Nigeria as follows:—

1. The conviction of the said prisoners Desamblanc, Buret, and Bendard is hereby annulled and made void, and for the purposes of this Proclamation the said Desamblanc and Buret (hereafter referred to as "the prisoners") shall be deemed to be, and shall be, in all respects in the position of prisoners duly arrested upon the charge of murder and awaiting trial for the said offence.

2. The prisoners shall, as soon as satisfactory arrangements have been made by the High Commissioner in that behalf, be surrendered to any officer appointed by the Governor of Dahomey authorized to receive them, and until such surrender shall be detained in custody as prisoners awaiting trial.

3. A warrant under the hand of the High Commissioner addressed to the master of any ship or to any other person shall be sufficient authority to the person named therein to convey the prisoners, or either of them, to the place named therein, and to deliver them, or either of them, into such custody as may be named in the warrant.

4. No writ of habeas corpus or other process calling in question the legality of the arrest, detention, trial, conviction, or surrender of the said Desamblanc, Buret, and Bendard, or any of them, or of any other matter connected therewith respectively, shall have any effect within Northern Nigeria.

5. If any person aids, or attempts to aid, the prisoners, or either of them, to escape, or to attempt to escape, from custody, he shall be guilty of an offence, and shall be liable, on conviction thereof, to imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding two years.

6. No action, indictment, or legal proceeding, civil or criminal, shall lie or be brought against the High Commissioner or against any Judge, ~~authority,~~ officer, or other person heretofore or hereafter concerned in the arrest, detention, trial, conviction, or surrender of the said Desamblanc, Buret, and Bendard, or any of them, for any act done in respect thereof, and they are hereby indemnified against all liability in respect of any such acts.

7. The High Commissioner may make Regulations not being inconsistent with this Proclamation for the carrying out of the provisions thereof, or for taking by the Courts of Northern Nigeria of any evidence required for the prosecution of the prisoners before a French Court, and any Regulations so made and published shall have effect as if they had been enacted in this Proclamation.

8. This Proclamation may be cited as "The French Prisoners ~~Surrender~~ Proclamation, 1902."

R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 27.

[June 7, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, June 2, 1902.

Claims of Niger Company on French Government, and counter-claims.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list respecting certain claims and counter-claims of the Niger Company and the French Government.

The points actually in dispute are as follows:—

1. The amount owing by the French Government for services rendered and goods supplied by the Niger Company in 1894 and 1895 to the "Ardent," a French Government vessel, in the total of which amount the French Government wish to make a reduction.

2. The responsibility of the Niger Company for the consequences of the raid on Akassa by the Brassmen in 1895.

3. The propriety of the treatment of the "Faji," a vessel belonging to the French Government, by the authorities of the Niger Company.

Lord Lansdowne proposes to instruct His Majesty's Ambassador at Paris to address a note to the French Government in the terms of the accompanying Memorandum (Paper V), which deals seriatim with these points, and his Lordship would be glad to know whether, in your opinion, the arguments therein set forth deal efficiently with the contentions raised by the French Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Niger Company		October	19,	1896.
(B.)	To Niger Company		October	23,	„
(C.)	Niger Company		October	23,	„
(D.)	To Mr. Gosselin	(No. 260. Africa)	November	9,	„
(E.)	Mr. Gosselin	(No. 197. Africa)	November	14,	„
(F.)	Sir E. Monson	(No. 35. Africa)	January	30,	1897.
(G.)	Ditto	(No. 112. Africa)	April	10,	„
(H.)	Colonial Office		October	17,	1900.
(I.)	Sir E. Monson	(No. 112. Africa)	October	18,	1901.
(J.)	Memorandum by Mr. de Bernhardt		October	23,	1900.
(K.)	Memorandum by Mr. Hertslet		October	28,	1901.
(L.)	To Sir E. Monson	(No. 166. Africa)	October	30,	„
(M.)	To Niger Company		November	13,	„
(N.)	Niger Company		November	27,	„
(O.)	Ditto		January	17,	1902.
(P.)	Minute on above		January	31,	„
(Q.)	Memorandum by Mr. Farnall		January	19,	„
(R.)	Mr. Barclay		January	25,	„
(S.)	Memorandum by Mr. Barclay		February	1,	„
(T.)	To Colonial Office		March	8,	„
(U.)	Colonial Office		April	14.	„
(V.)	Draft Memorandum to French Government		June	14,	„

Report.

In our opinion, the arguments set forth in the Memorandum (Paper V) accompanying Mr. Bertie's letter deal efficiently with the contentions raised by the French Government, and are proper to be submitted to them.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 7, 1902.

Annex.

Draft Memorandum of Communication to be made to the French Government.

HIS Majesty's Government regret that the cost of the telegram transmitted to the Minister for the Colonies at Paris by Commander Decœur should have remained among the items of claim mentioned in the note of the 8th November, 1900, and subsequent communications from the British Embassy. The history of the repayment of this particular item is as follows:—

On the 3rd February, 1897, his Excellency M. Hanotaux promised to call the attention of the Minister for the Colonies to the matter, and, on the 12th of the following October, the Royal Niger Company was asked by the Minister for vouchers supporting the request for repayment. On the 13th the Company furnished the required documents. On the 29th the Embassy was informed verbally that the amount would be repaid. It thus appears that the cost of the telegram was repaid quite apart from the rest of the Company's claim, and when the French Government was reminded of the whole claim on the 8th November, 1900, in continuation of the many communications from the Company and from the Embassy, the settlement of this one item, withou reference to the rest of the claim, was unfortunately overlooked.

As regards the amount due to the Royal Niger Company on account of the French gun-boa "Ardent," M. Delcassé's note of the 15th October last contains the first intimation that the amoun claimed by the Company as far back as the 11th October, 1895, was disputed.

A second application was addressed to the French Ministry for the Colonies on the 2nd January, 1896; the Company then expressed a fear that their first letter had miscarried. On the 22nd May, 1896, Sir George Goldie, the Governor of the Company, addressed a personal communication to the Minister. To this letter, as to the two previous letters, no reply was received, nor were these several communications even acknowledged.

In these circumstances, the Company could but appeal to Her late Majesty's Government for assistance, and, on the 14th November, 1896, Mr. (now Sir Martin) Gosselin called the attention of the French Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Company's claims. No reply having been received, the French Government were reminded of the matter in January and April 1897, and again in November 1900, and in May 1901.

If, in reply to the earlier requests for repayment, the Royal Niger Company or Her late Majesty's Government had been furnished with copies of the communications from MM. d'Agoult, Guigues, and Weyer inclosed in M. Delcassé's note of the 15th October last, it would have been possible to establish the exact facts by the evidence of the Company's agents, and by documents which have since been destroyed in the usual course.

1902

The criticism of the French Government on the Company's account was not received for six years after the account was delivered. In so long a period great changes of staff occur, especially in a climate such as that of Nigeria, and two years ago the staff was entirely reorganized on the Company ceasing to administer the Niger territories on behalf of the Government of this country.

The documents on which are based the reductions which the French Government wish to make on the original account have been in existence for more than six years, and could therefore have been made use of for criticising the account at a time when it was still possible to check their accuracy. It is now no longer possible to do so, and it would be inequitable that the French Government should profit by delays of their own making, against which the Company and the British Government earnestly protested by their repeated but unavailing requests for attention to the claim.

In these circumstances, His Majesty's Government are unable to admit the proposed reductions.

The liability for the 220*l.* 7*s.* 5*d.*, for losses incurred during the attack on Akassa in 1895, has never been disputed by the Company.

The goods forming the subject of the claim were taken or destroyed by the Brassmen. The result of a careful inquiry was that the Niger Coast Protectorate was responsible for the raid; and the Protectorate indemnified the Niger Company, which, in its turn, indemnified others. M. Delcassé's note, however, makes the Niger Company's liability to flow from Article XXXV of the Act of Berlin, which is as follows:—

> "The Signatory Powers of the present Act recognize the obligation to insure the establishment of authority in regions occupied by them on the coasts of the African continent sufficient to protect existing rights, and, as the case may be, freedom of trade and of transit under the conditions agreed upon."

But, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, these words cannot be interpreted to mean that a Government established on the African coast is to be held responsible for what it cannot prevent, or is, in that respect, under any greater obligation than a Government established elsewhere.

M. Delcassé, in his note of the 15th October last, deprecates reopening the case of the "Faji;" but he states two positions with regard to it which His Majesty's Government cannot pass over in silence. His Excellency says that a vessel which was flying a regular commercial flag, and which had entered the British Protectorate of the Niger, without any formality having been asked of her at the first custom-house on the Forcados branch of the Niger, was arrested and detained by an "agency" established in the interior at the entrance of a territorial district created for private administrative convenience.

But, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, it was clearly the duty of the "Faji" to ascertain what were the formalities required by the law of the territorial waters which she had entered. She was not entitled to pass Gana-Gana without calling, or to proceed up the river without a clearance.

The second point in M. Delcassé's note is that the Royal Niger Company's vessel which arrested the "Faji" did not fly the "English" flag, but only that of the Company, which flag did not carry with it the prerogatives of the "national" flag. His Majesty's Government consider that it was the duty of the "Faji" to ascertain what was the distinctive flag of the Administration placed by the protecting Power in charge of the administration of the waters which she had entered. The flag of the Royal Niger Company was, moreover, to be found in the collection of distinctive and officially-recognized flags issued by the Admiralty for the information of the public. There was no obligation to bring this flag to the notice of the French Government; but it had, as a fact, been communicated to them in the collection sent to Baron d'Estournelles on the 23rd August, 1890.

His Majesty's Government cannot admit that the arrest of the "Faji" was arbitrary, and they maintain the position taken up in the note addressed by the late Marquess of Dufferin to the French Minister for Foreign Affairs on the 16th July, 1895.

Foreign Office, June 14, 1902.

GENERAL.

No. 28.

[January 27, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, January 18, 1902.

Cowen v. "Truth." Production of Papers at trial of.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you herewith a letter from Messrs. Lewis and Lewis, asking for the production in Court of certain correspondence in the possession of this Department in connection with libel actions which have been brought by Mr. Laurence Cowen against the proprietor and editor of "Truth" newspaper.

A draft of the reply which Lord Lansdowne caused to be returned to this communication is inclosed.

The only correspondence received or sent by this Department of the nature referred to by Messrs. Lewis and Lewis is with the Lord Mayor of Manchester, and with the Chambers of Commerce of Manchester, Leeds, Oldham, and Halifax; and in these papers, which are annexed for your inspection, the only mention of the Article Club, of which Mr. Laurence Cowen (or Cowan) is the Honorary Secretary, occurs in the communication from the Manchester Chamber of Commerce of the 4th December, 1899, and its inclosures.

I am to request that you will favour Lord Lansdowne at your earliest convenience with your opinion as to whether the whole or any, and, if so, what portions of this correspondence may properly be produced by a gentleman from this Department at the trial of the action; and I am to add that his Lordship will, at the same time, be glad to be furnished with any observations of a general character which you may desire to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

1.	Messrs. Lewis and Lewis	January 2, 1902.
2.	To ditto	January 17, „
3.	Manchester Chamber of Commerce	December 4, 1899.
4.	To ditto	December 8, „
5.	Manchester Chamber of Commerce	December 14, „
6.	Ditto	December 22, „
7.	Lord Mayor of Manchester	December 19, „
8.	To ditto	December 22, „
9.	Ditto	December 30, „
10.	Leeds Chamber of Commerce	July 10, „
11.	To ditto	July 19, „
12.	Leeds Chamber of Commerce	July 20, „
13.	Ditto	August 18, „
14.	Ditto	September 8, „
15.	Ditto	September 18, „
16.	To Leeds Chamber of Commerce	September 20, „
17.	Ditto	September 22, „
18.	Oldham Chamber of Commerce	December 2, „
19.	To ditto	December 13, „
20.	Halifax Chamber of Commerce	October 30, „
21.	To ditto	November 1, „
22.	Ditto	November 10, „

Report.

We see no objection to the production of the correspondence in this matter.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
January 27, 1902.

1902

[Colonial Office.] No. 28A.

[July 23, 1902.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, July 23, 1902.

Australian "Immigration Restriction Act, 1901."

WE were honoured with your commands signified to us by Mr. Bertram Cox in his letter of the 14th instant, stating that he had been directed by you to request our consideration of a question which has arisen as to whether Treaties between Great Britain and foreign countries for the surrender of merchant seamen deserters exempt vessels of those countries from the provisions of "The Immigration Restriction Act, 1901," of the Commonwealth of Australia.

That from the telegraphic correspondence inclosed it would be seen that the Commonwealth Government considered that the Immigration Restriction Act was not in conflict with the provisions of the Treaties concluded by His Majesty's Government under section 238 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894;" but that, as there was thought to be some doubt on the point, you would be glad to be favoured with our opinion.

That he was therefore to request that we would take into our consideration the papers noted in the margin of his letter and transmitted therewith, and report—

(a.) Whether "The Immigration Restriction Act, 1901" of the Commonwealth of Australia is in conflict with the Treaties concluded by His Majesty's Government under section 238 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894."

(b.) If so, whether the stipulations of the Treaties referred to have been incorporated in any Imperial Act which would prevail over the Australian Act now in question.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to—

Report—

(a.) No.

There is nothing in "The Immigration Act, 1901" of the Commonwealth of Australia which interferes with the Treaties concluded by His Majesty's Government under section 238 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894."

(b.) Does not arise.

We are, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

No. 29.

[September 4, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 19, 1902.

East Africa Protectorate Marriage Ordinance.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to refer you to your Report of the 31st December, 1901, and to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, dealing with the question of marriages in the African Protectorates administered by this Department. Since the receipt of your Report above referred to, the matter has formed the subject of most careful consideration, in consultation with the Colonial Office and Mr. Albert Gray, as a result of which the accompanying draft Marriage Ordinance has been prepared by Mr. Gray for the East Africa Protectorate upon a Colonial Office model.

Similar enactments, practically identical in every way, have been prepared for the Protectorates of Uganda, Somaliland, British Central Africa, and for North-Eastern Rhodesia, taking the form of Ordinances under the new Orders in Council for Uganda and British Central Africa and of King's Regulations in North-Eastern Rhodesia and Somaliland.

GENERAL.

No. 29A. [Home Office.]

[December 9, 1902.]

THE following is a copy of a letter from the Home Office:—

(B. 38521/2.)
My Lord, Whitehall, November 24, 1902.

Interpretation of section 10 (5) of Naturalization Act, 1870.

I am directed by the Secretary of State to transmit to your Lordship the inclosed case respecting the interpretation of section 10 (5) of the Naturalization Act of 1870, and I am to request that you will move the Law Officers to favour the Secretary of State with their opinion thereon.

I am, &c.
(Signed) CHARLES S. MURDOCH.

The Solicitor to the Treasury.

The case, transmitted with the foregoing letter, is annexed hereto.

The case, with the Opinion of the Law Officers, dated the 27th July, 1887, referred to in the annexed case, is sent herewith.

The Attorney- and Solicitor-General are requested to favour the Secretary of State with their opinion on the question raised in the annexed case, as asked in Mr. Murdoch's letter.

CASE FOR THE LAW OFFICERS.

The following semi-official correspondence on the interpretation of section 10 (5) of "The Naturalization Act, 1870," has recently taken place between the Home Office and the Foreign Office:—

Sir K. Digby to Mr. Davidson, K.C.

My dear Davidson, Home Office.

A curious question, and so far as I know a novel one, has arisen as to the interpretation of section 10 (5) of "The Naturalization Act, 1870." I feel rather strongly a doubt which the very experienced members of the Domestic Department do not share, and I should be glad to know whether you know of any Foreign Office decision on the point, and what your own view is. The facts are shortly these:

A. was naturalized by certificate in 1874.

B., his son, born abroad, became resident with him during infancy, and is consequently deemed to be "a naturalized British subject."

C., son of B., is born abroad, but resides in England during infancy with his father.

Is C. to be "deemed a naturalized British subject?"

Primâ facie no, because naturalization under the last words of the section takes place only when the father has obtained a certificate of naturalization, and B. never obtained a certificate.

But my doubt is whether the words "deemed to be a naturalized British subject" must not be read as equivalent to "deemed to have the same rights and capacities as if he had received a certificate of naturalization," and consequently whether a child who, though born abroad, becomes resident with him may not be "deemed to be naturalized" within the meaning of the last words of the clause.

For if you turn to the third paragraph of section 7 you find no description or definition of the status conferred by naturalization or by being naturalized. In order that an alien may acquire the status of a British subject he must obtain "a certificate of naturalization." In the case of the wife different language is used. An alien marrying a British subject is not deemed to be naturalized, but deemed to be a British subject. Where, therefore, a man is said to be deemed to be naturalized, does not this in effect mean "deemed to have the same rights as if he had received a certificate of naturalization?" The Statute only confers the rights of a British subject upon the recipient of the certificate. Is there any distinction between the status of a person "naturalized" and the status of a person who has received a certificate of naturalization; and does not the power of transmitting his nationality to infant children who become resident with him attach to his status?

Do you think it worth while to consult the Law Officers?

Very truly yours,
(Signed) KENELM E. DIGBY.

P.S.—I inclose the Solicitor's letter, which please return.

Mr. Davidson, K.C., to Sir K. Digby.

My dear Digby,
Foreign Office, November 7.

The case was shortly this:—

A. was naturalized by certificate in 1874.

B., his son, became resident with him during infancy, and is, consequently, to be deemed to be a naturalized British subject.

C., the son of B., was born abroad, but has resided during infancy with his father in the United Kingdom.

Is C. to be deemed a naturalized British subject?

The point has not come before me either since I have been Legal Adviser here or previously when I was in the Law Officers' Chambers, and, so far as I know, we have no precedents bearing exactly on it. However, to make sure, I consulted our Treaty Department and Library, but they are unable to produce anything to help us, and the matter must, therefore, be treated as one primæ impressionis.

On the whole, I incline to the view which appears to be taken by your Domestic Department—viz., that C. is not to be deemed a naturalized British subject, but, at the same time, I do not think the matter is by any means free from doubt, and it seems to me to be clearly a case in which it is very desirable to consult the Law Officers.

The following considerations have (amongst others) weighed with me in determining what was a somewhat doubtful view originally, in the direction of a negative answer to the question.

Originally, no man was a subject of the King unless he was born within the liegeance of the Crown, no doubt a deduction from the feudal idea of attachment to the soil. It required an Act of Parliament to convert the son born abroad of a natural-born British subject into a British subject.

It is hardly possible to imagine a stronger proof that the fundamental principle of our law on this point was that status as a British subject is derived not from blood, but from birth.

Under the Act of 1844, naturalization was a personal matter, it covered no children at all; if the children of a naturalized British subject were themselves British, this was because in the particular case they were born in the British dominions; thus British national status was not transmissible to them as a result of the naturalization of their parents.

The Act of 1870 goes a step further: the infant children resident in the United Kingdom with the naturalized parent acquire a British status.

Before considering exactly the limits of that status, it is well to bear in mind that a qualification for naturalization is intention to reside afterwards in the United Kingdom; consequently, the law contemplates that the descendants of a naturalized person will be British subjects by reason of birth in the United Kingdom. The words of section 10 (5), as the Law Officers point out, are wide enough to cover after-born children, but the hardship those words are meant to meet was the case of children born previously to the naturalization. It follows that if a naturalized British subject has children born abroad after naturalization, this can only take place because he is not doing what his naturalization contemplates he should do.

With regard to the limits of the British status conferred by section 10 (5), it would clearly be unjust if the children had been given a "natural-born" status, because, if so, the grandchildren of a naturalized person might be better off than the grandchildren of a natural-born subject, for the grandchild born abroad would be a natural-born subject, though both father and grandfather were born abroad, as he would be brought within the Act of George II if his father were "deemed a natural-born subject."

They are therefore limited to naturalized status, and are consequently altogether outside the Acts of George II and George III. Outside these Acts, however, the status of British subject is not a matter of inheritance from parents, but a consequence of the place of birth. Therefore, on principle, the descendants of naturalized persons must either be British subjects by birth in the British dominions or aliens. Nor does the Act of 1870 conflict with this: it specifically limits the naturalization of infant children to the children of those who have received a certificate of naturalization. If it were not so, the intermittent residence of a family in the United Kingdom might confer the status of British subject on the twentieth generation in descent from the original person naturalized, even if no one of them were born here.

On the pure question of the construction of the bare words of the Statute there is, I quite feel, very considerable doubt, and it is only by going rather below the surface perhaps that I have arrived at the opinion that C. is an alien.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) W. E. DAVIDSON.

The Secretary of State desires to be advised whether the person referred to in this correspondence as C. is to be "deemed to be a naturalized British subject" within the meaning of section 10 (5) of the Naturalization Act of 1870.

Opinion.

The answer to this question is, in our opinion, in the negative.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Law Officers' Department,
December 9, 1902.

1902

The Indian Divorce Act already applies to East Africa, except such parts as relate to divorce and nullity of marriage, and it has now been suggested that the remainder of the Act should be applied to that Protectorate. Should a Divorce Law be considered desirable in the other Protectorates, it will be made the subject of a separate reference.

I have the honour to request you to take the inclosed draft Ordinance into your consideration, and to favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether it may properly be sent in its present form to His Majesty's Commissioner to be put into force, and with any observations of a general character which you may desire to make on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CLEMENT Ll. HILL

List of Papers.

To Law Officers	November 7, 1901.
Law Officers	December 31, ,,
Draft of East Africa Protectorate Marriage Ordinance.

Report.

The inclosed draft Ordinance, as altered and initialled by us, is, in our opinion, proper to be put in force.*

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
September 4, 1902.

GREECE.

No. 30.

[May 5, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, January 5, 1901.

Whitfield–Preiswerk Marriage of Syra before clergyman.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the validity of a marriage between Mr. W. J. Whitfield, a British subject, and Miss E. Preiswerk, a Swiss citizen, which was solemnized, according to the rites of the Church of England, in St. Paul's Church, Syra, on the 17th March, 1888.

As far as Lord Lansdowne has been able to ascertain, the circumstances of the case are as follows:—

According to Mr. Whitfield's statement (see Inclosure E), he applied, in the first instance, to Mr. Quintana, then Acting British Consul at Syra, for advice. Mr. Quintana, not being himself a marriage officer, explained that he could not perform the marriage ceremony, and advised Mr. Whitfield to consult His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Athens on the matter.

Acting upon this advice, Mr. Whitfield proceeded to Athens and called at the Legation, when His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires declared he was unable to assist him, and suggested that he should consult the Swiss Consular authorities, adding that he thought a lex loci marriage might be possible. On his return to Syra Mr. Whitfield

---

* This Ordinance, No. 30 of 1902, bears the date November 29, 1902 (see Confidential 7855).

1902

was informed that either the German or French Consul was in charge of Swiss interests; but, on application, both these officers declined to interfere unless Miss Preiswerk could produce the papers required by Swiss law, which she was unable to do.

It being of considerable importance to the parties that the marriage should take place without further delay, Mr. Whitfield, in the last resort, applied to the Rev. R. Quinet, British Chaplain in Syra, who expressed his willingness to solemnize the marriage, though he could not say whether the marriage would be considered as valid. To the best of Mr. Whitfield's recollection the marriage was solemnized a week or ten days after his interview with the Rev. R. Quinet, in the presence of two witnesses, both British subjects; but Mr. Quintana was not present. No register was signed by either party or by the witnesses present at the ceremony, nor had any banns been previously published or special licence obtained.

On receipt of this statement, Mr. Quinet was requested to explain the apparent irregularity of his proceedings. He states (see Inclosure J) that he consented to solemnize the marriage at the British Consulate in order to prevent a gross scandal; but that he took no steps in the matter on his own initiative, or without first consulting the authorities at His Majesty's Consulate, as was his invariable practice when questions of doubt or difficulty arose. On this occasion Mr. Quinet says he was told by the Acting Consul that the marriage ceremony would be legal provided the necessary forms were complied with at the Consulate, which Mr. Whitfield assured him had been done. Mr. Quinet further states that the marriage was entered in the one book, which was used for a register of births, deaths, and marriages, in St. Paul's Church. A copy of this entry is annexed (Inclosure G).

Mr. Quintana, having been asked for his explanation of the circumstances (see Inclosure N), declares that, in so far as he can call them to mind, the main facts are as stated by Mr. Whitfield. Mr. Quintana explains that he refused to perform the marriage ceremony because he doubted whether he was justified in acting upon the Marriage Warrant furnished to Consul Binney, during whose illness he was in charge of the Consulate. Mr. Quintana states that he cannot recollect ever having requested Mr. Quinet to marry the parties.

In order to ascertain whether the marriage will be considered valid in contemplation of Greek law, His Majesty's Minister at Athens was instructed to consult a Greek lawyer of high standing, whose opinion was that the marriage would be regarded as valid in Greece if it were valid in contemplation of English law (see Inclosure K).

No inquiries have yet been made as to the validity of the marriage in Switzerland, as it is conceived that the question whether it is valid or invalid in contemplation of English law can be in no way affected by this consideration.

I am to request that you will be so good as to take the papers transmitted herewith into your consideration, and to furnish his Lordship with your opinion—

1. Whether this marriage is valid in contemplation of English law; and
2. If not, whether any, and if so, what steps can and should be taken to validate it.

Lord Lansdowne will at the same time be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may desire to offer in connection with the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.) Mr. Whitfield		February	15,	1900.
(B.) To ditto		March	10,	„
(C.) Mr. Whitfield		March	23,	„
(D.) To ditto		April	6,	„
(E.) Mr. St. John	(No. 44)	May	23,	„
(F.) To Acting Consul Bonavia	(No. 2)	June	14,	„
(G.) Acting Consul Bonavia	(No. 10)	June	23,	„
(H.) To Bishop of Gibraltar		July	14,	„
(I.) To Sir E. Egerton	(No. 4)	July	14,	„
(J.) Bishop of Gibraltar		July	23,	„
(K.) Mr. Stronge	(No. 5)	July	24,	„
(L.) Mr. St. John		November	23,	„
(M.) To Consul-General Cumberbatch	(No. 16)	November	24,	„
(N.) Consul-General Cumberbatch	(No 33)	December	19,	„

Report.

The ceremony of marriage in this case appears to me to be valid.

The Foreign Marriage Acts give additional means of celebrating marriage, but do not invalidate any other form of marriage by British subjects which would have been good before these Acts.

A marriage such as this would, of course, have been good by the English common law.

Lord Hardwicke's Act and the subsequent legislation on this subject do not apply to British subjects abroad; and such a marriage as this between British subjects is undoubtedly good wherever the English common law can be considered as applicable as in barbarous countries, or countries where British subjects enjoy extra-territoriality.

As regards civilized countries abroad, the general rule of English law is that the marriage must be celebrated according to the lex loci, and if the lex loci prescribes a form which can be adopted by British subjects, the marriage is not good unless this form has been followed, and the English law as to the form is inapplicable in such cases.

But if the lex loci of any country provides no form which can be adopted by British subjects in such country, British subjects may, I think, contract a marriage which will be good by English law if they follow the form prescribed by the English common law. The common law as to marriage must, so far as English Courts are concerned, be considered as applicable to such countries as regards British subjects, otherwise the result, prior to the Foreign Marriage Act, would have been that British subjects in such countries could not have married at all.

But, as regards Greece, the opinion of the Greek expert carries the case further.

According to that opinion, the law of Greece, while it fails to provide any local ceremony, according to which British subjects in Greece can marry, makes provision for their marriage by recognizing as good, according to the law of Greece, any marriage which is good according to the law of England. In other words, the Greek law concedes to British subjects the right to marry according to the form which is good in English law. Such a marriage as that now under consideration is good by the English law unless it is excluded by a local law applicable. The law of Greece, so far from excluding it, remits British subjects to their own law, which, apart from the Foreign Marriage Acts, must be the common law of England.

I may refer to the opinion expressed by Lord Eldon in Lord Cloncurry's case (Cruise on Dignities, p. 276, second edition,* and see 11 C. and F., p. 92). It is true, as pointed out by Lord Brougham, 11 C. and F., p. 92, that this was a divorce case, and that in the Sussex Peerage case itself no opinion was given on the point (ibid, p. 153). According to the evidence in the Sussex Peerage case, the law of Rome was incorrectly stated to Lord Eldon; but this, of course, does not affect his decision on the legal point, and it appears to me to be sound in principle.

For the reasons above stated, I think the marriage ceremony valid by English law.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Royal Courts of Justice,
January 31, 1901.

Dear Solicitor-General, Foreign Office, June 5, 1901.

The inclosed papers were under consideration by the Law Officers at the time when you were obliged to take sick leave, and the Attorney-General eventually reported on them before you had returned to work.

---

* "Cruise on Dignities," 2nd Edition, 1823, p. 276.

Chap. VI. § 85. In the discussion of a late divorce Bill in the House of Lords, Lord Eldon intimated a doubt respecting the validity of the marriage, which was celebrated at Rome by a Protestant clergyman, both parties being Protestants, and said, that where persons were married abroad it was necessary to show that they were married according to the lex loci, or that they could not avail themselves of the lex loci, or that there was no lex loci. Some days after, a Roman Catholic clergyman was produced at the bar of the House, who swore that at Rome two Protestants could not be married according to the lex loci, because no Catholic clergyman would celebrate marriage between two Protestants. The marriage was held to be good.

1902

The point involved is a difficult and important one, on which eminent lawyers in the past have to some considerable extent differed; and Lord Lansdowne would, therefore, like to be fortified, in case of need, with the opinion of both the Law Officers upon it.

I ought to have sent you the papers before, but I have had such a mass of pressing work that I have got more than usually in arrear. I spoke to the Attorney-General on the matter some time ago, and he thought the papers ought to be sent back to you for your views, and suggested that if you agreed in his opinion as it stands you might add your signature and return it to me; but that if you differed from him on any material point, it might be well that you should discuss the matter further together.

Yours very sincerely,
(Signed) W. E. DAVIDSON.

I agree with the above opinion.
(Signed) EDWARD CARSON.

May 5, 1902.

JAPAN.

[Colonial Office.] No. 30A.

[March 11, 1902.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, March 11, 1902.

Sir,

Anglo-Japanese Treaty of July 16, 1894, and entry of Queensland into the Commonwealth of Australia.

WE were honoured with your commands signified to us by Mr. Antrobus in his letter of the 12th ultimo, stating that he was directed to request that we would favour you with our Report on certain questions which had arisen in connection with the Treaty of the 16th July, 1894, between this country and Japan, to which the Government of Queensland adhered subject to the provisions of the Protocol of the 16th March, 1897.

That on the 1st January, 1901, when the Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act came into operation, the Commonwealth Parliament was invested, by section 51 (29), with power to legislate on the external affairs of Queensland as on those of the other Australian Colonies. That it appeared to you that, assuming that the Commonwealth Government took over the foreign relations of the States, it did so subject to existing obligations, and that the Treaty between Japan and Queensland was, therefore, still binding on His Majesty so far as Queensland was concerned; but that the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth had advised that the Treaty had been terminated as between Japan and Queensland by the change of the latter's status which took place when the Commonwealth of Australia was established.

That if the Treaty were still in force so far as Queensland was concerned, it might be desirable that twelve months' notice should be given by His Majesty's Government with a view to its termination, as provided in the Protocol of the 16th March, 1897. That the question therefore arose whether, if such notice had to be given, it should be given at the request of, and on behalf of, the Commonwealth Government, which now controlled the foreign relations of all Australia, or at the request, and on behalf, of the Government of Queensland.

That the Parliament of the Commonwealth had recently passed, and the Governor-General had assented to, an Act imposing certain restrictions on immigration into Australia. That that Act applied to Queensland among the other States of the Commonwealth, and that it was necessary to consider it in connection with the provisions of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty if the latter was still in force as regards Queensland That in your opinion the Act was in no way contrary to the terms of Articles I and III of the Treaty, as those Articles must, in accordance with established rule, be read as conferring no right to treatment other than that granted to native subjects or to citizens of the most favoured nation. That as the Act was general in its terms, and applied equally to citizens of every country, there would seem to be no conflict between it and the Treaty.

That in order, however, to set those questions at rest, Mr. Antrobus was to request that we should take the matter into our consideration and Report—

1. Whether the Treaty of the 16th July, 1894, between this country and Japan, to which Queensland adhered subject to the provisions of the Protocol of the 16th March, 1897, was terminated as regards Queensland by the change of the latter's status consequent on the coming into force of "The Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act, 1900," or whether it was still binding as far as Queensland was concerned?

2. If the latter was the case—

(a.) Whether the notice required for the termination of the Treaty in relation to Queensland should be given at the request, and on behalf, of the Government of the Commonwealth, or of the Government of the State.

(b.) Whether the Immigration Restriction Act in any way conflicted with the provisions of the Treaty?

We have taken the subject into our consideration, and in obedience to your commands have the honour to

Report—

1. That we think the Treaty of the 16th July, 1894, was not affected as regards Queensland by the entry of Queensland into the Commonwealth of Australia. The Treaty was not between Queensland and Japan, but between His [Her late] Majesty and Japan. The case is not one in which an independent Power has become merged by conquest or cession in the territories of another Power. The portion of His Majesty's dominions known as Queensland has combined with other portions of His Majesty's dominions to form the Commonwealth of Australia which is itself a part of His Majesty's dominions. The Treaty seems to us to affect Queensland as a State of the Commonwealth just as much as it affected Queensland as a Colony.

2.—(a.) We think that the notice should be given by His Majesty's Government on behalf of the Government of the Commonwealth, and of the Government of Queensland.

(b.) We think that the Immigration Restriction Act does to some extent conflict with the provisions of the Treaty. Articles I and III of the Treaty provide for unrestricted entry, residence, and travel and trade. Section 4 (a) of the Immigration Restriction Act prohibits the immigration into the Commonwealth of any person who cannot write out to dictation a passage of fifty words in length in a European language. It cannot, we think, be successfully urged that this is a test which can be impartially applied to immigrants from whatever part of the world they may come. It is obviously selected because it will have the effect of excluding Asiatic immigrants, and the selection of a test which is calculated to exclude Japanese seems to us to be in conflict with the Treaty.

The importance of this conflict is, however, very much minimized by the terms of the Protocol of the 16th March, 1897, by which the adhesion is signified. By Article I of that Protocol any laws with regard to the immigration of labourers and artizans were not to be affected by Articles I and III of the Treaty. We presume that most of the immigrants from Japan who would be affected by section 4 (a) of the Act would be labourers or artizans. The other exception in the Protocol, as to laws with regard to trade, does not appear to be for the present purpose material, as the Immigration Act hardly falls under this description; but the effect of the Act with regard to traders proposing to settle in Queensland, and any other Japanese immigrants not being labourers or artizans, may be very much mitigated by the exercise of the power of exception conferred in section 4 (h).

It therefore appears that upon the whole the Immigration Act may be so administered as not to cause any sensible conflict with the Treaty.

We have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

1902

[Colonial Office.]

No. 30^B.

[April 16, 1902.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, April 16, 1902.

Conflict of Australian Immigration Act and Treaty of 1894: Further as to.

Sir,

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. H. Bertram Cox's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by you to acknowledge the receipt of our Report of the 11th March upon certain questions which had arisen in connection with the Treaty of the 16th July, 1894, between this country and Japan, to which the Government of Queensland adhered subject to the provisions of the Protocol of the 16th March, 1897.

That with reference to paragraph 2 (b) of our Report, Mr. Cox was to suggest the following considerations in regard to the apparent conflict between the Immigration Restriction Act of the Parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia and the provisions of the Treaty.

That it seemed to you that sections 1 and 3 of the Treaty might be construed in the light of its immediate purpose. That it was a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation, and that its provisions referred primarily to commercial dealings between British and Japanese subjects. That its title, the use of such phrases as the words "for purpose of residence or commerce" in Article IV, and the whole purport of Article III, and the stipulations of Articles V to XVII inclusive, might be taken to indicate that it had no reference to anything but the promotion of Anglo-Japanese commerce, and might support the contention that its scope was restricted to the facilitating and promoting trade, commerce and navigation between England and Japan, and to the objects immediately subsidiary and incidental to that purpose. That Article I of the Protocol of the 16th March, 1897, might be treated not as an exception to the provisions of the Treaty but as explanatory. That the rights of entry and residence which the Treaty conferred might, if that view were tenable, be held to be conditioned by the intention with which they were granted, and, in that case, could not be construed as extending to immigration, which was essentially the entering of a foreign country for the purpose of settling there and becoming a permanent member of the community.

That, on the other hand, it was precisely that kind of entry and residence unconnected with trade and contemplating permanent settlement which was the subject of the Immigration Restriction Act. That, for instance, the provision in section 5 (2) that an immigrant might, at any time within one year of his entry, be asked to comply with certain requirements of the Act, implied that the ordinary immigrant would or might remain more than a year, and in fact permanently; and that the same inference might be drawn from section 3 (m) which dealt with the case of the wife and children of an immigrant. That such entry and residence when the person entering was accompanied by his wife and family and proposed to remain for an indefinite period, was of a totally different nature from the entry and residence which was contemplated in the Treaty of 1894. That the right to entry and residence under the Treaty might, it was submitted, be held not to be a right to "immigrate" in the proper sense, and not therefore infringed by the Commonwealth Act.

That that view was to some extent supported by the fact that the Japanese Government themselves had not regarded the institution of the European language test as an infraction of the Treaty. That the Colony of Natal adhered to the Treaty at the end of 1895; but that, nevertheless, in 1897, after Natal had accepted the contingent obligation thereby imposed on it, the Colonial Legislature passed an Immigration Restriction Act which set up a test similar in principle to that embodied in the Commonwealth Act. That so far from protesting against the Natal law as an infraction of the Treaty, the Japanese Government urged His Majesty's Government to press it on the attention of the Australian Colonies as a model for their legislation, and that the Commonwealth Act was passed in its present form largely owing to the representations which His Majesty's Government had accordingly made at various times to the Colonial Governments.

That in that connecion Mr. Bertram Cox was to invite our attention to the fact that though by Article I of the Treaty of Commerce with the United States of 1815 a right to enter, remain, and reside, in the United States was given to British subjects, the existence of that provision had not been regarded as inconsistent with the subsequent United States' statutes under which stringent restrictions were placed on immigration, e.g., the prohibition of any immigrant under contract of service with a resident in the United States.

That you would be glad to be favoured with our opinion on the question whether it might not be held, on the above or on other grounds that might occur to us, that there was not necessarily a conflict between the Anglo-Japanese Treaty of 1894 and the Immigration Restriction Act recently passed by the Parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia.

In obedience to your commands, we have the honour to

Report—

That upon consideration of the matters suggested in Mr. Bertram Cox's letter, we see no reason to modify the opinion expressed in our Report of the 11th March last.

With reference to the suggestions made in paragraph 3 of Mr. Cox's letter, we do not think that section 1 of the Treaty of the 16th July, 1894, can have the limited construction which is suggested. We would point out that there is nothing in the preamble nor in the said Article to limit the Treaty to mere purposes of commerce; and the fact that freedom of commerce is provided for by a separate stipulation in Article III, and that, by the Protocol, the Government of Queensland thought it necessary to reserve their right to legislate with reference to the immigration of labourers and artisans, seems to negative any such limited construction.

With reference to paragraph 6 of Mr. Cox's letter, we would point out that the Convention of Commerce of 1815 with the United States, both in its preamble and Article I, expressly relates to objects of commerce only.

The fact that the Japanese Government have approved of the form of Immigration Act adopted would seem to show, as we suggested in our Report, that the Immigration Act may be so administered as not to cause any sensible conflict with the Treaty, and may amount to a complete waiver of any objection to the immigration law, in which case no difficulty can possibly arise; but on this last point we have not the materials for expressing an opinion.

We have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

PACIFIC ISLANDS.

No. 31.

[February 20, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, February 18, 1902.

Counter-Case of His Majesty's Government: Operations in Samoa.

Gentlemen,

WITH reference to my letter of the 20th March last, in regard to the presentation of the British Case in the matter of the arbitration of certain claims arising out of the military operations in Samoa in 1899, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you herewith, and to request you to take into your consideration, the Counter-Case which has been drawn up by Mr. H. Erle Richards on behalf of His Majesty's Government for presentation to the Arbitrator, in reply to the German Memorandum, of which a copy is inclosed together with its Appendices.

I am likewise to transmit, for your information, an explanatory Memorandum which has been prepared by Mr. Richards, together with a copy of the British Case, and the volumes of Confidential printed correspondence already referred to you in March last.

1902

His Lordship would be glad to be favoured with your opinion as to whether the Counter-Case may properly be submitted to the Arbitrator in its present form, or whether any, and, if so, what amendments or modifications should be made therein.

As it is necessary that the Counter-Case should be in the hands of the Arbitrator on the 1st March next, Lord Lansdowne would be glad to be favoured with a reply at your earliest possible convenience.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

British Case. Confidential 7515.
British Counter-Case Confidential 7664.
Explanatory Memorandum.
German Memorandum and Appendices. Confidential 7621 and 7621.*
Navigators' Islands Print, Vols. IX, XXIII, and XXIV. Confidential 6251, 7233, 7234.

Report.

We approve of the draft Counter-Case prepared by Mr. H. Erle Richards.

We do not see how His Majesty's Government can now avoid using the Reports of His Majesty's Consul having regard to the course taken by the German Government in relying upon the Reports of Herr Rose.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 20, 1902.

RUSSIA.

No. 32.

[July 23, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, July 16, 1902.

Gentlemen,

Russian protest against application of penal clause to their sugar.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list which relate to a protest which has been received from the Russian Government in regard to the application to Russian sugars of the penal clauses contained in Article IV of the International Convention signed at Brussels on the 5th March last, which Convention is now awaiting ratification by the Contracting States.

In connection with this question, I have the honour to refer to a Confidential Memorandum by the Lord Chancellor, dated the 5th July, 1899, and also to a Report of the present Attorney- (at that time Solicitor-) General, of the 23rd June, 1899, written at the time when countervailing duties on sugar were first enacted in India.

It is proposed to reply to the Russian Ambassador in the terms of the accompanying draft, and I shall be obliged if you will state whether you concur in its terms, or whether you have any suggestions to offer for its amendment or amplification.

I shall at the same time be glad if you will favour me with any general observations which you may have to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) MARTIN GOSSELIN.

List of Papers.

M. de Staal		July 8, 1902.
Draft reply.
Sugar Convention	(Parliamentary No. 4098)	March 5, „
To M. Lessar		July 15, 1899.
Solicitor-General		June 23, „
Lord Chancellor		July 5, „

Report.

We concur in the terms of the accompanying draft initialled by us.

We have nothing to add.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 23, 1902.

Annex.

Draft of Letter from the Marquess of Lansdowne to M. de Staal.

Foreign Office, July 30, 1902.

Your Excellency,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's note of the 8th instant, in which you were good enough to inclose a note prepared by the Imperial Minister of Finance concerning the decisions arrived at by the recent Brussels Conference respecting sugar bounties.

The note explains the reasons why the Russian Government did not consider it necessary to be represented at that Conference, and whilst giving a detailed account of the system in force in Russia in regard to the sugar industry, proceeds to state that no bounties on the exportation of sugar are given in Russia, and that, even were such bounties given, the most-favoured-nation stipulation in existing Treaties would preclude the application to Russian sugar of the penal clause contained in Article IV of the International Convention concluded at Brussels on the 5th March last.

His Majesty's Government have given the most careful consideration to the representations thus made by your Excellency, and, in reply, I would beg leave in the first place to recall to your Excellency's attention the situation which existed in regard to the Russian sugar trade before the Brussels Conference was summoned.

In the year 1899, as your Excellency is aware, after the deliberations of the Sugar Conference of 1898, the Government of India imposed countervailing duties upon Russian sugar imported into India, and when representations were made by M. Lessar against that action of the Indian Government, my predecessor replied on the 15th July, 1899, to the effect that the Russian system did, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, create an artificial stimulus on the production of sugar which had practically the same effect as a bounty of a more direct character, and that the imposition of countervailing duties in such a case was not inconsistent with the provisions of the most-favoured-nation clause.

The grounds upon which Her Majesty's Government came to this conclusion are fully set forth in the note referred to, and no reply was received from the Russian Government contesting them.

The Indian countervailing duties continued thus in operation until the time when the invitations were given by the Belgian Government for the meeting of the recent Conference at Brussels.

His Majesty's Government greatly regret that the Russian Government did not see fit to be represented at that Conference, since, if the Russian Delegates had been present, the position and interests of Russia in connection with the sugar question might have been more authoritatively put forward.

In the circumstances, however, it became necessary, without the participation of Russia, once more to enter upon an elaborate examination of the various systems of sugar bounties, and the International Convention which has already been brought to the attention of your Government was eventually concluded.

1902

Amongst other things, it was recognised in that Convention that a bounty could be created by a surtax, i.e., by a disproportion betwixt the customs and the excise exceeding a certain figure, viz., 6 fr. for refined, and 5 fr. 50 c. for raw, sugar per 100 kilog. In Russia the existing customs duty on sugar is believed to be 97 fr. 60 c. per 100 kilog, whilst the excise duty is 28 fr. per 100 kilog., the surtax being thus 69 fr. 60 c. per 100 kilog.

Under the provisions of the Convention of the 5th March, 1902, Article VII, His Majesty's Government have agreed to the constitution of an International Commission, whose duty it will be, amongst other things, to determine the existence of bounties in non-signatory States and to assess their amount. His Majesty's Government still cherish the hope that, on reconsideration of the matter, the Russian Government may become a Party to the International Convention, full liberty having been given for non-signatory States to adhere to it. In the contrary case, should the Convention be ratified, and should the International Commission find that bounties result from the Russian system, His Majesty's Government would have no option but to apply the penal clause to Russian sugars, a course which, as previously stated, they would consider in no wise inconsistent with the stipulations of the Treaty of Commerce between Great Britain and Russia of the 12th January, 1859.

In regard to the suggestion contained in the penultimate paragraph of the Russian note inclosed by your Excellency, to the effect that the whole question should now be reopened by a fresh inquiry, not only into the conditions of the sugar industry, but also into those of all other industries affected by bounties or by the operation of syndicates tolerated or protected by the Government, I regret to say that His Majesty's Government could not, after all that has taken place, consent to participate in such an inquiry, which they do not consider would at present lead to any practical result.

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 33.

[November 18, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, October 18, 1902.

Gentlemen,

Penalizing of sugar: Draft reply to Russian protest.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, a copy of a Memorandum communicated to me by the Russian Chargé d'Affaires in reply to the note which his Lordship, after consultation with you, addressed to the Russian Ambassador in July last on the subject of the protest of his Government against the decisions arrived at by the recent Conference at Brussels on the sugar question, together with the papers bearing on the correspondence, as noted in the accompanying list.

I have the honour likewise to inclose a draft of the answer which Lord Lansdowne proposes to return to the Russian Memorandum.

His Lordship will be obliged if you will take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and will state whether you concur in the terms of the proposed reply, or whether you have any suggestions to offer for its amendment or modification.

He will at the same time be glad if you will favour him with any general observations which you may have to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

Memorandum communicated by Baron Graevenitz	..	September	24, 1902.
Solicitor-General	.. ..	June	23, 1899.
Lord Chancellor	.. ..	July	5, „
To M. Lessar	.. ..	July	15, „
Sugar Convention	.. .. (Parliamentary No. 4098)	March	5, 1902.
M. de Staal	.. ..	July	8, „
To Law Officers	.. ..	July	16, „
From ditto	.. ..	July	23, „
To M. de Staal	.. ..	July	30, „

Report.

We concur in the terms of the proposed reply to the Memorandum of the Russian Chargé d'Affaires as altered by us. We think the extract from Mr. (now Sir Alfred) Bateman's evidence before the Sugar Commission is hardly of sufficient clearness or importance to render its communication advisable.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
November 18, 1902.

Annex.

Draft of Letter from the Marquess of Lansdowne to Baron Graevenitz

Foreign Office, November 20, 1902.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to state that His Majesty's Government have given their careful consideration to the Memorandum which you were good enough to communicate to me on the 24th September last in reply to my note to M. de Staal of the 30th July last regarding the decisions of the Brussels Conference respecting sugar bounties.

In this Memorandum it is maintained that the levying of higher import duties on Russian sugar than on that from other countries constitutes an indisputable infringement of Article II of the Treaty of Commerce of 1859; and that the encouragement of exportation by means of bounties, even if it existed, could not justify the imposition of additional duties. It is also contended that His Majesty's Government give to the most-favoured-nation clause an interpretation obviously open to question, because it would follow from that interpretation that goods arriving from a country which grants to its produce lower railway rates or reduced freights, or where natural conditions are more favourable than those in other States, might be subjected to higher customs duties than those imposed on similar goods of different origin; and that goods which pay export duty would be entitled to an equivalent rebate on importation. The Memorandum proceeds to dispute the right of the Powers who signed the Brussels Convention to levy a duty on sugar from countries where the surtax exceeds 6 fr. per 100 kilog., and it also declares that Russia declines to be bound by a Convention to which she is not a party, or to be subjected to a penalty in respect of her sugar because she has not adhered to that arrangement. In conclusion, the Memorandum states that the Russian Government are ready, if His Majesty's Government wish, to submit the matter to arbitration, and are of opinion that the question of the interpretation of the most-favoured-nation clause should be discussed in relation not only to sugar but to other descriptions of goods.

In reply to the arguments advanced in the Memorandum, it is necessary, first, to point out that there is no intention of placing Russian sugar in the British market in a less favourable position than other sugars, for if the exportation of such sugars be stimulated by the legislative action of the countries whence they are derived, they also would receive treatment corresponding to that accorded to the Russian product, which could equally escape such treatment on the withdrawal of the encouragement it now enjoys. The matter is therefore in the hands rather of the Russian than of the British Government.

As regards the action which might be taken in response to such forms of encouragement as the reduction of railway rates, &c., it will be the duty of the International Commission, to be established under the Brussels Convention, to decide whether the internal measures adopted by any particular State are or are not in effect equivalent to bounties. There would, however, be no justification for claiming from importing States a rebate of duty, or a bonus if no duty existed, in the case of sugar subject to an export duty in its country of origin, for the remedy in this instance also would obviously lie in the hands of the exporting State. It is precisely the fact that it is within the power of the Legislature in Russia to abolish the conditions which form the basis of the Russian system, i.e., the high surtax and restriction of the amount of produce admitted to the home market, that deprives the Russian Government, notwithstanding the existence of a most-favoured-nation clause, of any ground of complaint against the action of any other Government in endeavouring to free its own home market from the intrusion of goods sold in that market at less than cost price.

As to the right of the Powers who were represented at the Brussels Conference to arrange among themselves what shall or shall not be held to constitute bounties, His Majesty's Government must once again remind the Russian Government that it is through no fault of His Majesty's Government that Russia did not participate in the deliberations which led to the signature of the Convention. His Majesty's Government have, notwithstanding the injury caused to British trade, for many years been seeking a solution of the question in which all other interested States might agree to join. The method devised by the Brussels Conference seems to them the most equitable which can be arrived at, and they believe that in its operation no injustice will be done either to Russian or to any other sugar. It should, however, be observed that the passage in the Memorandum which attributes to my note of the 30th July last the statement that, if Russia refused to adhere to the Convention His Majesty's Government would have no option but to apply the penal clause to Russian sugar, is inexact. It would only be in the case of the International Commission finding that bounties did result from the Russian system that the consequence indicated would follow.

His Majesty's Government note that the Russian Government, while mentioning arbitration, do not make any definite proposal in that direction, and the suggestion is put forward that the question should be considered in relation to all other kinds of goods. His Majesty's Government regret that they cannot agree that the case, even if restricted to the matter immediately at issue, is one proper to be submitted to the judgment of an Arbitral Tribunal. The course which they have at last taken after a long and patient delay has been dictated solely by a desire to secure equality of conditions for those engaged in the production and refining of sugar within the limits over which they have control. Other States do not hesitate to impose high and prohibitive tariffs for the protection of their trade in their own markets; and His Majesty's Government fail to see with what reason the Russian Government can complain of a measure not of favour but of simple and elementary justice to British trade.

They also feel that they are released from the obligation of engaging in any further controversy on the subject by the offer which was contained in my predecessor's note to M. Lessar of the 15th July, 1899, to denounce the Treaty of Commerce of 1859, an offer which they are willing to renew.

In the ante-penultimate paragraph of the Russian Memorandum a declaration is said to have been made on behalf of the Foreign Office to a Committee of the House of Commons in 1897, that it was impossible to introduce countervailing duties without infringing the Treaties of Commerce. If allusion is made to the proceedings of the West India Royal Commission in that year, ~~it may be observed that the evidence given by Mr. (now Sir) A. Bateman, an extract from which is inclosed, shows that it is improbable that any such opinion was at that time expressed by any official belonging to this Department.~~ an examination of these proceedings discloses no such declaration by any official belonging to this Department, and, in fact, affords evidence to the contrary.

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

SIAM.

[Colonial Office.]

No. 33A.

[April 9, 1902.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, April 9, 1902.

Sir,

Extradition between Federated Malay States and Siam.

WE were honoured with your commands signified to us in Mr. Lucas' letter of the 25th February last stating that he was directed to lay before us a letter, dated the 7th February, addressed to the Colonel Office by the Foreign Office, together with all the Inclosures therein referred to, and was to request the favour of our Report upon various questions in connection with the mutual surrender of fugitive criminals between the Federated Malay States and Siam.

That the printed copy of the "correspondence relative to the mutual surrender of fugitive criminals between the Federated States and Siam" sets out at length the various points which had arisen and had been discussed both between the Colonial Office and the Foreign Office, and departmentally in the Foreign Office.

That with regard to paragraph 4 of Mr. Villiers' letter dealing with the list of offences scheduled to the Pahang Enactment No. 12 of 1901, Mr. Lucas was to point out that the phraseology employed was that of the Penal Code of the Federated Malay States, section 435 of which, for example, provided for "Mischief by Fire," the offence of "Arson" being unknown to the Code, as also was "Larceny."

That Mr. Lucas was to request us to take these papers into our consideration and to Report—

1. Whether natives of the Federated Malay States should or should not be regarded as "British-protected persons" when within the dominions of His Majesty the King of Siam, and as such, subject to the jurisdiction of the British Consular Courts rather than to that of the Siamese Courts.

2. Whether we concurred in the terms of the draft Agreement as finally settled by the Foreign Office, and forwarded as a separate Inclosure with Mr. Villiers' letter, and if not, in what respects they should be amended.

3. Whether the Enactments (4 of 1900 of Perak, and 12 of 1901 of Pahang) might, subject to the substitution of the term "surrender" for "extradition," be approved, or whether they should be amended in any other, and if so, in what particulars.

We were also honoured with your further commands contained in Mr. Graham's letter of the 15th ultimo, transmitting to us in original a letter from the Foreign Office, and asking that we would take it into consideration with the correspondence inclosed in Mr. Lucas' letter of the 25th February.

In obedience to your commands, we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to—

Report—

1. That so far as we can gather from the information supplied to us, and especially from the telegram from Mr. Tower of the 31st January, 1902, and the documents referred to in his letter dated the 1st February, 1902, the natives of the Federated Malay States have not hitherto been regarded as British-protected persons when within the dominions of the King of Siam.

This result has no doubt arisen from the fact that no definite jurisdiction is exercised by His Majesty's Government in the Federated Malay States and from the peculiar relations of His Majesty's Government towards these States, which place them in a different position from other Protectorates.

We think that the policy hitherto observed of not regarding the natives of the Federated Malay States as British protected persons is right, and we see no reason why it should be altered.

2. We see no objection to the draft Agreement from a legal point of view, provided that the list of offences corresponds with the Penal Codes of the States.

Whether the Agreement should extend to natives of other States than Siam and the Malay States is a question of policy on which we have not the materials for expressing an opinion; if this is desirable, it might be rendered workable in practice if the Resident has a discretion as provided in the Enactments 4 of 1900 of Perak and 12 of 1901 of Pahang.

3. We think the crimes ought in each case to be set out in the Schedule, and the Enactments and the Agreement ought to correspond; at present, they differ in several respects. The request for surrender is, in the Enactments, to be made to the Resident, and not as in the Agreement to the Government, and the Resident has a discretion which is not given in the Agreement to the Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

No. 34.

[December 3, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, August 12, 1902.

Gentlemen,

Siam Order in Council: draft of.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list, with regard to a draft Order in Council which has been prepared by Mr. Albert Gray for the purpose of consolidating and amending the Siam Orders in Council of 1889 and subsequent years.

This change has been in contemplation for some time past, and has become of immediate necessity in consequence of the complete separation which has now been carried out of the Judicial and Consular establishments at Bangkok from each other.

I have the honour to request that you will take the draft Order into your consideration, and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether its terms are fit and proper for submission to the King in Council for His Majesty's approval, or whether they require any, and, if so, what, additions or amendments.

1902

His Lordship would be glad to be furnished, at the same time, with any general observations which you may be good enough to offer on the papers.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Mr. Gray		April 23, 1902.
(B.)	To Mr. Gray		July 1, 1901.
(C.)	Siam Order in Council, 1889 (Conf. 5860*).
(D.)	Ditto, 1898 (Conf. 6985*).
(E.)	Ditto, 1900 (Conf. 7436*).
(F.)	Ottoman Order in Council, 1899 (7171*).
(G.)	Mr. Tower	(Telegraphic)	March 31,
(H.)	Ditto	(Telegraphic)	April 1,

Report.

We approve of the draft Order in Council herewith initialled by us.*

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
December 3, 1902.

VENEZUELA.

No. 35.

[April 1, 1902.]

Foreign Office to Attorney-General.

As to "Bolivar" ["Ban Righ"] refitting in Trinidad.

MR. VILLIERS presents his compliments to the Attorney-General, and has the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to state that a telegram has been received at the Admiralty from the Commander-in-chief of the North American Station in the following terms:—

"'Indefatigable' reports 'Bolivar' machinery damaged; will be disabled probably two months."

Mr. Villiers is to inquire whether, in the Attorney-General's opinion, any instructions should be sent to the Commander-in-chief or to the Governor of Trinidad.

The general Report of the 19th instant on the case, and copies of the instructions already addressed to the Governors of the West Indian Colonies, are inclosed.

Foreign Office, March 31, 1902.

Memorandum by the Attorney-General respecting the "Bolivar."

(B.)

WITH reference to the inclosed telegram, I think that the Colombian Government should at once be communicated with, and that the "Bolivar" ought not to be allowed to refit until satisfactory assurances have been received that the "Bolivar" is a Colombian public vessel, and that she will not in the future be permitted to engage in any irregular hostilities against Venezuela such as are alleged to have occurred.

---

* The draft of the Order in Council initialled by the Law Officers was returned to this Office in Mr. A. Gray's letter of December 12, 1902.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Littlestone, April 1, 1902.

No. 36.

[April 3 to 5, 1902.]

Foreign Office to Attorney-General.

As to sending arms on "Bolivar" to Carthagena by British steamer. Towing of "Bolivar" to Colombian port.

MR. VILLIERS presents his compliments to the Attorney-General, and has the honour to send, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, a letter from the Colonial Office transmitting paraphrase of a telegram from Sir A. Moloney, Governor of Trinidad, on the subject of the "Bolivar," late "Ban Righ."

With regard to the question of the "Bolivar" refitting at Trinidad, Mr. Villiers incloses copy of a telegram which has been sent to Mr. Welby, His Majesty's Minister at Bogotá, in the terms suggested by the Attorney-General in his note of the 1st instant. This note has been communicated to the Colonial Office, with a request that the Governor of Trinidad should be directed by telegraph not to allow the vessel to refit pending further instructions.

The Attorney-General will observe in the telegram from Sir A. Moloney that the Consul for Colombia asks that he may receive permission to send by British passenger-vessel to Cartagena 5,000 rifles and 3,000,000 cartridges, these being the remainder of war material with the exception of cannon. The arms and ammunition referred to are no doubt either on board the "Bolivar," or have been landed from that vessel.

Mr. Villiers is to inquire whether, considering all the circumstances of the case, permission should be given for the conveyance of the arms, &c., on board a British vessel to a Colombian port,

A copy of the Attorney-General's Report of the 1st instant is inclosed for convenience of reference.

Mr. Villiers presumes that the Governor should be informed that the suggestion made in the last paragraph of his telegram, respecting the removal of the "Bolivar," cannot be entertained.

Foreign Office, April 3, 1902.

Memorandum by Attorney-General.

WITH reference to the inclosed copy of telegram and the questions put therein, I think that—

(1.) Permission should not in the meantime be granted to send the rifles and ammunition from the "Bolivar" by British vessel to Cartagena. The result of the communications with the Colombian Government should be awaited.

(2.) The suggestion in the last sentence of the telegram, that the "Bolivar" should be towed to a Colombian port by a British man-of-war should not be acceded to.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

April 4, 1902.

Colonial Office to Foreign Office.

Downing Street, April 2, 1902.

Sir,

WITH reference to my letter of the 1st instant and previous correspondence, I am directed by Mr. Secretary Chamberlain to transmit to you, to be laid before the Marquess of Lansdowne, a paraphrase of a telegram received from the Governor of Trinidad on the subject of the "Bolivar," or "Ban Righ."

2. It will be observed that the period necessary to repair the vessel is now stated to be at least one month, and Mr. Chamberlain would be glad to have the observations of Lord Lansdowne on the present position with respect to her at an early date in order to issue to the Governor the instructions for which he asks.

1902

I am, &c.
(Signed) C. P. LUCAS.

Inclosure.

Governor Sir A. Moloney to Mr. Chamberlain.

(Telegraphic.) P. April 2, 1902.

WITH reference to your telegram of the 26th March, His Majesty's ship "Indefatigable" reports that "Bolivar" is unfit for sea; if repairs undertaken at all, will take a month at least.

What is to be done, if she does not undertake repairs, or if she refuses to leave port? She will probably, on leaving territorial waters, be seized at once by four Venezuelan ships of war, which are now in harbour with steam up for that purpose continually.

Length of stay of "Bolivar" indefinite. Her continued presence is most undesirable and awkward, and the same may be said of the Venezuelan ships of war. As long as "Bolivar" is here, "Indefatigable" should be here, in order to guard against any act of violence.

Consul for Colombia asks that he may receive permission to send by British passenger-vessel to Cartagena 5,000 rifles and 3,000,000 cartridges, these being remainder of war material with exception of cannon.

Beg that I may have instructions "Bolivar" could, perhaps, be towed to nearest Colombian port by one of His Majesty's ships.

Señor Ponce to the Marquess of Lansdowne.

(Translation.)

My Lord, Colombian Legation, April 3, 1902.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Excellency that I have just received a telegram from M. Becerra, Colombian Consul at Port of Spain, in which he asks this Legation to support a request that he has made to his Excellency the Governor of Trinidad, that certain arms, &c., destined for the Colombian port of Cartagena, may be dispatched from the Colony with the least possible delay.

While respectfully soliciting from His Majesty's Government a favourable consideration of Consul Becerra's request, I have, &c.

(Signed) IGNACIO GUITERREZ PONCE.

Memorandum by Attorney-General.

THE inclosed does not alter my view as expressed in yesterday's Memorandum.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

April 5, 1902.

No. 37.

[April 15, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, April 12, 1902.

"Ban Righ" or "Bolivar": Action of Governor of Trinidad, and proposal of Colombian authorities.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a telegram and two despatches from the Governor of Trinidad relative to the recent proceedings of the steam-ship "Ban Righ" or "Bolivar."*

I am to request that you will take this letter and the inclosures into your consideration, and will favour Lord Lansdowne, at your earliest possible convenience, with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether the action of the Governor of Trinidad should be approved.

2. What instruction should be sent to the Governor in reply to his telegram of the 10th instant, stating that the Colombian Consul for the island has telegraphed for a Colombian man-of-war to tow the "Ban Righ" from Port of Spain, or to remove the arms from her, and asking whether there is any objection to either course, with or without assurance from the Colombian Government that neither vessel nor arms will be used against Venezuela.

His Lordship will be glad at the same time to be favoured with any observations of a general nature which you may have to offer on the papers.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

Report.

1. We think that the action of the Governor may be approved.

2 We see no objection to permitting a Colombian man-of-war to remove the "Bolivar" in tow, or to take on board the arms and ammunition which are now on the "Bolivar." The first of these courses would be much preferable, but we do not think that assurances of any kind need be insisted on with regard to either.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
April 15, 1902.

No. 38.

[May 14, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 2, 1902.

Removal of "Bolivar" or her arms by Colombian man-of-war

WITH reference to your letter of the 15th ultimo, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, a copy of a letter from the Admiralty relative to the proposal of the Colombian Government to send a man-of-war to remove the "Bolivar," late "Ban Righ," or her arms and ammunition, from Port of Spain.*

I am to request that you will take this letter into your consideration, and will favour Lord Lansdowne at your earliest convenience with your opinion as to the reply which should be made to the Admiralty on the following point, viz.:—

Whether on the Colombian man-of-war leaving Port of Spain, either with or without the "Bolivar," any steps should be taken to enforce the restrictions usually applied to neutrals towards belligerents, in which case the Colombian man-of-war would be given twenty-four hours' start before any Venezuelan man-of-war which may be at Port of Spain would be allowed to leave the port.

The Lords Commissioners raise this question in view of a possible application on the subject being made by the Colombian man-of-war to His Majesty's ship lying in Port of Spain.

Lord Lansdowne will be glad at the same time to be favoured with any observations of a general nature which you may have to offer in regard to the inquiry of the Admiralty.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

---

* Colonial Office, April 11. 1902, which is contained in the volume of Confidential print relating to the relations of His Majesty's Government with Venezuela, forwards reports from the Governor of Trinidad of steps taken owing to the presence of the "Bolivar" as well as of Venezuelan gun-boats in Port of Spain, where they threatened to come into collision.

* Admiralty, April 28, 1902.

1902

Report.

It would be very proper that twenty-four hours' start should be given by arrangement, and an endeavour should be made to bring this about.

We do not, however, think that His Majesty's Government would be justified in enforcing the observance of such a restriction by the Venezuelan men-of-war, as this might involve the use of force against the vessels of a friendly Power.

The case is not analogous to the case of vessels of belligerents, for they are, in effect, admitted only on the terms of submitting to the usual restriction.

His Majesty's Government would, of course, be justified in preventing any hostilities within the territorial waters of His Majesty.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
May 14, 1902.

No. 39.

[June 19, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, June 17, 1902.

Gentlemen,

"Libertador" ["Ban Righ"] refitting in British Colony.

WITH reference to previous correspondence respecting the proceedings of the steam-ship "Libertador," formerly "Ban Righ," I have the honour to inform you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, that on receipt of the letter of the 1st April from the Attorney-General (Paper B in accompanying list), His Majesty's Minister at Bogotá was instructed by telegram (Paper C) that unless and until certain assurances had been received from the Colombian Government, the vessel could not be allowed to refit in a British port.

These assurances were to be as follows:—

1. That the "Libertador" was a Colombian public vessel; and

2. That she would not in future be permitted to engage in any irregular hostilities against Venezuela, such as were alleged to have occurred.

I am to transmit to you copy of a telegram (Paper D) from Mr. Dickson, who was at the date of its dispatch in temporary charge of His Majesty's Legation at Bogotá, conveying the reply of the Colombian Government to the inquiry addressed to them on these points. You will perceive that the Minister for Foreign Affairs now states:—

1. That the Colombian Government regard the "Libertador" as their property.

2. That they will not authorize the vessel to be used for the purpose of committing hostile acts against Venezuela so long as no state of war exists between the two Republics; and that orders have been given that the vessel shall proceed to Colombian waters with the view of preventing invasion there.

On the strength of these assurances, his Excellency asks His Majesty's Government to allow the vessel to refit in Port of Spain and to leave Trinidad.

I am to request that you will take this letter and its inclosures into your consideration, and will favour Lord Lansdowne at your earliest convenience with your opinion as to whether the assurances given by the Colombian Government are sufficiently satisfactory to permit of the "Libertador" being allowed to refit in Port of Spain, and to proceed thence to Colombian waters so soon after the completion of her repairs as the Agents of the Republic of Colombia may decide.

His Lordship will be glad at the same time to be favoured with any observations of a general nature which you may have to offer on Mr. Dickson's telegram (Paper D).

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.) Telegram in Admiralty letter		March 29, 1902.
(B.) Attorney-General		April 1, "
(C.) Telegram to Mr. Welby	(No. 1)	April 2, "
(D.) Telegram from Mr. Dickson..		June 9, "

Report.

We think the assurances given may be accepted as satisfactory, and that the "Libertador" may be allowed to refit in Port of Spain and proceed thence to Colombian waters.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 19, 1902.

No. 40.

[July 16, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, July 12, 1902.

Gentlemen,

Navigation of Orinoco prohibited. Blockade of its mouths.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to a notification of the prohibition of navigation of the River Orinoco and of a blockade of its mouths, of Guiria, Cano-Colorado, and Coro. This was formally communicated by the Venezuelan Government to Mr. Haggard, His Majesty's Minister at Carácas, on the 29th ultimo.

On the receipt of Mr. Haggard's telegram No. 27 (Paper A), some doubt arose as to the exact extent of coast to which the blockade applied, and whether it was intended to include the mouths of the Rivers Barima and Amacuru, which, although draining a different basin from that of the Orinoco, fall into the sea within what may reasonably be considered to be the embouchure or estuary of that river. That such was the intention was assumed from the fact that Mr. Haggard had called the attention of the Venezuelan Government to the decision of the Arbitral Tribunal appointed to determine the boundary-line between British Guiana and Venezuela, which prescribes that in time of peace these two rivers shall be open to navigation by the merchant-vessels of all nations. It was, however, pointed out to Mr. Haggard (Paper B) that the penultimate paragraph of the Award of that Tribunal (Paper H), above referred to, is applicable only to times of peace.

From Mr. Haggard's telegram No. 29 (Paper E) it will be seen that the blockade is intended by the Venezuelan Government to cover the delta of the River Orinoco, and to include therein the mouths of the Rivers Barima and Amacuru.

It appears to Lord Lansdowne that the declaration of blockade, issued in proper form by General Castro as head of the de jure Government of the Republic, is primâ facie binding, and that the actual extent of coast-line intended to be included in the notification cannot be disputed, as the declaration or notification of blockade appears to be clear and explicit in its terms. The course adopted by Mr. Haggard in not following up his unofficial representation with regard to the free navigation of the Rivers Barima and Amacuru, as reported in paragraph 2 of his telegram No. 29 (Paper E), would therefore appear to have been correct.

With regard to paragraphs 3 and 4 of the same telegram, Mr. Haggard would seem already to possess the materials for answering the inquiry of the Government of British Guiana as to the free navigation of these same rivers, as he has been informed that the British Conventional rights in question do not enure in time of war but are expressly confined to time of peace.

It was pointed out in Lord Lansdowne's telegram to Mr. Haggard of the 2nd July (Paper B), that it is within the competence of the de jure Government of Venezuela to declare a blockade against insurgents, but that by so doing the latter were given the status of belligerents; and Mr. Haggard now inquires whether, in view of possible eventualities, he should make a communication to the Venezuelan Minister for Foreign Affairs in this sense. Lord Lansdowne is disposed to think that Mr. Haggard would do well to inform the Minister for Foreign Affairs officially that this is the view taken by His Majesty's Government.

1902

In this connection it must be remembered that according to the generally accepted principles of international law (embodied in Article 4 of the Declaration of Paris (Paper I))—to which Venezuela is not a party—but which was accepted as sound doctrine before that Declaration was made, in 1856, and is therefore observable by Venezuela quite independently of the Declaration—"A blockade to be binding must be effective."

It is not apparent at present how far the Government of Venezuela are in a position effectively to blockade the coast-line in question, and if they do not blockade it effectively it is to be presumed that His Majesty's Government should decline to recognize the blockade.

It should be borne in mind, however, that Venezuela, in virtue of having refrained from adhering to the Declaration of Paris, is entitled to issue commissions to privateers, and in these circumstances the question arises whether it is desirable that Mr. Haggard should be instructed to draw the attention of the Venezuelan Government to the generally accepted principle above referred to, viz., that "a blockade to be binding must be effective," and to let it be understood that if they are unable to effectively blockade the coast-line in question, His Majesty's Government will decline to recognize the blockade.

I am accordingly to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion on this point, and also with any further observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

P.S.—The accompanying letter from the Colonial Office (Paper F), and telegram from His Majesty's Minister at Carácas (Paper G), are transmitted for the consideration of the Law Officers of the Crown in connection with the letter above referred to.

F. H. V.

Foreign Office, July 14, 1902.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Mr. Haggard	(No. 27.	Telegraphic)	July 2, 1902.
(B.)	To ditto	(No. 18.	Telegraphic)	July 2, ,,
(C.)	Ditto	(No. 28.	Telegraphic)	July 3, ,,
(D.)	To ditto	(No. 20.	Telegraphic)	July 4, ,,
(E.)	Ditto	(No. 29.	Telegraphic)	July 7, ,,
(F)	Colonial Office	..	.. ..	July 11, ,,
(G.)	Mr. Haggard	(No. 31.	Telegraphic)	July 11, ,,
(H.)	Award of British Guiana Boundary Tribunal. ["Venezuela No. 7: 1899."] (Parliamentary No. 3960.)
(I.)	Declaration of Paris, April 16, 1856. (Treaty No. 403.)

Report.

The blockade proclaimed may be good if the insurgents are in possession of the territory and rivers to which the blockade applies, and if the blockade is an effective one.

It does not appear in our instructions whether or not the insurgents are in such possession. The Venezuelan Government cannot effect a legal "blockade" of territory or rivers in their own control merely because they give access to territory or waters in the hands of the insurgents.

The Venezuelan Government might exercise the right of preventing access to their own territory or waters if such access might assist the enemy, but this, of course, would not have the incidents of a "blockade," and is not what they have done.

The blockade of the mouth of a river does not affect neutral parts higher up the river (see Calvo, 5th edition, section 2860, and Hall, 4th edition, p. 738) to which there is a right of access by the river.

Any right to interfere with the navigation of the lower portions of the Rivers Barima and Amacuru must depend not on the blockade but on the terms of the Award which confines the right of navigation to times of peace. The construction of these words in the Award is a matter of some difficulty, but it seems clear that the mere proclamation of a blockade by the Venezuelan Government, involving, as it does, a recognition of belligerency, cannot be conclusive on His Majesty's Government that such a state of war exists as to put an end to the rights of His Majesty's Government under the Award.

We cannot advise His Majesty's Government to acquiesce finally in the apparent contention of the Venezuelan Government that the rights of navigation in the lower reaches of the Barima and Amacuru are suspended, but we have not before us the materials to enable us to advise definitely on a point of so much importance. The question must be whether a state of things in fact exists which suspends these rights.

We do not think it desirable, in view of the doubt which exists on the facts as to the validity of the blockade, that the attention of the Venezuelan Government should be called to the rule of international law that a blockade must be effective; if it is not adequately enforced it may be disregarded, and the Venezuelan Government may be afterwards notified to this effect.

As regards the question raised as to privateers, it is enough at present to say that the ordinary terms of letters of marque do not extend to empowering privateers to enforce blockades, but any decision on this point had better be postponed until it arises in a practical form.

We think the presence of a British man-of-war on the spot very desirable.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
E. CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 16, 1902.

No. 41.

[October 1, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, September 15, 1902.

As to recognition of Venezuelan blockade and of insurgents as belligerents.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, copies of the correspondence noted in the accompanying list relative to the Venezuelan blockade.

Papers on this subject have already been laid before you; and in your Report, dated the 16th July last, you stated that if the blockade was not adequately enforced, it might be disregarded, and that the Venezuelan Government might be afterwards notified to that effect.

In view of the understood rule of international law that a declaration of blockade against insurgents confers upon them, if they do not already possess it, the status of belligerents, instructions had been telegraphed to His Majesty's Minister at Carácas in that sense with reference to the navigation of the Rivers Barima and Amacuru.

Information was subsequently received through Carácas and Trinidad and also through the Admiralty that no effective blockade of the stretch of coast comprised in the Decree of the 28th June was being maintained.

Meantime, His Majesty's Government were in communication with the Governments of France, Germany, and the United States of America to find out if the Governments named would act in concert with that of this country in connection with the blockade, and in view of these negotiations and the above information, instructions were, on the 5th ultimo, telegraphed by the Colonial Office, at the instance of this Department, to the Governor of Trinidad, in answer to inquiries made by him, directing him not to treat the Venezuelans as belligerents (Paper A).

France and Germany subsequently agreed to act with His Majesty's Government, and on the 12th ultimo the Representatives of the three Powers addressed notes to the Venezuelan Government refusing to recognize the blockade, as it was not effective, and this decision was communicated to the Governments of the Colonies concerned on the 18th ultimo (Paper B).

1902

The question must now be settled whether the declaration of this blockade, which His Majesty's Government have declined to recognize, should be regarded as having conferred upon the insurgents the status of belligerents, and therefore imposing upon this country the position and duties of a neutral.

There appear to his Lordship to be two possible alternatives—(a) to take up the position that the status of belligerency flows as a legal consequence from the declaration of a blockade, irrespective of whether the force available for its maintenance is adequate for the purpose, and that consequently His Majesty's Government may now treat both the Venezuelans and the insurgents as belligerents, although the blockade is not recognized; or (b), to say that, as Venezuela attempted to declare a blockade, for which her naval resources were totally inadequate, His Majesty's Government are entitled to treat the declaration as a nullity and productive of no results.

Throughout the period that has elapsed since the blockade was declared the Venezuelan gun-boats have been making free use of the harbour of Port of Spain, where their presence has been a considerable annoyance to the authorities of the Colony.

This renders it possible that, should the insurgents be ultimately victorious in the present revolution, they might endeavour to set up a claim against His Majesty's Government on the ground that the present Venezuelan Government had been allowed free use of British ports after they had, in effect, recognized their opponents as belligerents.

The Colonial Office consider (Paper C) it would be preferable that the insurgents should be recognized as belligerents, as this course is more in accordance with precedent, more likely to avoid the danger of the insurgents, if successful preferring the claim suggested above, and likely somewhat to reduce the inconvenience the present state of affairs is causing to the neighbouring British Colonies, as, if both parties to the struggle are to be regarded as belligerents, the Venezuelan gun-boats would have to be limited to such use of these harbours as is accorded by neutrals to belligerents.

On the other hand, there appear to Lord Lansdowne to be very strong reasons against adopting this course, and in favour of regarding this declaration of blockade as entailing no results whatever.

It is now ten weeks since the Venezuelan Decree was published; if the insurgents were to have been treated as belligerents, steps should have been taken for that purpose at once by the immediate issue of a proclamation of neutrality; no adequate reason could be given for so long a delay, and a sudden reversal of our position and a limitation to the Venezuelan gun-boats of the use of Port of Spain to that ordinarily accorded to a belligerent might be construed as a leaning on the part of His Majesty's Government towards the insurgent party.

Even if it is possible in law to decline to recognize a blockade and yet treat it as good for conferring belligerency, the position is one that will not be readily understood, and will require explanation and justification, whereas if it is ignored for all purposes, there will be no appearance of inconsistency, and our attitude will be clear.

If the suggested claim is some day put forward by the present insurgents his Lordship feels that His Majesty's Government must rely upon their knowledge at the time of the declaration that the naval forces of Venezuela were totally insufficient to maintain such a blockade as sufficient ground for ignoring it.

Under the rules of international law, as at present understood, the use that a belligerent is allowed to make of a neutral harbour would still enable the Venezuelan vessels to hinder British commerce to a considerable extent, and his Lordship is disposed to doubt whether as belligerents they would prove less of an annoyance to the Colonial authorities than they have done up to the present.

Some weeks ago, after outrages committed upon the British vessel "In Time," the Venezuelan Government were warned that unless they could disprove the allegations in connection with that incident His Majesty's Government might be compelled to close the ports of Trinidad to their vessels, and, if the trouble they cause at Port of Spain increases, they can be excluded upon this or some similar ground; but if once this country is placed in the position of neutrals it will be more difficult to adopt strong measures against Venezuela without appearing to intervene in the struggle. These views were embodied in a letter to the Colonial Office dated the 9th September (Paper D).

So far as information has reached this Office, neither France, Germany, nor the United States of America (nor Holland, who has also declined to recognize the blockade) have recognized the insurgents as belligerents, and therefore it would appear that if they adopted this course His Majesty's Government would stand alone.

I am to request that you will take into your early consideration the accompanying papers, and favour his Lordship with your views as to whether there is any objection to regarding the declaration of blockade as inoperative, and as not conferring upon the insurgents the status of belligerents.

Lord Lansdowne will be glad, at the same time, to be favoured with any general observations upon the matters involved which you may be good enough to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.) In Colonial Office	August 6, 1902.
(B.) Ditto	August 22, „
(C.) Colonial Office	August 24, „
(D.) To ditto	September 9, „

Report.

The question whether a state of belligerency should be recognized appears to us to be purely one of policy. The fact that His Majesty's Government has declined to recognize the blockade as effective does not take away the right of the insurgents to argue that they have the status of belligerents as between them and the Government of Venezuela, by reason of the latter having issued a proclamation of blockade. But the implied recognition by the Venezuelan Government of a state of belligerency is not conclusive as regards His Majesty's Government.

There is great force in the contention that if His Majesty's Government now gives this effect to the proclamation, no adequate reason can be given for not having taken this line as soon as the proclamation was issued.

The fact, moreover, that other Powers have not recognized the insurgents as belligerents cannot be altogether disregarded.

If His Majesty's Government should determine to recognize the insurgents as belligerents, the fact that the Venezuelan Government formally declared and notified the blockade would no doubt afford a conclusive answer to any remonstrances by them against such recognition.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
October 1, 1902.

1902

ZANZIBAR.

No. 42.

[February 7, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Termination of Zanzibar–Germany Treaty: draft instructions to Berlin.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, February 1, 1902.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you, for your consideration, and for such observations as you may be good enough to offer, a draft of instructions to His Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin, which has been prepared on the opinion expressed in your Report of the 31st December last.

His Lordship will be much obliged if you will be good enough to make any emendations or alterations in the draft which you may think advisable.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

Report.

We approve the accompanying draft instructions as altered and initialled by us.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 7, 1902.

Annex.

Draft of Despatch from the Marquess of Lansdowne to Sir F. Lascelles.

(No. . Africa.)
Sir,

Foreign Office, January , 1902.

I HAVE had under my consideration your Excellency's despatch No. 114, Africa, of the 11th October last, respecting the termination and revision of the Treaty of Commerce between Germany and Zanzibar.

His Majesty's Government note with satisfaction that the German Government hope very shortly to be able to submit proposals in regard to the revision of this Treaty. They still, however, find themselves unable to admit the validity of the German contention that the Treaty of 1885 is to be considered as remaining in force until a new Treaty, for which negotiations are now in progress, shall have come into operation.

In support of this view the German Government adduce the fact that revision clauses very frequently occur in Treaties with non-Christian States, although such Treaties do not terminate in the event of the parties failing to agree upon any scheme of revision; and they draw special attention to the use which Great Britain has made of such clauses in the Treaties with Siam of 1855, with Morocco of 1856, with Madagascar of 1865, with Corea of 1883, and with Tunis of 1875.

The real question at issue is, however, that of the meaning ~~of the wording~~ of Article XXIV of the Treaty of 1885 between Germany and Zanzibar. It does not appear to His Majesty's Government that the meaning of ~~the~~ that Article is affected by the fact that Articles in other Treaties, dealing with a similar subject matter, which are worded differently ~~from that Article, and~~ have, as might be expected, ~~have~~ a different meaning.

~~On this point~~ His Majesty's Government must adhere to the view which they have already expressed as to the proper interpretation of Article XXIV. The Article seems to them to convey the meaning which, according to Sir J. Kirk, ~~the original German Plenipotentiary,~~ was intended by those who settled its terms, namely, that the Treaty should be terminable by either Party after the expiration of fifteen years, subject to one year's previous notice, failing such notice the Treaty to run on for a further period of ten years.

His Majesty's Government consider further that this conclusion follows from the view put forward in the last sentence of Baron von Richthofen's note of the 10th October last, namely, that the words "expiration of the present Treaty" are to be regarded as a mere paraphrase ("Umschreibung") of the words "expiration of fifteen years" occurring in the previous sentence. In the opinion of His Majesty's Government the termination of the Treaty at the end of fifteen years is thus provided for specifically, and the two expressions are merely different ways of saying the same thing.

Your Excellency should address a note in this sense to the German Government.

I am, &c.
R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 43.

[March 11, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Right to grant permits to search the houses of British subjects.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, February 10, 1902.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to request you to favour his Lordship with your opinion on the following point, which has recently been the subject of discussion between Mr. Cave, His Majesty's Acting Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar, and Mr. Piggott, the Judge of His Britannic Majesty's Court at that place.

It appears that a dispute having arisen between a husband and his wife, both subjects of the Sultan of Zanzibar, General Raikes, His Highness' Acting First Minister, with a view to the settlement of the question, ordered the parties to attend before him; the wife, however, instead of doing so, took refuge in the house of her brother, a certain Suliman Dossa, who is a British subject. On being applied to by General Raikes, Mr. Cave gave that officer authority to enter and search Suliman Dossa's house, sending one of the Consular askaris to be present when the entrance was effected, and to report to him what occurred. In the course of preliminary correspondence between Mr. Cave and His Majesty's Judge, with which Lord Lansdowne does not consider it necessary to trouble you, Mr. Cave explained that his action in the matter had no connection with any judicial functions which he might exercise as a Consular officer, but was taken by him in his capacity as His Majesty's Representative in the absence on the mainland of Sir C. Eliot, His Majesty's Agent and Consul-General, in whom he considered the necessary powers were vested in virtue of Article 21 of the Treaty between Great Britain and Zanzibar of the 30th April, 1886 (see Document A).

In a letter addressed to His Majesty's Judge on the 4th December, 1901, Mr. Cave states his opinion as follows:—

"In considering the question at issue, I think that we should be careful to discriminate between cases in which a British subject is directly concerned and those in which his interests are affected indirectly and only so far as they conflict with the interests of the Sultan's Government as regulated by the Treaty between Great Britain and Zanzibar.

"In the event of my assistance being invoked by the Sultan's Government or by one of His Highness' subjects in a matter in which some advantage was sought as against a person enjoying His Majesty's protection, I should, if an amicable arrangement were found to be impossible, refer my applicant to the British Court.

"But a case in which only Sultan's subjects are involved, and in which a British subject, not directly concerned, is enabled by Treaty stipulations to interfere, whether wittingly or unwittingly, with the officials of His Highness' Administration in the proper execution of their duties, stands, in my opinion, on a very different footing. Article 21 of the Treaty between Great Britain and Zanzibar states that the house of a British subject 'shall not be entered or searched under any pretext by the officials of His Highness, without the consent of the occupier, unless with the cognizance and assistance of the British Consul or his substitute.' The British Consular Court was in existence at the time when the Treaty was framed, and I believe that these words were inserted with the express intention of enabling His Majesty's Consular Representative to assist the Sultan's authorities, where he properly could, in the administration of justice among His Highness' subjects. In the case of other Powers, moreover, having

1902

Treaty relations with Zanzibar, authority to enter the domicile of one of their protégés has always been given by the Consul, acting in his Consular capacity, and not by an order emanating from the Court.

"In the particular instance which is now under review there was a dispute between two of the Sultan's subjects, and His Highness' Acting First Minister, being anxious to settle it, ordered the parties to attend before him; instead of doing so, one of them took refuge in the house of a British subject, and General Raikes thereupon applied for my assistance. Having found the facts to be as above stated, and having satisfied myself that the matter was one which came within the competency of the Sultan's authorities to decide, and in which the British Court had no jurisdiction, I gave General Raikes authority to enter the house, and sent one of the Consular askaris to be present when the entrance was effected, and to subsequently report to me what had occurred.

"I am of opinion that my action in thus assisting the Sultan's First Minister to enforce an order given by him in respect of one of His Highness' subjects was absolutely correct, and, in similar circumstances, I should have no hesitation in adopting a similar course of procedure. I will, however, if you request me to do so, submit the point for the decision of the Secretary of State."

Mr. Piggott, however, contends that not only are the powers claimed by Mr. Cave not vested in His Majesty's Representative, but that his action would be unlawful even for His Majesty's Judges clothed with full judicial powers, and would be ultra vires of the provisions of "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1897" (see Document B). In replying to Mr. Cave's above-mentioned arguments, His Majesty's Judge wrote as follows:—

"I am fully aware of Article XXI of the Treaty to which you allude, and this in itself shows the sacredness of the privacy of a man's house and the intention of the Legislature to preserve it.

"I would point out that the Treaty simply stipulates for certain rights as between the Contracting Parties, namely, the respective Governments who are parties to it, with regard to their own subjects; the powers to enforce those rights so reserved, and the officials who are authorized to enforce them, being defined from time to time by Orders in Council.

"As you are doubtless aware, before the present Order in Council such powers were vested in His Majesty's Consuls; by the Order in Council of 1897 a great alteration was made, the judicial power of His Majesty's Consuls was limited strictly to the extent of their being Justices of the Peace, and such other special powers as the Order in Council provides, the higher judicial powers under the Treaty being vested in His Majesty's Judges.

"If you were to carry your argument to a logical conclusion with regard to your powers under Article XVIII, you would contend that you had power to deal with all bankruptcy matters, and under Articles XV and XVI you would practically have power to deal with all judicial matters, both civil and criminal, for which the very existence of the Court is specially invoked. If one Article of the Treaty applies, as you suggest, why not all?

"That there was a dispute between two of His Highness the Sultan's subjects seems to me to have little bearing on searching a British subject's house without adopting the proper procedure.

"If the search was one that could be legally carried out against a British subject, then the Court has full power to grant the necessary process. If it has not the power, then the act is illegal.

"I fail to see how therefore the Consular authorities could, in the present instance, perform a judicial act which His Majesty's Court has no power to do without laying itself open to the suggestion of having exceeded its judicial powers.

"What may or may not be the custom with regard to other nations in this respect does not affect the law applying to British subjects."

When the legality of Mr. Cave's action was first questioned by Mr. Piggott, Sir C. Eliot, on the matter being referred to him, expressed the following opinion:—

"I think Mr. Cave is perfectly right. The principle of extra-territoriality is that a Christian community in a Mahommedan country has a right to settle its own disputes by its own law, British, Portuguese, or whatever it may be. But when there is a question of the relations of the Christian community and the Mahommedan Government an extra-judicial element enters on the scene. It is assumed that the Mahommedan Government cannot be unreservedly trusted with the right of searching Christian houses. It is also admitted that there are occasions when the Mahommedan Government can properly exercise that right. It is for His Majesty's Representative on the spot to decide whether in a particular case the right should be exercised or not. His action is subject to no control but the instructions of the Secretary of State, and I should imagine that this control is not retrospective, and can only take the form of directions for his future guidance."

The legal adviser to the Secretary of State, on the matter being referred to him, has expressed the opinion that on the merits of the case the view taken by His Majesty's Judge is sound, and that Mr. Piggott's review of the position, as quoted in this letter, gives on the whole a fair judicial summary of the situation.

In consideration of the different views taken in this matter by His Majesty's Agent and Consul-General and by the Acting Consul-General on the one side and by the two Judges of His Britannic Majesty's Court on the other side, I have the honour to state that Lord Lansdowne would be glad if you would favour him with your opinion on the special point which has arisen, and with any general observations on the question which may occur to you.

I have, &c
(Signed) CLEMENT Ll. HILL.

List of Papers.

(A.) Treaty between Great Britain and Zanzibar. April 30, 1886. (Treaty No 782.)
(B.) "Zanzibar Order in Council, 1897." (Confidential No. 6934*.)

Report.

In our opinion, the duty imposed upon the British Consul or his substitute under Article XXI of the Treaty of the 20th April, 1886, still rests with the British Consul, notwithstanding "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1897." The matter is not a judicial one over which the Courts established by that Order have any jurisdiction, and the provision of the Treaty is solely for the purpose of preventing any abuse of the powers of the Sultan when carrying out matters of administration under his authority.

In the conflict which has arisen between the Consul and the Judge, we are of opinion that the Consul is in the right.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
March 11, 1902.

No. 44.

[April 11, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, January 11, 1902.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted on the accompanying list, dealing with the question of the granting of leases of land to foreigners within the limits of the mainland dominions of His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar, which form an integral part of the East Africa Protectorate.

Leases and Concessions of land to foreigners in Zanzibar mainland dominions.

The point at issue is raised in a despatch from His Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General for the East Africa Protectorate (Paper A), who states that, in the case of leases recently granted to foreigners in the Sultan's mainland dominions, a clause has been inserted by which the foreign subject submits to British jurisdiction on behalf of himself, his servants and employés.

Sir C. Eliot inquires whether such a clause can legally be required in all sales or leases of land, and whether, in view of the Treaties entered into by foreign Powers with Zanzibar, His Majesty's Government have the right to insist on such a condition in the case of simple sales or leases of land.

1902

This involves the question of whether the subject of a foreign Power possessing extra-territorial rights in the Zanzibar dominions has the power of waiving his country's jurisdiction, even should he desire to do so, in such a way as to debar the State of which he is a subject from exercising extra-territorial jurisdiction over him.

A Memorandum (Paper B) which has been prepared in the Librarian's Department of this Office is inclosed, together with a printed copy (Paper C) of the Law Officers' Report of the 22nd February, 1899, dealing, inter alia, with the case of a German clerk, Reich, in the employment of the Uganda Railway, who was fined in the British Consular Court for possessing fire-arms without a licence.

It is suggested by Sir C. Eliot that, should the subject of a Foreign Power desiring a lease of land agree to waive his extra-territoriality and consent to the insertion of the clause mentioned by him, and should the claim to extra-territoriality be afterwards put forward on his behalf by his Government, then the concessionnaire could be made to relinquish the property leased to him, and the lease be altogether annulled.

Lord Lansdowne, however, doubts whether a foreign subject can so waive his country's extra-territorial jurisdiction, except indirectly by surrendering his nationality, nor does he think that any subject of a foreign Power can, by any purely personal submission or admission, give jurisdiction to a Court which would not otherwise have possessed it, to the extent of ousting thereby the jurisdiction of his own Sovereign without the consent of that Sovereign.

With regard to questions involving real property, his Lordship considers that the natural line to take would be that they are governed by the lex loci, and that such cases are altogether outside the jurisdiction of the extra-territorial Courts, and within that of the Tribunals administering the local law, whether the individuals interested should be Zanzibaris, French citizens, or German nationals ("Reichsangehörigen"), and that as regards concessions not involving real property, should the concessionnaires wish to sue the Government which granted the concession, they would naturally bring their case before the local Court, and not before the extra-territorial Court of their own nation.

I have the honour to request you to take these papers into your consideration, and to favour his Lordship with your opinion whether, in the circumstances, it would be proper or advisable to insert in leases granted to foreigners within the Sultan's dominions a clause by which the foreign subject submits to British jurisdiction on behalf of himself, his servants, and employés; and, if so, what would be the legal effect of such a clause in the event of resort being subsequently had, in derogation therefrom, to the Tribunals of the foreigner's own nation.

Lord Lansdowne would also be glad to be furnished with any observations of a general nature which you may desire to offer in connection with the points raised in the inclosed correspondence.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CLEMENT Ll. HILL.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Sir C. Eliot	No. 230	August 17, 1901
(B.)	Memorandum by Mr. Brant		October 8, „
(C.)	Law Officers		February 22, 1899.

Report.

We do not think it would be proper or advisable to insert the proposed clause either in leases or concessions granted to foreigners within the Sultan's dominions, and if such a clause were inserted, we do not think it could debar a foreigner from having recourse to the Tribunals of his own nation.

It appears to us that it would be contrary to the Treaties of foreign Powers with Zanzibar to annex such conditions. The subjects of such Powers are entitled to buy land, or take it on lease, and to impose a condition of this sort, to the effect that they should abdicate the right of trial by their own Tribunals, seems to us to be inconsistent with the Treaty right to acquire land. This applies just as much in the case of leases or concessions by Government as in the case of leases by individuals.

We ought to point out that there is a great difference between a general waiver of the Treaty right as to mode of trial and such a case as that of Reich, where the defendant had elected to submit to the jurisdiction of the Courts of the country.

Any such general agreement might clearly be revoked, and the Government of the person entering into it might properly insist that it should not be enforced, while their right to object to the jurisdiction in a particular case in which the subject had submitted to it, and had taken his chance of a favourable decision, stands on a very different footing.

We desire also to point out that the question of what is the proper Court to decide cases arising with regard to real property must depend upon the terms of the Treaty. The general rule is, of course, that the law of the country where the real property is situate is that which determines the rights of the parties; but the question of the Court by which that law is to be administered and applied in any particular case must depend on the stipulations into which the respective Powers have chosen to enter. We do not find in the Zanzibar Treaties any exception in favour of the jurisdiction of the Tribunals of the country in cases affecting real property. Two cases in which such an exception has been made on the interpretation of the Treaties with Turkey and Morocco are referred to in the note to p. 147 of Hall's "Foreign Powers and Jurisdiction of the British Crown." We quite concur with the view expressed in Mr. Davidson's Minute that such exceptions may be very reasonable inasmuch as the law to be administered being that of the country, it may be said to be proper that the Courts of the country should enforce it; but, having regard to the terms of the Treaties, this principle seems hardly to admit of application in Zanzibar.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
April 11, 1902.

No. 45.

[June 4, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, May 28, 1902.

Revision and termination of German-Zanzibar Treaty.

ON the receipt of your Report of the 31st December last respecting the termination and revision of the Treaty of Commerce between Germany and Zanzibar, the Marquess of Lansdowne instructed His Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin to address a note to the German Government in the sense therein suggested (see to Sir F. Lascelles, No. 24, Paper A).

The German Government have now replied to the various arguments advanced by Sir F. Lascelles in compliance with these instructions, and, by direction of Lord Lansdowne, I have the honour to inclose a copy of the note which has been received from them (Sir F. Lascelles, No. 52, Paper B).

In this communication they contend that there is this objection to the view of the British Government, that the Treaties referred to in the German note of the 10th October last cannot be cited as examples, owing to the fact that they differ in text and intention from the German Treaty with Zanzibar, namely, that the word "revision," the meaning of which is the question at issue, is found in all these Treaties, except that with Madagascar, and has in each case the same signification. The German Government point out that the British Government appear to attach to this word the sense of the word "termination" ("Kündigung"); but "revision" and "Kündigung" have different meanings, the difference between these two expressions being shown by the fact that in the case of revision the original provisions of a Treaty remain in force until a new Convention has been approved by both parties; and they point to the terms of the Treaty between Great Britain and Muscat of the 19th March, 1891, as confirming this view. In that Treaty the consequences which would ensue in the case of revision are expressly provided against by the Additional Protocol of the 20th February, 1892, so that a demand for revision and termination are in this case practically synonymous. As no provision of the kind was inserted in the German Treaty with Zanzibar, it follows that the word "revision" must be considered to have its ordinary meaning.

1902

As regards Sir J. Kirk's statement that the negotiators who settled the terms of the Treaty held the same opinion as that advanced by His Majesty's Government, it is stated that the German Government do not understand on what grounds he bases his view. The negotiators neither inserted the word "termination" nor made it clear in the Treaty that the word "revision" was not employed in its ordinary sense, as was done in the case of the British Treaty with Muscat.

It is further contended that, even if Sir J. Kirk's opinion could be considered correct by the Imperial Government, importance cannot be attached to it in view of the general legal principle that, in interpreting a Treaty, the text which has received the assent of the two parties can alone be appealed to.

I have the honour to request you to take this letter and the accompanying papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to what reply should be returned to the note from the German Government.

Copies of my letter to you of the 12th December last, and of your reply of the 31st of that month, are annexed for convenience of reference, together with the papers which have already been before you in connection with this case.

A copy of the Treaty of the 19th March, 1891, between Great Britain and Muscat is also inclosed.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

(A.)	To Sir F. Lascelles	(No. 24. Africa)	February	11, 1902.
(B.)	Sir F. Lascelles	(No. 52. Africa)	May	2, „
	German Zanzibar Treaty, 1885.
	British Treaty with Muscat (Treaty 935)		March	19, 1891.
	To Law Officers (and papers then submitted) ..		December	12, 1901.
	Law Officers		December	31, „

Report.

There is nothing to add to our former opinions, to which we adhere. The error of the German Government lies in assuming that the meaning of the word "revision" is the sole matter at issue, whereas, to come to a proper conclusion as to the construction of Article XXIV of the Zanzibar Treaty, the whole Article must be considered, and especially the latter portion, which provides that, in the event of notice of revision not being given, as provided by the Article, the Treaty is to be "tacitly prolonged," which is only consistent with a termination of the Treaty in the event of such notice being given. If this consideration is kept in view, it will be seen that the Treaty is quite different from the Muscat Treaty, to which the German Government refers, and which contains no similar provision.

We think, however, that, subject to any questions of policy, the suggestion of the German Government is a reasonable and convenient one, that, by agreement, the old Treaty should remain in force pending the completion of the new one; but there should be a distinct reservation of the right of His Majesty's Government to treat the old Treaty as at an end in the event of the new one falling through.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 4, 1902.

No. 46.

[July 2, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Status of children born on Zanzibar mainland after 1890.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, June 20, 1902.

I HAVE the honour, by the direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you, together with the other papers noted on the accompanying list, a despatch from His Majesty's Commissioner in the East Africa Protectorate (Document A), stating that Mr. Cator, the Protectorate Judge, has raised doubts as to the sufficiency of a notification issued by Sir A. Hardinge, late His Majesty's Commissioner (Document B), on the 9th October, 1898, respecting the status of children born in the mainland dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar subsequent to the 1st January, 1890.

Mr. Cator contends that the notification cannot be held to be more than the "declaration of an intention," and has therefore urged the advisability of issuing a King's Regulation under Article 45 of "The East Africa Order in Council (1897)" (Document C), for the purpose of confirming the notification.

On the other hand Lord Lansdowne is advised that under the Treaty of the 14th December, 1895, between Great Britain and Zanzibar (Document E), by which the administration of the Sultan's mainland dominions was intrusted to officers appointed by His Majesty's Government, this notification issued by the Commissioner, with the consent of the home authorities, was sufficient to put the Agreement of the 13th September, 1889 (see Document B), between the Sultan and Sir Gerald Portal (acting as the Representative of His Majesty's Government), in force within the mainland dominions of the Sultan, in which case it would appear unnecessary, and therefore undesirable, to embody the Agreement in a new King's Regulation.

I have the honour to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether any further legislative measures are necessary to insure to all children born within the mainland dominions of the Sultan since the 1st January, 1890, the status of freeborn persons, together with any general observations on the subject which may occur to you.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CLEMENT Ll HILL.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Sir C. Eliot	(No. 180)	May	4, 1902.
(B.)	Notification as to freedom of children born since January 1, 1900 (issued by Sir A. Hardinge, October 9, 1898).
(C.)	East Africa Order in Council, 1897 (Conf. 6933*).
(D.)	Minute on Sir C. Eliot's despatch No. 180		May	4, „
(E.)	Treaty between Great Britain and Zanzibar	(Conf. 6827, p. 17)	December	14, 1895.

Report.

We do not think any further legislative measures are necessary to insure to children born within the mainland dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar since the 1st January, 1890, the status of freeborn persons. We think the Agreement of the 13th September, 1889, coupled with the notification No. 19 of 1898, was sufficient to effect that object; and we further think that the notification No. 19 of 1898, may be construed as a Regulation under Article 45 of "The East Africa Order in Council (1897)," if such a Regulation be necessary. It is not the declaration of an intention but a legislative declaration of the freedom of the persons in question.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 2, 1902.

1902

ZANZIBAR.

No 47.

[December 19, 1902.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, December 13, 1902.

Draft supplementary Zanzibar Order in Council.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers marked in the accompanying list, relating to a new Zanzibar Order in Council supplementary to the Zanzibar Order in Council of 1897.

This new Order, of the draft of which copies accompany this letter, is required in order to provide for the appointment of a Third Judge, which has been rendered necessary by the growth of the work at Zanzibar and by the establishment of the new Court of Appeal.

Advantage has also been taken of the opportunity so afforded to make certain amendments in the Order in Council, 1897, which experience has shown to be desirable.

Articles III and IV deal with the appointment and position of the Second Assistant Judge (Packet A).

Article V has been inserted in view of doubts that have arisen as to the powers of the Senior Consular Officer at Zanzibar when acting for and on behalf of the Consul-General, during his frequent absence in East Africa, unless he has, on each separate occasion, been specifically directed to act by the Secretary of State.

This Article is taken from Article IV (2) of the East Africa Order in Council, 1902.

Article VI deals with the doubt whether certain classes of Hindoos under Indian legislation applied to Zanzibar are not entitled to escape probate duty altogether.

His Majesty's Judge at Zanzibar has reported that there was no reason to permit this exemption, the only result of which was a loss of revenue.

The papers dealing with this point, which are sent herewith (Packet B), were submitted to Mr. Gray, who recommended that the question should be dealt with whenever the passing of an Amending Order in Council should provide opportunity for effecting this alteration.

Article VII has been inserted in view of the fact that local experience shows from time to time that the provisions of the Indian Acts applied to Zanzibar do not altogether meet the local requirements. The powers of the Secretary of State to modify those provisions is very limited, and the validity of King's Regulations which conflicted with the provisions of these Acts might be called in question. The point has arisen in connection with the issue of certain Pawnbrokers Regulations in Zanzibar, the papers on which are sent herewith (Packet C).

The other amendments are of minor importance.

I have the honour to request you to take these papers into your consideration, and to favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether the draft Zanzibar Order in Council, 1902, may properly be submitted for His Majesty's approval in the form in which it now stands, and generally with any remarks which you may wish to make on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CLEMENT Ll. HILL.

1902

List of Papers.

Draft Zanzibar Order in Council, 1902.

Packet A.	Sir C. Eliot	(No. 29 of 1902).
	Mr. Piggott		July 16, 1902.
	Treasury		August 2, „
	To Mr. Jackson	(No. 430).
Packet B.	Sir C. Eliot	(No. 233 of 1901).
	To Mr. Gray		October 16, 1901.
	Mr. Gray		October 29, ,,
Packet C.	Mr. Cave	(No. 88, Zanzibar, of October 31).

Report.

As altered in red ink* and initialled by us, we approve of the draft Order in Council, which may, we think, properly be submitted for His Majesty's approval. With reference to Clause 7, we are of opinion that the power given is too wide and indefinite, and we doubt whether, under Clause 47 of the Order in Council of 1897, it was ever contemplated that the Consul-General should have power to make Rules which would be inconsistent with Acts applied to Zanzibar, nor do we think that such a general power should be given.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
December 19, 1902.

Annex.

Draft " Zanzibar Order in Council, 1902.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means His Majesty the King has power and jurisdiction within the dominions of His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers on this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in His Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1902."

2. This Order shall be construed as one with "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1897," hereinafter called the "Principal Order."

3.—(1.) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Principal Order, a Second Assistant Judge may be appointed for the Court for Zanzibar.

(2.) The Second Assistant Judge shall be appointed in like manner and upon the same conditions as, and shall possess the like qualifications as are required for, the Assistant Judge.

(3.) The Second Assistant Judge shall have the same powers as the Assistant Judge.

(4.) In case of the illness or temporary absence of the Second Assistant Judge, or of his temporary appointment as Judge or Assistant Judge, the Consul-General may appoint either a person qualified to be appointed Second Assistant Judge or a person appointed to hold a subordinate Court under the Principal Order, or a commissioned Consular officer to act as Second Assistant Judge.

4. The Assistant Judge and the Second Assistant Judge shall respectively undertake such part of the duties prescribed in the Principal Order for the Assistant Judge and such other duties of a judicial, magisterial, or legal nature as the Judge, with the approval of the Secretary of State, shall direct.

5. In the event of the death, incapacity, removal, or absence from Zanzibar of the Consul-General for the time being, all and every the powers and authorities by the Principal Order granted to him shall, until His Majesty's further pleasure is signified through the Secretary of State, be vested in the senior Consular officer in His Majesty's service for the time being in Zanzibar.

6. The production of a grant of probate or of letters of administration shall, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary contained in any Indian Act or Law in force in Zanzibar or in the Principal Order, be necessary to establish the right to recover or receive any part of the estate or effects of any deceased person situate in Zanzibar.

7. ~~Where the provisions of any King's Regulations conflict with the provisions of any Indian Act or Law applied to Zanzibar by the Principal Order or by order of the Secretary of State, the King's Regulations shall prevail.~~

---

* Printed in erased type.

8. In Article 9 of the Principal Order the word "Judge" shall be substituted for the word "Consul-General."

9. The following provisions of the Principal Order are hereby repealed:—

Article 3 (iii). The words from "including" to "Consul-General."

Article 9. The word "Consul-General."

Article 11 (e) (iii). The words "relating to civil or criminal procedure or to procedure in bankruptcy."

Article 31 (2) and Article 32. The words "in Zanzibar."

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Lansdowne, K.G., one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

1903

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

Printed for the use of the Foreign Office. April 1904.

CONFIDENTIAL.

(8168.)

REPORTS

BY THE

LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN, &c.

1903.

1903

LIST OF REPORTS.

(Arranged according to Countries.)

Note.—The Reports not addressed to the Foreign Office are marked 4A, &c.

ABYSSINIA.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
1	Law Officers	Feb. 13, 1903	Jibuti–Harrar Railway. How far Supplementary Agreement of 1896 gives Emperor right to cancel the contract. Discusses in view of further information submitted. Effect of Convention with French Government	1

AFRICA.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
2	Law Officers	Jan. 28, 1903	Warrant altering areas of episcopal jurisdiction in Uganda, &c. Suggest alterations in. Not their business to advise in these matters	3
3	Law Officers	Feb. 18,	Somaliland draft Order in Council. Approving. It is intended to provide for shipping and registration work by non-Consular officials	4
4	Law Officers	Mar. 30,	German protest. East Africa Liquor Ordinance is binding on subjects of signatories of Brussels Act in Sultan's mainland dominions. Duties of the Powers	5
4A	Law Officers to Colonial Office	July 28,	Boer Republics, naturalized and other subjects of, became British subjects on annexation. Local Ordinance best mode of divesting former category of such new status. Imperial Act not practical	6

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
4B	Law Officers to India Office	Nov. 2, 1903	Austrian and Hungarian sugar. Obligations of Indian Government in respect of countervailing duties	7A

BELGIUM.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
5	Lord Chancellor	May 13, 1903	International Conference on Collisions and Salvage. Reasons why His Majesty's Government should not be represented on. Presumes Lord Chief Justice favours in capacity of Chairman of a Society

CHINA.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
6	Law Officers	July 29, 1903	Proclamation for removal of prohibition to import arms into China (which arose out of Boxer troubles). Approving draft of as altered	9
7	Law Officers	Aug. 4,	Chinese who pleaded guilty in the Mixed Court of Shanghae Settlement for writing seditious articles in the "Supao" should not be handed over to Chinese Government. Refusal should be based on arrangement previously made with Taotai	10

CONGO.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
8	Law Officers	June 27, 1903	Attempted arrest of M. Rabinek by Congo authorities on British steam-ship "Scotia" when in British Protectorate waters. Protest should be made	12

FRANCE.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
9	Law Officers	May 13, 1903	Marriage in Madagascar before clergyman of Church of England only. Should have been performed under Foreign Marriage Act, or according to lex loci, the island being now a French Colony	13
10	Law Officers	May 14,	Holt and Co.'s trading rights in French Congo. His Majesty's Government should urge that concessions to others involve a monopoly. Rights of firm outside Berlin Act. Rights of separate concessionnaires. Views of Law Officers on points submitted	14
11	Law Officers	June 5,	Property of English benedictines at Douai expelled from France. Concur in letter to Abbot President that it is subject to French Law	18
12	Law Officers	Sept. 14,	Anglo-French disputes. Concurs in terms of Agreement for settlement by Arbitration	19

GENERAL.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
13	Law Officers	Feb. 4, 1903	"Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892." Approving draft Order in Council for extension of to India and the Colonies	20
13A	Law Officers and Mr. Henry Sutton to Board of Trade	July 17,	Inter-Imperial coasting trade. Opinion on extent of powers of His Majesty to restrict under 16 & 17 Vic., c. 107	23
14	Law Officers	Sept. 11,	Report of Committee on Naval Prize Law. Have no observations to offer	23
14A	Law Officers to Home Office	Sept. 29,	Marriage of daughter of Prince Louis of Battenberg. Reason why no consent to is required under Royal Marriage Act	24
14B	.. ..	Law Officers to Admiralty, January 22, 1902 (inclosed in Admiralty letter of November 28).	Official suspended and then dismissed for fraud. Must refund deficiencies. Opinion as to date of cessation of salary. Case of H. H. Miller	24

JAPAN.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
15	Law Officers	Feb. 23, 1903	British lighters plying between Yokohama and Yeddo. Rights of depend on Treaty of 1894. It does not abrogate previous arrangements. How far claim may be affected by being held to involve coasting trade	27
16	Law Officers	Aug. 13,	Arbitration before Hague Tribunal respecting taxation in former foreign Settlements in Japan. Protocol excludes oral evidence. Have no time to express opinion on other points	31

1903

NETHERLANDS.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
17	Law Officers ..	Feb. 27, 1903	Foreign Consuls taking evidence in Great Britain. Bearing of Lord Coke's views as to legality of practice. No intention to discontinue it	37
18	Law Officers ..	July 29,	Mr. John Godden's claims re lands in Curaçoa and Aruba. Taxation, infringement of concessions, working of phosphates, &c. Cannot recommend any further protest, or resort to Arbitration	38

PERSIA.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
19	Law Officers ..	Dec. 3, 1903	Loan to Persian Government by Imperial Bank of Persia. Cannot alter Article of Concession limiting amount without calling shareholders, and so defeating object, which was to effect this without publicity	42

PORTUGAL.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
20	Law Officers ..	Feb. 10, 1903	Shore and Chapman claims for losses during Benguela revolt. Cannot press claim for compensation, as it is impossible to decide whether Portuguese Government was responsible. Might represent matter unofficially	43

SWITZERLAND.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
20A	Law Officers to Home Office	Dec. 19, 1903	Bloetsch, extradition of, to Switzerland. Colonial warrant sufficient to detain him, and authorize his recapture, should he try to escape whilst in British islands (when being conveyed across them to his destination)	45

TURKEY.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
21	Law Officers ..	Feb. 11, 1903	Greek seaman, Stavro Dassis, offending on British steamship "Ayr" whilst in Turkish waters. Attorney-General considers British Consular Court lacks jurisdiction, failing consent of Greek Consul, but might, given such consent, have been tried at Central Criminal Court. Solicitor-General thinks Consular Court had no jurisdiction, but that accused might have been sent to England for trial under Merchant Shipping Act. Considers protest of Greek Consul cannot be sustained	46
22	Law Officers ..	Apr. 28,	Issue of lex loci marriages in polygamous countries may be registered as British subjects. So may issue of second marriage, if divorce of first wife is valid	50
23	Law Officers ..	Oct. 8,	Damage by bomb on French steam-ship "Guadalquivir" when at Salonica. Claim for damages against Turkish Government for negligence cannot be sustained. It cannot be regarded as resulting out of misgovernment of Macedonia	51

UNITED STATES.

[See No. 31, under "Venezuela."]

VENEZUELA.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
24	Law Officers ..	Jan. 14, 1903	Proposed reference of claims of Powers on Venezuela to Hague Tribunal. Opinion as to mode of procedure ..	53
25	Law Officers ..	Jan. 21,	Claims of His Majesty's Government on Venezuela. Approving draft Protocol of Arbitration Agreement ("compromis")	55
26	Law Officers ..	Feb. 10,	Draft Protocol respecting claims on Venezuela. As to Article respecting assignment of 30 per cent. of Venezuelan customs. Rights of other Powers cannot be decided between Venezuela and the Blockading Powers. As to German objections	58
27	Law Officers ..	Mar. 9,	Agreement for Procedure of Claims Commission. Approving subject to query as to currency in which awards are to be made	63
28	Law Officers ..	Mar. 11,	Agreement to refer to Hague Tribunal the claims of all the Powers on Venezuela. Approving, with additions, form providing for accession of other than Blockading Powers	64
29	Law Officers ..	July 1,	British vessels proceeding to Ciudad Bolivar cannot be seized in absence of blockade against insurgents, but could be prohibited from proceeding thither through Venezuelan waters	67
30	Law Officers ..	July 24,	Law affecting national status of foreigners in Venezuela is inconsistent with Treaty rights. This specially refers to clauses giving only partial exemption of foreigners from military service, to refusal to recognize Consuls engaged in trade, and to Societies (i.e., Companies). Protest should also be made on general grounds	68
31	Law Officers ..	July 29,	Claim of American steam-ships "Carácas" and "Maracaibo" for alleged unfair discrimination and for not being allowed days of grace in connection with Venezuelan blockade cannot be admitted. His Majesty's naval officers not concerned with access to ports comprised in German blockade. "Carácas" was properly not allowed time to discharge at La Guayra portion of cargo shipped after declaration of blockade ..	71

ZANZIBAR.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
32	Law Officers ..	Feb. 9, 1903	Reich's case as to possession of fire-arms differs from a case of infraction of Brussels Act in regard to spirituous liquors, as to which foreigners must be tried in their Consular Courts. Cannot approve draft despatch stating that Sultan's Court has jurisdiction	75
33	Law Officers ..	June 27,	Zanzibar import duties may be levied up to 10 per cent. ad valorem. Powers cannot maintain now that Sultan was not entitled to sign Declaration appended to Brussels Act ..	77
34	Law Officers ..	Nov. 18,	Draft Zanzibar (Supplementary) Order in Council providing for Second Assistant Judge. Approving as altered ..	78

1903

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

(Names and Subjects.)

1903.

[The figures refer to the numbers of the pages.]

ABY—BIS.

A.

Abyssinia. See Railway.
Act. See Berlin Act, Brussels Act.
„ Merchant Shipping. Power under, to try foreign seamen, 46–50.
Agricultural Concession. Complaint that withholding of mineral rights damages, 38–42.
Annexation. See Boer Republics.
Arbitration. Agreement respecting Anglo-French differences, 19, 20.
„ Taxation in former foreign settlements in Japan, 31–37.
„ Claims of Powers on Venezuela. See Venezuela.
„ Proposed as to Holt and Co.'s trading rights in French Congo, 14–18.
„ Proposed on Land Concessions. See Godden, Mr.
Arms. Removal of prohibition to import into China, 9, 10.
Army of Venezuela. Foreigners may have to serve in, 68–71.
Arrest on vessel in British waters. Attempt of Congo authorities to effect, 12, 13.
Aruba. Complaint of Mr. Godden respecting treatment of his land in, 38–42.
Aruba Phosphate Company. Mr. Godden's complaints respecting Concession to, 38.
Austrian sugar in India. See Sugar.
"Ayr." Foreign seamen on. As to jurisdiction over, 46–50.

B.

Bank, Imperial Persian. Powers as to loans to Government, 42, 43.
Battenburg, Prince Louis of, 24.
Benedictines (English) in France. Confiscation of property, 18, 19.
Benguela revolt. Claims of Shore and Chapman for losses, 43–45.
„ Portuguese Government not liable, 44, 45.
Berlin Act. Monopoly of trade in French Congo in violation of, 15–18.
„ Did not create free commercial land, 17.
„ Neglect to enforce slave trade provisions, 44.
Bishop's area of authority in East Africa, &c., 3, 4.
„ warrants. As to addressing to Archbishop of Canterbury, 3, 4.

BIS—COL.

Bishop's warrants. No business of Law Officers to advise as to, 4.
Blockade of Venezuela. Claims. See Venezuela.
Blockading Powers. As to special claims of to indemnity from Venezuela. See Venezuela.
Bloesch (deported person), 45, 46.
Boer Republics. Naturalized burghers of late. Nationality of, 6, 7.
Boers. Became British subjects on annexation, 6, 7.
„ How to divest themselves of their new status, 7.
„ Local Ordinance preferable to Imperial Act, 7.
Bowen, Mr. Herbert W., 59, 61–66.
Brussels Act. Provisions as to importation of liquor into Africa, 5, 6, 75–77.
„ As to Tribunal that deals with matter, 75–77.
„ Bearing of on amount of duties leviable at Zanzibar. 77, 78.

C.

"Carácas," United States' ship. Alleged unfair treatment during blockade of Venezuela, 71–74.
Cargoes loaded after blockade begins. Treatment of, 71–74.
Chapman, Mr., 43, 44.
Chargois (process server), 13.
China. Removal of prohibition to import arms into, 9, 10.
Chinese in mixed settlements. Forum of trial of. As to handing over to Chinese authorities, 10–12.
Ciudad Bolivar. See Vessels, seizure of.
Civil Servant. See Official.
Claims of Mr. Godden in Curaçoa, &c. Phosphates, land, &c., 38–42.
„ of Shore and Chapman owing to Benguela revolt, 43–45.
„ Damages by bomb to "Guadalquivir," 51–53.
„ Turkey not liable. Does not arise out of misgovernment, 51–53.
„ Of Powers on Venezuela for losses, &c., during insurrection. See Venezuela.
„ Treatment of United States' vessels during Venezuelan blockade, 71–74.
Coasting trade. Inter-Imperial, 23.
„ „ As to lighter traffic in Japan constituting, 31.
Coke, Lord, 37.
Collisions. His Majesty's Government holds aloof from Conference on, 8.
Colonies. Extension of Foreign Marriages Order in Council to, 20–23.

COL—GUA.

Colony. Extradition from, through England. Formalities, 45, 46.
Commission to settle claims on Venezuela. Agreement, 63, 64.
Compagnie Coloniale Ogooué N'Gounié, 14.
Companies, foreign. New law in Venezuela, 68–71.
Company. See Aruba Phosphate.
Compensation. See Claims.
Concessions. See Bank, Imperial Persian.
„ In French Congo forests interfere with British trading rights, 14, 15.
„ See also Land, Godden, Mr.
Conference on collisions. His Majesty's Government holds aloof from, 8.
Congo authorities attempt arrest in British territorial waters, 12, 13.
„ (French). Infringement of Holt's trading rights, 14–18.
„ „ Decree as to vacant land in, 14.
Consular Court. Power to try foreign seaman on British vessel, as to, 46–50.
Consular attributes in Somaliland. Performance of duties on withdrawal of, 4, 5.
Consuls (foreign). Right to take evidence in Great Britain, 37, 38.
„ „ In Venezuela under new law, 68–71.
„ Refusal of exequatur if trading, 68–71.
Countervailing duties. See Sugar.
Court of Law. See Jurisdiction, Trial, Legal Proceedings.
Criminals (Chinese) in mixed Settlement at Shanghae, 10–12.
Curaçoa. Land Concessions to Mr. Godden in. Grievances in connection with, 38–42.

D.

Dassis, Stavro, 46–49.
Days of grace. See Venezuela, blockade of.
Diplomatic intervention. New law in Venezuela, 68–71.
Domicile. Foreigners must submit to laws of their, 18, 19.
Douai. His Majesty's Government cannot protect property of English Benedictines at, 18, 19.
Duties on imports into Zanzibar. Power to raise, 77, 78.
„ on Austrian sugar in India. See Sugar.

E.

Evidence. Right of foreign Consuls in England to take, 37, 38.
Exterritorial countries. Offences by seamen in. See "Ayr."
Extradition from Colony through England. Colonial warrant sufficient, 45, 46.
„ Surrender of Chinese criminals at Shanghae, 10–12.

F.

Forests in French Congo. Holt and Co.'s trading rights in. See Holt and Co.
France. Property of English Benedictines in, 18, 19.
French Congo. See Congo (French).
Funds. Official embezzling, 24–27.

G.

Gazengel, Mr., 14.
Godden, Mr. John, 38–42.
Government. See Official.
„ Claims against for damages owing to riots, &c. See Claims.
"Guadalquivir" damaged by bomb. Claim on Turkey not sustainable, 51–53.

HAG—MAY

H.

Hague Tribunal. See Arbitration.
„ „ See Venezuela.
Helm, Messrs., 28.
Holt and Co., Messrs., 14–18.
Hurst, Mr. C. J. B., 51, 73, 74.

I.

Import duties in Zanzibar. As to raising, 77, 78.
India. Extension of Foreign Marriages Regulations to, 20–23.
„ See Sugar.

J.

Japan. Does Treaty of 1894 cancel previous rights? 28–31.
„ Lighter traffic between Yokohama and Yeddo. Rights, 27–31.
„ See Settlements (Foreign).
Jibuti–Harrar. See Railway.
Judge at Zanzibar. Additional, 78, 79.
Jurisdiction (Liquor Ordinances, Africa) belongs to Consular Court of accused, 75–77.
„ in Turkey over Greek seaman of British vessel, once on shore, 46–50.
„ Greek Consul protests against British claim to, 46–50.
„ Says Greek Court cannot claim, 46–50.

L.

Land in French Congo. Concessions of. Complaint of Messrs. Holt, 14–18.
„ in nature of a monopoly, 14–18.
„ as to being against free trade provisions of Berlin Act, 14–18.
„ Concessions to Mr. Godden in Curaçoa, &c., 38–42.
„ Infringement by mineral rights being withheld, 38–42.
„ Privilege of acquiring withheld, 38–42.
Law. See Legal Proceedings, Diplomatic Intervention, Prize Law
„ National Status of foreigners in Venezuela, 71.
Legal proceedings respecting Mr. Godden's land in Netherlands Indies, 39.
Leroy-Beaulieu, Anatole, 19.
Lighter traffic between Yokohama and Yeddo. Effect of 1894 Treaty on previous rights, 28–31.
„ „ As to its constituting coasting trade, 31.
Liquor Ordinance (East Africa) is binding on foreigners, 5, 6.
„ „ (Zanzibar). Jurisdiction over foreigners infringing, 75–77.
Loans by Imperial Bank to Persian Government. Power to increase, 42, 43.

M.

Madagascar See Marriage.
"Maracaibo," United States' ship. Treatment during blockade of Venezuela, 71–74.
Maritime jurisdiction. Arrest in British Protectorate waters, 12, 13.
Marriage before Anglican clergyman in Madagascar not sufficient, 13, 14.
„ must be under Foreign Marriages Act or according to lex loci, 14.
„ of Prince Louis of Battenburg's daughter, 24.
Marriages (Foreign) Order in Council. Extension to India, &c., 20–23.
„ in polygamous countries. Registration of issue, 50, 51.
Mayers, Mr., 11.

1903

Military. See Army.
Miller, H. H., 24–27.
Mineral rights reserved in land Concession. Mr. Godden's case, 38–42.
Money (public). Fraudulent officials making away with, 24–27.
Monopoly. Character of Jibuti-Harrar Railway Concession, 1–3.
,, of property and of trade in French Congo, 15.

N.

National status of foreigners in Venezuela. New law, 68–71.
Nationality of Boers of foreign origin. How to get rid of their British status, 6, 7.
Naval Prize Law. Report of Committee, 23, 24.
Newspaper. Seditious articles in a Chinese. See Supao.

O.

Oaths taken before foreign Consuls in Great Britain. Legality of, 37, 38.
Official dismissed for fraud. Date of cessation of salary, 24–27.
,, ,, Must make good deficiencies, 27.
Orange River State. See Boer Republics.
Order in Council. Somaliland, 4, 5.
,, ,, Shipping and Registration work, 4, 5.
,, ,, Foreign Marriages. Extension to India, &c., 20–23.
,, ,, See Jurisdiction over seamen in Turkey.
,, ,, Second Assistant Judge at Zanzibar, 78, 79.
Ordinance. See Boers, Liquor.
Outrage. See Claims.

P.

Phosphates in Aruba. Mr. Godden's claim, 38–42.
Pious Fund case. Reference to, 53, 54.
Press article. Seditious. Trial at Shanghae, 10–12.
Prize Law. Report of Committee, 23, 24.
Proclamation. Importation of arms into China, 9, 10.
Property of English Benedictines in France. Confiscation, 18, 19.
Protectorates. Abolition of certain Consular officers. Provision for executing duties, 4, 5.
Protocol. See Treaty and Venezuela.
Public Servant. See Official.

R.

Rabinek, M. 12, 13.
Railway. Jibuti-Harrar. As to power to cancel Concession, 1–3.
,, Bearing of second Agreement modifying first, 1–3.
,, As to stipulation respecting telegraphs in Concession, 1–3.
Ranitz, M. H. de, 41.
Registration of issue of marriages in polygamous countries, 50, 51.
,, work in Somaliland by non-Consular officers, 4, 5.
Reich, Wilhelm, 75, 76.
Religious Orders in France. See Benedictines.
Ross, D., 47, 48.

Revolt in Benguela. Claims for losses during, 43–45.
Royal Marriage Act. Not applicable to Prince Louis of Battenburg, 24.

S.

Salary of official dismissed for fraud. Up to what date payable, 24–27.
Salvage, Conference on. His Majesty's Government holds aloof from, 8.
"Scotia." British ship in British waters. Violation by Congo officials, 12, 13.
Seamen committing offences in Turkey. See Jurisdiction.
Settlements. Trial of Chinese in foreign. Practice, 10–12.
Settlements (foreign) in Japan. Taxation in former, 31–37.
Sewell, Mr., 39.
Shanghae Mixed Court. Trial of Chinese. Practice as to, 10–12.
Shipping work in Somaliland by non-Consular officers, 4, 5.
Shore, Mr., 43, 44.
Slave Trade. Neglect of Portuguese Government to suppress, 44.
Somaliland Order in Council, 4, 5.
South African Republics. See Boer Republics.
Spirits. See Liquors.
State. Claims on for damages by riots, &c. See Benguela, "Guadalquivir."
Stiglitch (seaman), 47.
Sugar, Austrian. Duties in India, 7 A–7 D.
Supao (newspaper). Seditious articles in, 10–12.
,, Forum of trial of writers. As to handing over to Chinese authorities, 10–12.
,, Practice as to trial of Chinese in Mixed Court at Shanghae, 10–12.

T.

Taxation in former foreign settlements in Japan, 31–37.
,, of Mr. Godden's land in Curaçoa, 38.
Telegraph from Jibuti to Harrar Stipulation for construction, 1–3.
Trade (Coasting). Inter-Imperial, 23.
,, in Japan in lighters. See Japan.
Trading Companies. Restrictions in Venezuela, 68–71.
,, rights in French Congo. See Holt and Co.
,, and exclusive rights in property. Difference. See Holt and Co.
Transvaal. See Boer Republics.
Treaties (Agreements, Protocols, &c.) respecting claims of Powers on Venezuela. See Venezuela.
,, See Railways in Abyssinia.
Treaty of 1894 with Japan. Bearing of on previous rights, 28–31.
,, See Arbitration, Berlin Act, Brussels Act.
Treaty rights opposed to law respecting foreigners in Venezuela, 68–71.
,, Taxation in former foreign settlements in Japan, 31–37.
,, in Japan. Lighters between Yokohama and Yeddo, 27–31.
Trial of Chinese in foreign settlements. Practice, 10–12.
,, Case of the "Supao," 10–12.
,, of public official for fraud, 24–27.
,, arising out of Concessions in French Congo. See Congo (French).
,, See also Legal Proceedings, Jurisdiction.
Tribunal at Hague. Reference to of claims of Powers on Venezuela. See Venezuela.
,, See Legal Proceedings, Jurisdiction. Trial.
Turkey. Offences by seamen in. See "Ayr."

V.

Venezuela. Claims of Powers on. Refers to Hague Tribunal, 53–55, 64–67.
,, Proper mode of procedure before, 53–55.
,, Draft compromis for Arbitration, 55–58.
,, Assignment of 30 per cent. of certain customs receipts to meet claims, 58–63, 65–67.
,, Ditto. Point referred to Hague Tribunal, 65–67.
,, As to separate treatment of claims of blockading Powers, 58–63, 65–67.
,, Germany refuses to raise blockade until claims are settled, 60, 61.
,, Protocol for settlement of British claims by Mixed Commission, 61–63.
,, Protocol for procedure of Claims Commission, 63, 64.
,, Seizure of vessels by without blockade, 67, 68
,, Law as to status of foreigners, 68–71.
,, Diplomatic intervention denied to same, 68–71.
,, Position of foreign Companies and Consuls under, 68–71.
Venezuela blockade. United States' vessels complain of unfair discrimination, and as to days of grace, 71–74.
,, ,, Above concerned German, not British blockade, 71–74.
,, ,, Not allowed to discharge cargo loaded after notification of, 71–74.

Vessel in British waters. Violation of by Congo authorities, 12, 13.
,, damaged by bomb. Claim for damages. Not caused by Turkish misgovernment, 51–53.
,, British, in Turkish waters. See "Ayr."
Vessels. See Lighters.
,, British, going to Ciudad Bolivar. Seizure of in absence of blockade, 67, 68.
,, United States'. Claim as to treatment during Venezuelan blockade, 71–74.

W.

Walford, A. B., 34–36.
Warrant. See Bishop's warrant, Extradition.

Y.

Yeddo and Yokohama. British lighter traffic between, 27–31.
Yokohama and Yeddo. British lighter traffic between, 27–31.
"Yucatan." Proceedings of during blockade of Venezuela, 72–74.

Z.

Zanzibar. See Bishops in East Africa.
,, See Liquor Ordinance.
,, As to raising of import duties, 76, 77.
,, Second Assistant Judge at, 78, 79.

1903

Printed for the use of the Foreign Office. April 1904.

CONFIDENTIAL.

REPORTS BY THE LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN, &c.: 1903.

ABYSSINIA.

No. 1.

[February 13, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 5, 1902.

Jibuti-Harrar Railway Concession: Further information.

WITH reference to your letter of the 17th ultimo relative to the Jibuti–Harrar Railway, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, a Memorandum on the subject by His Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Abyssinia, dated the 25th July, 1898 (Paper AA), which was overlooked in preparing the letter addressed to you by this Department on the 12th September last.

The papers which accompanied the letter from this Office are also again forwarded to you, together with your letter of the 17th ultimo (Paper BB), and a Minute upon it (Paper CC). A list of the papers now sent is also inclosed.

It appears from Colonel Harrington's Memorandum of the 25th July, 1898, that the date of the Agreement by which the Emperor Menelik gave permission for the construction of the Railway—and a copy of which accompanies the Memorandum—was the 9th March, 1894, and not the 9th March, 1897, as stated in the letter from this Office (see Inclosure 2 in Paper AA).

The Memorandum also incloses a further Agreement (second portion of Inclosure 3 in Paper AA), dated the 5th November, 1896, modifying that of the 9th March, 1894.

By the later Agreement permission is given to construct the first section of the railway only as far as "the foot of the Mountain of Harrar," a point which is believed to be practically identical with El-bah, mentioned in Sir E. Monson's despatch No. 498 of the 22nd July, 1897 (Paper B), and "Addis Harrar," mentioned in the previous letter from this Office. The railway line to Harrar is to be proceeded with as soon as the profits of the constructing Company are shown to be sufficient to allow of the continuation of the work.

As a consideration, in return for this alteration of the Agreement of 1894, the telegraph line from Jibuti to Harrar, stipulated for in Article 6 of that Agreement, is to be constructed immediately.

The Agreement of 1894 is not otherwise modified by the second Agreement.

Six years have now elapsed since the date of the Agreement of 1896, but it is believed that a telegraph line has only been constructed as far as the railway is completed.

Lord Lansdowne has requested Colonel Harrington to verify this, and as soon as his reply is received you will be informed of its tenour.

It would appear that if, as is believed, the telegraph line has not been completed to Harrar, the terms of the Agreement of 1896, which stipulated for its immediate construction have not been observed by the Company, and that the Emperor would be justified in declaring that he is no longer bound by that Agreement, thus leaving the Agreement of 1894 unmodified.

1903

Article 4 of that Agreement provides that, unless the works on the Railway line from Jibuti to Harrar shall have been commenced within two years the Concession will be annulled.

It would appear that the Company interpreted this stipulation as meaning that work must be commenced throughout the section within two years, as otherwise it would not have been necessary for them to ask for the modification introduced by the Agreement of 1896, which authorized their not beginning to construct at first the portion of the line between the "foot of the Mountain of Harrar" and Harrar.

Work has certainly not been commenced throughout the section from Jibuti to Harrar, and the Company have decided to make the terminus at Addis Harrar.

In your letter of the 17th ultimo you stated your opinion that, if the concessionnaire should fail to make the railway line to Harrar, as provided by the Concession, that would be a good ground for putting an end to the monopoly granted by the Concession. I am to inquire whether, in view of the considerations put forward above, which are stated in greater detail in the Minute on your letter of the 17th ultimo (Paper CC), you are of opinion that the Emperor Menelik would be justified in cancelling now the monopoly granted by His Majesty.

I am also to request that Lord Lansdowne may be favoured with any further observations which you may have to make on the matters referred to in this letter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Map of Africa.
(B.)	Sir E. Monson	(No. 498.)	July	22, 1897.
(C.)	Ditto	(No. 500.)	July	23, „
(D.)	Captain Harrington	(No. 40.)	May	30, 1900.
(E.)	Ditto	(No. 48.)	June	25, „
(F.)	Treaty between Great Britain and Ethiopia (Library No. 1023)		May	14, 1897.
(G.)	Law Officers		August	31, 1900.
(H.)	Sir E. Monson	(No. 52.)	February	14, 1902
(I.)	To Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington.. ..	(No. 22.)	March	14, „
(J.)	Sir E. Monson	(No. 93.)	March	20, „
(K.)	Ditto	(No. 106.)	March	29, „
(L.)	Ditto	(No. 111.)	April	10, „
(M.)	Lord Cromer	(No. 57. Telegraphic)	May	19, „
(N.)	Sir E. Monson	(No. 173.)	May	25, „
(O.)	Mr. Baird	(No. 11.)	June	10, „
(P.)	Memorandum by Lieutenant-Colonel Harrington		August	30, „
(AA.)	Memorandum by Mr. Harrington..		July	25, 1898.
(BB.)	Law Officers		November	17, 1902.
(CC.)	Minute to ditto

Report.

The supplemental Convention of the 5th November, 1896, appears to us materially to modify the situation as regards the Emperor Menelik's power of cancelling the Convention of the 9th March, 1894. This Supplementary Convention makes it impossible for the Emperor to cancel the Convention of 1894 on the ground of non-completion of the Railway to Harrar until the somewhat vague condition on which that completion is to depend has been fulfilled. There is at present nothing to show that the receipts of the Company are sufficient to make it incumbent on them, in terms of the Supplementary Convention, to carry the line on to Harrar.

The last clause of the Supplementary Convention requires the Company to bind itself at once to construct a telegraph line from Jibuti to Harrar. If the Company should definitely refuse or neglect to execute these telegraphic works it might furnish ground for cancellation. But we observe that this engagement was entered into on the 5th November, 1896, and we do not think it would be right to cancel on this ground, unless the Emperor has in the meantime been urging upon the Company the fulfilment of their undertaking in regard to the telegraphic line, or the Company should now, after a fresh demand and the lapse of a reasonable time, make default.

We do not think that the fulfilment of the last clause of the Convention of the 5th November, 1896 was a condition of the relaxation of the terms of the original Convention as regards the construction of the railway so as, ipso facto, to remit the Company to the original Convention in case they failed immediately to construct the telegraph line to Harrar.

The question does not appear to us to be affected by Colonel Harrington's telegram of the 21st December, 1902. The submission of the Convention for signature by the French Government does not afford any ground for cancelling the Railway Convention. If the Emperor signs this Convention with the French Government it will operate as a complete waiver of any breaches in the past which might justify cancellation, and, as regards breaches in the future, will bind him to cancel only with the consent of the French Government.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 13, 1903.

AFRICA.

No. 2.

[January 28, 1903.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, December 22, 1902.

Warrant altering areas of Episcopal authority in Uganda, &c.

WITH reference to your report of the 18th ultimo, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you a letter from Mr. F. H. Lee, one of the joint Legal Secretaries to his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, on the subject of the rearrangement of the areas of episcopal authority exercised by the Bishops of Uganda, Mombasa, and Zanzibar respectively. I have also the honour to inclose the draft of a consolidated warrant which has been drawn up to meet the views expressed in your report above referred to.

With regard to the suggestion that the warrant should not be addressed to the Archbishop of Canterbury personally, it will be observed that it is stated in Mr. Lee's letter that this form is in accordance with precedent. Her late Majesty's warrant of the 23rd February, 1894, assigning the limits of Bishop Bickersteth's jurisdiction in Japan having been so addressed.

The draft of the warrant issued in the latter case is inclosed for convenience of reference, and I am to state that, as at present advised, Lord Lansdowne is inclined, in the present instance, to follow the precedent created on that occasion, should you, upon reconsideration of the matter, be of opinion that such a course may properly be adopted.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

1.	Mr. F. H. Lee	December 8, 1902.
2.	Draft of Consolidated Warrant.
3.	Draft of Warrant assigning limits of Bishop Bickersteth's jurisdiction	February 23, 1894.
4.	Previous papers in case returned for reference.

Report.

The only doubt that occurs to us upon the operative part of this warrant, which otherwise appears to us to be in order, assuming that the boundaries are correctly set out, is as to the omission to mention the warrant of the 12th June, 1895, as to Zanzibar.

We would suggest that the recitals should be made clearer, but we have not the materials for doing this, and it does not fall within our province to do so.

The warrant should not, in strictness, be addressed to the Archbishop, but there seems to be a reason of convenience for doing so in the present case.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
January 28, 1903.

No. 3.

[February 18, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, February 6, 1903.

Somaliland Draft Order in Council, 1903.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you a draft Order in Council for the Somaliland Protectorate. It has been considered advisable to withdraw the Consular attributes possessed by certain officers serving in the various Protectorates administered by this Department. In the case of the Somaliland Protectorate a new Order in Council is necessary to enable certain shipping and registration work to be performed by the public officers of the Protectorate without their being appointed to Consular posts. In the other Protectorates this has already been provided for by the Orders in Council of 1902.

I have the honour to request you to take this draft Order into your consideration, and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether it can properly be submitted for the approval of His Majesty in Council.

A copy of "The Somaliland Order in Council, 1899," is inclosed for convenience of reference.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CLEMENT Ll. HILL.

Report.

In our opinion the draft Order in Council initialled by us may properly be submitted for the approval of His Majesty in Council.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 18, 1903.

Annex.

Draft Order in Council 1903.

Whereas by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, His Majesty the King has power and jurisdiction within the Somaliland Protectorate:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers on this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in His Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as "The Somaliland Order in Council, 1903," and shall be construed as one with "The Somaliland Order in Council, 1899."

2. Where, under "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," or any amending Act, anything is authorized to be done by, to, or before a British Consular officer, such thing may be done in any place in the Protectorate at which there is no Consular officer by, to, or before such officer of the Protectorate as the Consul-General may appoint.

3. The Consul-General may make King's Regulations providing for the registration of births and deaths in the Protectorate.

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Lansdowne, K.G., one of His Majesty's Principel Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 4.

[March 30, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, March 12, 1903.

German protest against East Africa Liquor Ordinance.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers, noted in the accompanying list, respecting a protest which has been made by the Acting German Consul at Zanzibar against the Ordinance recently issued on the subject of the importation of liquors into the East Africa Protectorate which raises the question whether, before issuing the Ordinance referred to, His Majesty's Government should have obtained the previous sanction of the Treaty Powers.

This question was not amongst those submitted in the reference which was addressed to you on the 12th January last on a cognate subject, and, consequently, your Report of the 9th ultimo does not cover the point whether the territorial Government has power under the Brussels Act to make laws dealing with liquor which are binding on the subject of Treaty Powers; that Report deals only with the question of jurisdiction to try offences committed against such laws.

A portion of the East Africa Protectorate is within the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, and, consequently, subject to the Treaties administered by His Majesty's Government under the Agreement of the 14th December, 1895.

Under such provisions as Article XVI, section 1, of the British, and Article XVI, section 1, of the German Treaties with Zanzibar, no law made by the Sultan of Zanzibar directly, or by His Majesty's Government under his authority in his Highness' mainland dominions, applies to a subject of a Treaty Power without the consent of such Power.

The Brussels Act (Article XCI) prohibits within certain limits (which include Zanzibar) the manufacture and importation of distilled liquors except for "limited quantities destined for the consumption of the non-native population, and imported under the system and conditions determined by each Government."

It appears to Lord Lansdowne that the words "each Government" refer to the territorial Power, and as applied to Zanzibar mean, on the island, His Highness the Sultan, and, on the mainland, His Majesty's Government, and not each Treaty Power in respect of its own subjects, and that, therefore, the recently promulgated "East Africa Liquor Ordinance, 1902," so far as it is in conformity with the Brussels Act, is binding on German subjects within the Zanzibar mainland dominions, though, according to your Report of the 9th ultimo, they will be tried for breaches of the Ordinance in their own Consular Court. This, however, would seem to mean that the Sultan has jurisdiction over foreigners because he makes it part of the system and conditions (see Article XCI, last paragraph of the Brussels Act) under which alone liquor may be imported. But if this is the case the position would become somewhat anomalous, since the Sultan's legislative jurisdiction would cover only cases having reference to the minor provision of importation of liquor for non-natives; no corresponding provision occurs in the Act to give him jurisdiction to enforce the prohibition itself—which is undoubtedly the major provision.

It was pointed out in the reference to you of the 12th January last, that the Brussels Act did not give to the Sultan authority to override the rights of the Treaty Powers, either as regards legislation or judicial matters in the case of arms and ammunition. It is only necessary to refer with regard to this seeming anomaly to the explanation of it which was suggested in that reference.

In 1895-96-97 the foreign Governments were consulted with regard to the draft of a Zanzibar Ordinance regarding the importation and sale of liquor, and their concurrence was obtained before its promulgation; but the point whether an Ordinance enacted by the Sultan would not have been binding on the subjects of Treaty Powers does not appear to have been considered.

1903

I inclose correspondence on this subject, as noted in the accompanying list.

I am to request you to take the above observations into your consideration, and to favour me with your opinion—

1. Whether the East Africa Liquor Ordinance, so far as it is in conformity with the Brussels Act, is binding on the subjects of Treaty Powers within the mainland dominions of the Sultan;

And generally with any remarks which the papers may suggest to you.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

Brussels Act.	(Treaty Library No. 889.)	July 2, 1890.
German Treaty with Zanzibar	("State Papers," Vol. 76, pp. 247, et seq.)	Dec. 20, 1885.
British Treaty with Zanzibar ..	(Treaty Library No. 782.)	April 30, 1886.
East Africa Liquor Ordinance	(Confidential 7828)
Correspondence regarding "The Zanzibar Liquor Ordinances, 1895–96–97"
Law Officers' Report, February 9, and Papers submitted to them in Foreign Office letter of January 12, 1903. (See under "Zanzibar.")

Report.

We answer this question in the affirmative.

In our opinion, under the provisions of the Brussels Act it was the duty of each Government which was a party to the Act to take any steps necessary to carry out the prohibitions agreed upon in Articles XC to XCII within its own possessions or Protectorate, and each Government was to be responsible for "the system and conditions" under which relaxations of the general prohibition might be granted.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
March 30, 1903.

[Colonial Office.] No. 4A.

[July 28, 1903.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Colonial Office.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, July 28, 1903.

Position of Naturalized Burghers of the late South African Republics.

WE were honoured with your commands, signified to us by Mr. Bertram Cox in his letter of the 26th June last, stating that he was directed by you to transmit to us a despatch received from Lord Milner, dated the 11th April, 1902, with its inclosure, containing a Report by Sir Richard Solomon on the position of naturalized Burghers of the late South African Republics. That it would be observed that Sir Richard Solomon contended that as a German or Russian on being naturalized in the Transvaal as a Burgher did not, under German or Russian Law, become divested of his nationality, and was only a Burgher while in the Transvaal, he became, on the extinction of the Transvaal as a Republic, simply a German or Russian in the Transvaal as well as elsewhere, and could become a British subject only on naturalization.

That with reference to this opinion, he was to observe that it seemed to ignore the fact that in dealing with questions of nationality foreign law must be disregarded, and that the question of nationality was one which had to be determined by British law alone, and that under British law the inhabitants of a conquered country became British subjects on annexation. That, as we had advised in our Report of the 17th May, 1900,* Germans and Russians who were inhabitants of the Transvaal and who had been naturalized in that country before the outbreak of war became British subjects on annexation in the same manner as natural-born Burghers of the late Republic. That this question, however, became of considerable importance, inasmuch as, should Sir Richard Solomon's opinion be correct, it would become unnecessary to pass any law in the Transvaal to enable German subjects to retain their German nationality in that country, a step which had been contemplated in view of the representations of the German Government in the matter.

That he was to transmit to us correspondence which had passed between your Department and the Foreign Office and the Home Office upon this question, and that it would be observed that the opinion of the Secretary of State for the Home Department was to the effect that to deprive Germans and other foreigners who were naturalized Burghers of the late Republics of their status of British subjects acquired by annexation, it would be necessary to pass an Act of the Imperial Parliament.

That he was to request us to take these matters into our consideration, and to report—

(1) Whether we concurred in the opinion of Sir Richard Solomon above referred to;

(2) If not, what steps would be necessary to divest German subjects of their British nationality acquired by annexation;

(3) Whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, Ordinances passed in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony would be sufficient for the purpose, seeing that the question of the status of these persons may not arise elsewhere than in these Colonies.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

That (1) we do not agree with the opinion of Sir Richard Solomon, and we adhere to the view expressed by us in our Report to the Foreign Office of the 31st October, 1900,† that, "in our opinion, no distinction should be drawn between the case of a natural-born and a naturalized citizen."

(2 and 3.) We think that if it is desired to divest such persons of their British nationality, the best course would be to pass an Ordinance in the Transvaal. It is not clear that this Ordinance would affect the status of these persons in other parts of the British dominions, but it is apparently unlikely that the question will arise except in the Transvaal itself, and then such an Ordinance would be conclusive.

The same considerations will apply to the case of the Orange Free State.

We would suggest that the Ordinance, if it is decided to pass it, should require a definite election by those persons who desire to divest themselves of British nationality.

It is probably not practicable to obtain an Act of the Imperial Parliament on the subject, and we very much doubt whether it would be desirable to attempt legislation of this kind.

We have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

---

* No. 18A.

† No. 21

1903

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

[India Office.]

No. 4^B.

[November 2, 1903.]

Case for submission to the Law Officers in the matter of the Indian Countervailing Duties on Austrian and Hungarian Sugar.

UNDER powers conferred by "The Indian Tariff Amendment Act 14 of 1899," and "The Indian Tariff Amendment Act 8 of 1902" (Exhibit A (1) and (2)), which are enactments made by the Indian Legislature for the purpose of imposing countervailing duties on foreign sugar imported into India from countries where bounties on such produce are paid or bestowed, or arise out of an excessive "surtax" or protective duty, the Indian Government have for some time past levied the following countervailing duties on sugar, the produce of Austria-Hungary :—

—	—	Bounties bestowed.	Duties Levied in Addition to Import Duty of 5 per cent.
			Rs.	a.	p.
Additional duty under Act 14 of 1899	Sugar under 99·3 per cent., and of at least 90 per cent. polarization	3·20 krone per 100 kilog...	1	0	3	per cwt.
	Sugar of at least 99·3 per cent. polarization	4·60 krone per 100 kilog...	1	7	4	"
Special duty under Act 8 of 1902	.. .. ..	.. .. ..	3	3	9	"

The countervailing duties imposed on the sugars of other bounty-giving States under the aforesaid Acts are set out in Exhibit B.

It may be explained that the "additional" duties imposed under Act 14 of 1899 are the equivalent of the bounty on exportation which, up to the 31st August, 1903, was paid by the Austro-Hungarian Government on sugar exported from its territories, or placed for the purpose of export in export warehouses situated in those territories.

The "special" duty imposed under Act 8 of 1902 is computed according to the formula prescribed in that Act for countervailing sugar produced in a country where the surtax or protective duty exceeds 6 fr. per 100 kilog. in the case of refined sugar, or 5 fr. 50 c. per 100 kilog. in the case of other sugar. Up to the 31st August, 1903, the surtax in Austria-Hungary exceeded these limits.

In the International Conference, held at Brussels in 1901–1902, to devise measures for the suppression of the sugar bounties, the British Delegates made declarations to the effect that if a Convention for the suppression of bounties were concluded, the Indian Government was quite ready, as regards the Contracting States, to remove the countervailing duties at present in force. The first declaration on the subject was made by Mr. Phipps, the British Minister, on the 16th December, 1901, in the second sitting of the Conference, and in it the following words occur :—

> "Toutefois, les Délégués de la Grande-Bretagne sont en mesure d'affirmer que si une Convention pour la suppression des primes est conclue, le Gouvernement des Indes Orientales est tout prêt à supprimer, vis-à-vis des États contractants, les droits compensateurs actuellement en vigueur." (Procès-verbaux, p. 32.)

Following Mr. Phipps, Mr. Ozanne, the British Delegate specially representing India, made a similar statement of the Indian Government's intention.

On the 25th January, 1902, at the eleventh sitting, and on the 3rd March, 1902, at the twenty-third sitting, the British Delegates referred to and confirmed the declaration made at the second sitting. (Procès-verbaux, pp. 163 and 279, and Exhibit C.)

The Brussels Convention (Exhibit D) for the suppression of sugar bounties came into force from the 1st September, 1903. To this Convention the Governments of the United Kingdom and Austria-Hungary, among others, are parties. The Indian Government has not exercised the right of adhesion secured to it in the Final Protocol appended to the Convention. With effect from the 1st September, 1903, the Government of Austria-Hungary has ceased to grant a bounty on the exportation of sugar, and has reduced the protective duty or surtax to the limit specified in Article III of the Convention.

The Government of India has enacted a law, "The Indian Tariff Amendment Act 12 of 1903" (Exhibit E), for the purpose of continuing up to the 31st March, 1904, the additional and special duties imposed under Act 14 of 1899 and Act 8 of 1902. The considerations which have led to this legislation were stated as follows by Sir Edward Law, the Finance Minister of the Indian Government, in the Viceroy's Legislative Council :—

> "In view of the fact that the Act which at present regulates the question of countervailing duties upon sugar expires on the 31st August next, it has been held advisable to take fresh action in this matter in the way of legislation. Section 8 A of "The Indian Tariff Act, 1894," provides for the levy of an additional duty on articles on which a bounty is given directly or indirectly by a foreign State, and section 8 B provides for the levy of additional duties in certain cases in which high protective duties render possible the creation of bounties by private trade combinations or cartels. The majority of the chief sugar-producing countries of Europe have agreed to arrangements designed to secure the abolition of all bounties and high protective duties on sugar on the 1st September, 1903. Large stocks of sugar exist in those countries on which bounties have been paid, and which have been produced under the cartel system. The object of this Bill is to continue the present additional duties on sugar until the 31st March, 1904, when it is expected that the greater part of the stocks which have received bounties will have been consumed."

Accordingly, in virtue of this law, the "additional" and "special" duties set out in the first paragraph of this Memorandum will continue to be levied till the 31st March, 1904, on sugar produced in Austria-Hungary and imported into India. In like manner, the countervailing duties in force on the 31st August, 1903, against the sugars of other States, parties to the Brussels Convention, will continue to be levied until that date.

With reference to Sir Edward Law's statement quoted above, it may be mentioned that the stocks of sugar existing at the beginning of September in the several bounty-giving States, parties to the Convention, have been returned at upwards of 1,250,000 tons. The requirements of the Indian market for foreign sugar are met by an import from abroad of about 250,000 tons a-year.

The Government of Austria-Hungary has made representations respecting the action of the Indian Government to His Majesty's Government in an Ambassador's note dated the 12th September, 1903 (Exhibit F). The note calls attention to "the express assurance" given by the British Delegates at the second meeting of the Brussels Conference on the 16th December, 1901, to the effect that "the Government of India, should a Convention be concluded for the abolition of the bounties, were quite ready to remove the countervailing duties at present in force as regards the Treaty States." This declaration, it is urged in the note, placed an obligation on India to abolish its countervailing duties when the Convention came into force, if not from the date at which the Convention was concluded. The note refers in support of this contention to statements made in a note addressed by the Marquess of Salisbury, dated the 14th July, 1899, to Count Deym, and in a note addressed by the Marquess of Lansdowne, dated the 28th July, 1902, also to Count Deym (Exhibits G and H). These notes, it is urged, lay down the principle that the discontinuance of bounties by a Government, which has hitherto bestowed them, causes the counteracting measures to disappear. It is stated that all bounties, direct and indirect, on Austrian and Hungarian sugar ceased on the 31st August, 1903.

The contention of the Indian Government, in reference to these representations, is to the following effect :—

With regard to the declarations made in respect of India at the Brussels Conference, it is urged that these declarations did not bind the Indian Government to abolish countervailing duties from a specific date, but merely intimated the intention of the Government to abolish them, if and when the bounties which they counteracted should have ceased to operate. It is a question of fact whether bounties on Austrian and Hungarian sugar ceased to operate on the 1st September, 1903, and the Government of India holds that this question of fact is in no way prejudged or determined by the declarations of the British Delegates, or by the subsequent coming into force of a Convention to which the Indian Government is not a party. The view of the Government of India is that bounties cannot be said to have ceased to operate on and from the 1st September, 1903, in Austria-Hungary or in the other bounty-giving States, parties to the Convention. On that date there were in Austria-Hungary considerable stocks of sugar which had been produced under cartel conditions, a portion, at least, of which had been placed in export warehouses, and had received the export bounty. The sugar stocks existing on the 1st September, 1903, in Austria-Hungary were returned at 70,000 tons; while the fact that the export bounty was payable, under the Austro-Hungarian sugar laws in force up to the 31st August, 1903, as soon as the sugar was placed in a bonded warehouse, was admitted by the Austrian and Hungarian Delegates at the sittings of the Permanent Sugar Commission at Brussels this year (Procès-verbaux of Permanent Commission, pp. 20 and 21, and Exhibit I.)

1903

The Indian Government, therefore, contends that in view of the existence of this stock of bounty-fed sugar, which may be decribed as sugar of the 1902–1903 campaign, the bounties of Austria-Hungary have not ceased to operate. So long as this sugar can be imported into India, the India Government holds that it is not debarred by the declarations of the British Delegates at the Brussels Conference from maintaining its countervailing duties.

As regards the sugar of the 1903–1904 campaign, that is to say, sugar which is at present being manufactured from this year's beet crop, it is admitted that this sugar will not receive in Austria-Hungary the direct and indirect bounties which were abolished on and from the 1st September, 1903. But it is urged by the Government of India that in the ordinary course of business this sugar would not go to India until some months after the 1st September. as old stocks are still in the market. For this reason (regard also being had to the stocks of bounty-fed sugar similarly existing in other continental countries, parties to the Convention) the countervailing duties are fixed to cease on and from the 1st April, 1904. If in the interval the sugar of the 1903–1904 campaign is subject to countervailing duties in India, this is an unavoidable circumstance arising out of the difficulty of discriminating, by means of certificates, between sugar of 1903–1904 and sugar of preceding years.

Leaving now the question of the effect of the declarations at the Brussels Conference, and turning to the statements in the note of the Marquess of Salisbury of 1899, and in that of the Marquess of Lansdowne of 1902, on which the Government of Austria-Hungary relies, it is submitted on behalf of the Indian Government that if these statements are read with their context, they will be found to bear out the view of the Indian Government that the most-favoured-nation stipulations of the Treaty subsisting between Austria-Hungary and the United Kingdom, in which India is included, are not broken by the maintenance of the countervailing duties unless and until the bounties which they countervail have actually ceased to operate. So long as there are bounty-fed goods in existence which are capable of being exported, the balance of trade which bounties have disturbed cannot be said to be redressed.

It may also be observed, on behalf of the Indian Government, that in maintaining the countervailing duties till the 31st March, 1904, against countries which have discontinued the grant of bounties from the 1st September, 1903, the Indian Government has not discriminated against Austrian and Hungarian sugar, as it has treated all the bounty-giving countries alike.

Reference is invited to the opinions given by the Lord Chancellor and the Solicitor-General in 1899 on a question referred by the Foreign Office, as to the bearing of the most-favoured-nation stipulations on the subject of bounties and duties to counteract them (Exhibit J).

The points on which the opinions of the Law Officers is sought are:—

1. Whether the declarations made by the British Delegates at the Brussels Conference impose on the Government of India—

(a.) An obligation in regard to sugar, the produce of countries which were parties to the Brussels Convention, to abolish, in respect of all such sugar imported into British India after the date when the Brussels Convention came into force, the additional or special duties imposed under Act 8 of 1894 as amended by Acts 14 of 1899, and 8 of 1902; or

(b.) An obligation to abolish the said duties only in respect of sugar imported after that date with regard to which it is certified that no bounty has been received; or

(c.) To abolish the said duties only from the date when the bounty-fed sugar will in the ordinary course of trade have been consumed or exported.

2. Whether, assuming that there exists in the countries, which are parties to the Brussels Convention, a stock of bounty-fed sugar which would not in the ordinary course be consumed or exported before the 31st March, 1904, the imposition of the said duties until that date, as provided for in Act 12 of 1903, is inconsistent with the above-mentioned declaration, and, if so, to what extent?

3. Apart from the declarations mentioned in (1), is a breach of the most-favoured-nation stipulations of the Treaty subsisting between Austria-Hungary and the United Kingdom occasioned by the continuance of the Indian countervailing duties against all bounty-fed sugar for a limited period, after the date from which bounties ceased to be paid or bestowed in the countries in which it was produced? Can such continuance be justified on the ground that during such period a stock of bounty-fed sugar exists, and will exist, in those countries?

4. If the answer to the first part of (3) be in the affirmative, would it be within the most-favoured-nation stipulations to maintain the duties, but to confine them to sugar in respect of which there is proof that a bounty has actually been paid or bestowed thereon, or no proof to the contrary?

Opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown.

In our opinion these declarations impose upon the Government of India an obligation to abolish the duties in respect of sugar with regard to which the Convention has been operative, or, in other words, on which no bounty has been received.

We do not think that either view (a) or view (c) is tenable.

Although the declarations were in general terms, we think they cannot fairly be read as covering the case of a large stock of sugar in bond on which the bounty had been paid.

On the other hand, the obligation attaches at once and cannot be postponed until the date suggested under (c).

2. Yes; the duties should be imposed only on the bounty-fed sugar.

3. We think that the existence of a large stock of bounty-fed sugar in any country might, provided it was practically impossible to distinguish the bounty-fed from the non-bounty-fed sugar, afford an answer to any claim based upon the most-favoured-nation clause apart from the declarations mentioned in question one.

4. The course proposed will not be a breach of the most-favoured nation clause.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Law Officers' Department,
November 2, 1903.

1903

BELGIUM.

No. 5.

[May 13, 1903.]

The Marquess of Lansdowne to the Lord Chancellor.

Collision × and Salvage Conference

THE Marquess of Lansdowne presents his compliments to the Lord Chancellor, and begs to transmit to his Lordship herewith the papers noted in the accompanying list respecting the proposal of the Belgian Government that an International Conference should be held to consider the question of establishing a uniform law of collision and of salvage.

The Lord Chancellor will observe that in accordance with well settled practice, His Majesty's Government have declined to be officially represented at the Conference on the ground that its decisions might, if they were represented thereon, to some extent place them under an obligation to alter or modify the existing maritime law of this country.

Since the Belgian Chargé d'Affaires was informed of the decision of His Majesty's Government, the Lord Chief Justice of England has expressed to Lord Lansdowne his personal hope that His Majesty's Government would agree to be represented at the Conference.

Lord Lansdowne will be much obliged if the Lord Chancellor will be so good as to take the papers transmitted herewith into his consideration, and to inform Lord Lansdowne whether in his opinion there are any exceptional circumstances in the present case sufficient to warrant a departure from the policy hitherto pursued by His Majesty's Government on similar occasions.

His Lordship would be glad to be favoured at the same time with any general observations which the Lord Chancellor may be good enough to offer for his assistance in further dealing with the matter.

Foreign Office, May 8, 1903.

List of Papers.

Baron Grenier	January 2, 1903.
To Board of Trade	January 13, „
Board of Trade	January 26, „
To Baron Grenier	February 4, „
Liverpool Steam-ship Owners' Association	February 5, „
Board of Trade	February 7, „
To Liverpool Steam-ship Owners' Association	February 12, „
International Law Association (two letters)	February 18, „
Memorandum by Mr. Brant	March 13, „

Report.

I can see no reason for departing from the very useful rule of the Foreign Office.

It is obvious that if any one was at a Conference in the character of a Representative of the Government, he must take no part whatever or must be instructed beforehand what part he was to take.

In the one case he would be useless, and in the other he would require a determination by his Government what views he was to insist upon, and this would involve a preliminary discussion and decision which at present has not been arrived at.

I should, of course, attach great weight to the request of the Lord Chief Justice, but I observe he is the Chairman of one of the Societies, and I should suppose it is rather in that character than in his position of Chief Justice that he favours the suggestion to send a Representative.

(Signed) HALSBURY.

May 13, 1903.

CHINA.

No. 6.

[July 29, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, July 22, 1903.

Gentlemen,

Removal of prohibition to import Arms. Proclamation.

I HAVE the honour to inform you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, that His Majesty's Government are of opinion that the necessity which arose in 1900, in consequence of the position of affairs in China, to prohibit the export of materials of war to that country, has now ceased to exist.

It has, therefore, been decided to issue a Proclamation repealing the provisions of the Proclamation issued on the 7th August, 1900, by which such export was prohibited.

I have the honour to transmit to you the draft of a Proclamation (Paper A) providing for the repeal of the prohibition, and to request that you will take this draft into your consideration, and favour his Lordship with your opinion on its terms at your early convenience, as it is proposed that the repeal of the prohibition should take effect from the 7th August. This date has been fixed on in order to admit of goods from the United Kingdom reaching China soon after the expiration, on the 25th August, of the prohibition to import arms into China, which is provided for by the Chinese Imperial Edict issued in compliance with Article 5 of the Final Protocol, signed at Peking in 1901 (Paper B).

Lord Lansdowne would also be much obliged if you would be good enough to offer any general observations or suggestions which may occur to you in regard to the matter.

Copies are inclosed of the Proclamation of the 7th August, 1900, of "The Exportation of Arms Act, 1900," referred to therein, and of the correspondence that took place between you and this Department on the subject in August 1900 (Papers C, D, and E respectively).

I have, &c.
(Signed) CHARLES HARDINGE.

List of Papers.

(A.) Draft Proclamation.
(B.) Protocol	September 7, 1901.
(C.) Proclamation	August 7, 1900.
(D.) Act (Exportation of Arms) 63 & 64, Vic., c. 44	.. 1900.
(E.) To Law Officers	August 2, 1900.
Law Officers	August 7, „

Report.

We approve of the draft Proclamation as altered and initialled by us.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 29, 1903.

Annex.

Draft Proclamation.

By the King.

A PROCLAMATION.

Edward R.

WHEREAS by "The Exportation of Arms Act, 1900," section 1, it is enacted that it shall be lawful for His Majesty by Proclamation to prohibit the exportation of all or any of the following articles, namely, arms, ammunition, military and naval stores, and any article which His Majesty shall judge capable of being converted into, or made useful in, increasing the quantity of arms, ammunition, or military or naval stores, to any country or place therein named, whenever His Majesty shall judge such prohibitions to be expedient in order to prevent such arms, ammunition, military or naval stores being used against His Majesty's subjects or forces, or against any forces engaged, or which may be engaged, in military or naval operations in co-operation with His Majesty's forces:

1903

Whereas a Proclamation was issued, dated 7th August, 1900, prohibiting the exportation to China of arms and ammunition from and after the date aforesaid;

And whereas we, by and with the advice of our Privy Council, judge it no longer expedient to prohibit the exportation to China of arms and ammunition ~~in order to prevent their being used as in the said Act stated~~;

Now we, by and with the advice aforesaid, hereby repeal the said Proclamation prohibiting the exportation to China of arms and ammunition from and after the date hereof.

Given at our Court at this 7th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1903 and in the 3rd year of our Reign.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

R. B. F.
E. C

No. 7.

[August 4, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

As to handing over to Chinese authorities of writers in "Supao," a seditious newspaper

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, July 29, 1903.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers indicated in the accompanying list on the subject of a difficulty which has arisen in Shanghae in regard to handing over to the Chinese provincial authorities two Chinese subjects who have pleaded guilty in the Mixed Court of the Shanghae International Settlement to publishing seditious articles in a newspaper called the "Supao."

Chinese subjects residing in the Settlement are subject to Chinese Criminal Law, and are only amenable to the Chinese Judicial authorities; but it has long been the custom for an Assessor representing one of the foreign Consulates at Shanghae to be present at all criminal cases tried by the Chinese Magistrate in the foreign Settlement, even when no direct foreign interest is involved; and the Court in which these cases are tried is known as the Mixed Court. In 1869 the accompanying Rules (Paper A) were put in force in the Mixed Court by instruction of Her Majesty's Minister in China, with the implicit, and probably explicit, consent of the Chinese Government; these Rules have ever since formed the basis of the procedure of the Court.

No. 4 of these Rules reserves to the district Magistrate jurisdiction in grave offences, and it appears to have been intended at the time that the Mixed Court should not deal with such cases at all.

It will be seen, however, from the accompanying Memorandum (Paper B), that in practice it has since been found necessary, as the development of the foreign Settlement progressed, to make various alterations in the procedure, which have tended to augment the effective control of the Municipal Council of the Settlement over the practical administration of justice; and the Chinese authorities have long abandoned to the Council the custody of persons brought to trial, both before and after their conviction by the Court.

The present practice is for all Chinese accused of offences, such as murder or manslaughter, which are punishable with death, to be brought before the Mixed Court by the Settlement police, and if there appears to be a good case against them, they are at once handed on to the Chinese District Magistrate in the native city.

Mr. Townley's two telegrams (Papers C and E) describe the point which has now arisen.

You will perceive that the demand of the Chinese Government for the delivery to the higher provincial authorities of the persons who have pleaded guilty is made in spite of a verbal arrangement having been come to with the Shanghae Taotai (who is the district authority) that their trial and punishment should be left to the Mixed Court. If the arrangement with the Taotai were carried into effect, the parties, if convicted, would remain in the custody of the Municipal Council, and would escape capital punishment, which the Magistrate in the Mixed Court has no power to inflict.

The Council are opposed to granting the application of the Chinese Government, and Mr. Townley points out that it is open to question whether the accused would have pleaded guilty had they not believed that they would be tried and punished by the Mixed Court, and would, therefore, not suffer the death penalty, to which they are now liable under Chinese law, and which, if they are surrendered, will probably be inflicted on them at once, as having already pleaded guilty.

Mr. Townley also expresses the opinion that there is some danger that disorders may arise in Shanghae if the surrender be effected, and that the landing of an armed force may be necessitated.

It appears to Lord Lansdowne that the Chinese Government are hardly entitled to expect the alteration, in the present case, of a procedure which has existed, without being challenged by them, for so long a period, viz., that under which all criminal cases, however serious, arising in the Settlement, are brought before the Mixed Court in the first instance, and an opportunity is given to the Assessor to see that a primâ facie case is made out against the accused.

As, however, according to Chinese law, conviction would take place without trial in the case of persons who have already confessed their guilt, it will be necessary, if a proper hearing of the case is to be secured, that permission should be previously given by the Mixed Court Magistrate for the withdrawal by the accused of their plea of guilty.

His Lordship proposes to instruct Mr. Townley to inform the Chinese Government that, if this permission is given, and if the Mixed Court decide, after a fair hearing, that there is a case against the accused, they will be handed over to the Chinese authorities, provided an undertaking be given that no torture will be used at any time on the accused.

I am to request that you will take the papers submitted herewith into your immediate consideration, and that you will inform Lord Lansdowne whether you consider that it would be possible, due consideration being given to the arrangement made with the Shanghae Taotai, to adopt any other course than to deliver the accused to the Chinese Government in the event of a case being made out against them in the Mixed Court. If no other course is, in your opinion, possible, his Lordship will be glad if you will favour him with your opinion on the stipulations which it is proposed to make, and with any observations of a general character which you may be good enough to offer on the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.) Mixed Court Rules of April 20, 1869.
(B.) Memorandum by Mr. Mayers, [?] June 27, 1901.
(C.) Mr. Townley, No. 188, Telegraphic, July 25, 1903.
(D.) To Mr. Townley, No. 134, Telegraphic, July 25, 1903.
(E.) Mr. Townley, No. 192, Telegraphic, July 28, 1903.

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 3, 1903.

I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you, for your consideration, the accompanying copy of a further telegram which has been received from His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Peking,* and which bears upon the case submitted to you in my letter of the 29th ultimo, of the difficulty which has arisen in Shanghae in regard to the handing over to the Chinese provincial authorities of two Chinese subjects who have pleaded guilty in the Mixed Court of the Shanghae

---

* Mr. Townley, No. 196, Telegraphic, August 3, 1903.

1903

International Settlement to publishing seditious articles in a newspaper called the "Supao."

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

P.S.—A copy of the reply which has been sent to Mr. Townley's telegram is also inclosed.[*]

F. H. V.

Report.

In our opinion the persons who pleaded guilty should not be handed over to the Chinese Government. There appears to be some reason to believe that the plea of "guilty" was entered on the supposition that the arrangement made by the Shanghae Taotai would be carried out, and that the punishment would be inflicted by the Mixed Tribunal.

The withdrawal by permission of such a plea, even if such a course was legal, could not put the accused in the same position as before the plea as their own confirmation of the charge must tend to prejudice their cause.

We, therefore, think that a refusal to deliver up the prisoners should be made based on the arrangement with the Shanghae Taotai.

R. B. F.
E. C.

August 4, 1903.

CONGO.

No. 8.

[June 27, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 17, 1903.

Arrest of Rabinek by Congo officials in British Protectorate waters.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the accompanying papers in connection with the arrest of the late M. Rabinek by the authorities of the Congo Free State at Mpweto.

The circumstances are briefly as follows:—

The Congolese authorities decided to arrest M. Rabinek in consequence of an alleged infraction by him of the trading regulations of the State, and, on hearing that he was on board the steam-ship "Scotia," a British merchant-vessel belonging to the African Lakes Corporation, then at anchor off Mpweto, sent one of their officials on board. This person went into the cabin where M. Rabinek was sitting, and producing a warrant read it over to him; but while M. Rabinek was still considering what he should do, the Congolese official was overcome with sea-sickness and returned on shore. M. Rabinek subsequently, of his own motion, followed, and having been met by the officer went up with him into the town. He was there tried, convicted, and sentenced to one year's imprisonment and a fine of 40*l*. He appealed against the sentence, but died on his way to Boma, where the appeal was to have been heard.

There appear to His Majesty's Government to be two points in the case which call for examination:—

1. Was the "Scotia," at the time when the Congolese official went on board, in British Protectorate, or in Congo Free State waters?

Assuming that she was lying in British Protectorate waters, were the proceedings which took place on the vessel of such a nature as to amount to a violation of British Protectorate territorial jurisdiction, and to call for a representation to the Congolese Government?

---

[*] To Mr. Townley, No. 138, Telegraphic, August 3, 1903.

Lord Lansdowne does not desire to trouble you with the consideration of the first point, which is one that must depend for its determination on questions of fact, which are at present not clearly ascertained; but his Lordship would be glad to be favoured with your views on the second, and generally with any remarks which the papers may suggest to you.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

Mr. Sharpe	March 13, 1903.
Colonial Office	May 29, „
Sir C. Phipps	(No. 66. Africa)

Report.

In our opinion the Representative of the Congolese Government had no right to enter the "Scotia" for the purpose of making an arrest whilst the ship was lying in British Protectorate waters, and if the facts establish that Chargois entered the vessel for that purpose we think a representation may properly be made to the Congolese Government if it is thought expedient to do so.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 27, 1903.

FRANCE.

No. 9.

[May 13, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 1, 1903.

Marriage before Anglican clergyman only in Madagascar.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you a despatch from His Majesty's Consul at Tamatave,[*] in regard to a marriage between two British subjects which was solemnized on the 7th January last in the Anglican Church at Mahanoro, Madagascar, by Archdeacon Kestell Cornish, a clergyman in holy orders of the Church of England.

The parties to the marriage, although warned by His Majesty's Consul of the desirability of their being married in accordance with "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," have gone through no ceremony beyond that which took place in the Anglican Church at Mahanoro.

Although a marriage such as this might have been recognized as valid in contemplation of English law while Madagascar remained a semi-civilized independent sovereign State, Lord Lansdowne presumes that since 1896, when the island was annexed to the dominions of the French Republic and became a Colony of France,

---

[*] Consul Sauzier, No. 10, March 17; Minute by Mr. Oakes, April 20, 1903.

1903

a marriage which did not comply with the requirements of the local French law would not be recognized as valid in contemplation of the law of England.

I am, however, to request you to be good enough to favour his Lordship with your opinion on this point, and with such observations of a more general nature as you may desire to offer on the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

Report.

In our opinion the marriage in question would not be recognized as valid in contemplation of the law of England. We assume that it is not valid by the lex loci. Since the annexation of Madagascar by the French Republic it cannot any longer be considered a semi-civilized state, and the marriage should have been celebrated either under "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," or according to the lex loci which prevails under French law.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
May 13, 1903.

No. 10.

[May 14, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Infringement of Holt and Co.'s trading rights in French Congo: Further as to.

Foreign Office, March 13, 1903.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by the direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted on the inclosed list, which relate to the position of British traders in the French Colony of the Congo.

This case was referred to you, in some detail, in Sir F. Bertie's letter of the 19th February, 1901. (P. 114 of the printed papers, Document O.)

No material facts have been ascertained since that date, nor has anything transpired to throw a new light on the question, which is shortly whether the British firms long established in the French Congo have a right to continue to buy from the natives the produce of the forests. The greater part of these forests have been granted to individuals or Companies under Concessions, which are all of one type. The text of every Concession, which has been published in the French "Journal Officiel," excepts specifically the rights of third parties, though some of the earliest of the Concessions not so published do not contain this clause; it is thought, however, that the absence of these specific words makes no difference in the effect of the document, as it may be assumed that a civilized State such as France would not act in such a manner as intentionally to injure the rights of third parties.

But since the case was first referred to you, several more Judgments pronounced by the Courts of the French Congo Colony have been received, and they will no doubt be found to contain much matter which throws light on the aspect of the case, as it presents itself from the French point of view.

The earlier papers and all the Judgments as yet received have been printed, and it will perhaps be sufficient on the present occasion that I should, instead of recapitulating the whole case, which was fully stated in Sir F. Bertie's above-mentioned letter (p. 114 of the printed papers), merely call your attention to the more important papers, and indicate briefly their substance:—

French Presidential Decree, March 28, 1899, providing that in French Congo vacant and ownerless lands belongs to the State Domain. (Not printed. Sent in MS. marked "A.")

A typical Concession, that namely of the 22nd June, 1899, to M. Gazengel. It is now held by the "Compagnie Coloniale Ogooué N'Gounié." It will be found in Mr. de Bunsen's private letter of the 19th February last. (Not printed. Sent in MS. marked "B.")

A later Concession sent for the purpose of showing how closely the terms of all the Concessions follow the same type. (Not printed. Sent in MS. marked "C.")

Instructions issued by the French Colonial Minister to the Commissary-General of French Congo, the 24th May, 1899. Attention is called to §§ 7 and 8 regarding the position of third parties in connexion with the rights granted to the concessionnaires, also to the last section of § 18 regarding the rights of the natives. (P. 30.)

Reference to the Law Officers, the 19th February, 1901. Statement of the facts of the case. (P. 114.)

Report from Law Officers, the 2nd May, 1901. Outside of the free trade zone established by the Berlin Act, the representations to be made to the French Government can be based only on the moral claim to equitable consideration to which the past dealings of the British firms may have entitled them. Within the zone the Concessions are so interpreted in the French Colony as to constitute a monopoly of trade, and thus to be at variance with the provisions of the Berlin Act. (P. 131.)

Private letter to the Attorney-General, the 5th June, 1901, calling attention to the use of the word "unappropriated" in the above Report. (P. 132.)

Memorandum referred to in above. (Not printed. Sent in MS. marked "D.")

Reply to the above, the 7th June, 1901. "Unappropriated" is used in the sense of "not appropriated as private property." (Not printed. Sent in MS. marked "E.")

Note to the French Government, the 22nd June, 1901, founded on the Law Officers' Report of the 22nd May, 1901. (P. 135.)

Reference to the Law Officers the 25th December, 1901, calling attention to the Judgment of the 24th October, 1901. (P. 15 of the printed Judgments.) (P. 179.)

Reference to the Law Officers, the 16th January, 1902, calling attention to the further Judgment of the 27th November, 1901 (p. 20 of the printed Judgments). The Judgment decides, inter alia, that the British firms have not acquired a right to the trade which they have so long carried on, and that there is no monopoly in the sense of the Berlin Act. (P. 195.)

Report from the Law Officers, the 13th February, 1902. The Judgments enable the equitable claims of the British firms to be represented to the French Government; the result of the Judgments is to deprive, in contravention of the Berlin Act, the British firms of their rights of trading. (P. 199.)

To Sir E. Monson, No. 48, Africa, the 8th March, and to Sir E. Monson, No. 49, Africa, March 10, 1902. Instructions in the sense of the Law Officers' Report of the 13th February, 1902. (P. 209.)

Despatch from the French Foreign Minister to M. Cambon, the 11th February, 1903, communicated by the latter the 12th February, 1903. This despatch explains on what basis the French State has dealt with the lands forming the Concessions; claims that the State can give property in such lands, and can, therefore, give occupation and rights of use for a term of years; an analogous right was granted to the late Imperial British East Africa Company; urges the distinction between monopoly in property and monopoly in trade, the latter alone being prohibited by the Berlin Act; offers to consider, and eventually to refer to arbitration, claims presented in exact form and based on relevant facts. (Sent as a separate paper in print, marked "F.")

Memorandum, February 24, 1903, in which an endeavour is made to state the elements of the case, and to summarize the results of the Judgments. (Sent as a separate paper in print, marked "G.")

Memorandum in which an endeavour is made to set out the difference between an exclusive privilege in regard to property and an exclusive privilege in regard to trade. (Sent as a separate paper in print, marked "H.")

Memorandum by Mr. Hurst, Assistant Legal Adviser to the Foreign Office, March 11, 1903: considerations on the present aspect of the case, and on the position to be taken up by His Majesty's Government. (Not printed, sent in MS. marked "I.")

Charter of the late Imperial British East Africa Company. (It is believed that the Company took no action on the power conferred on them of granting forest rights.) (Sent separate in print, marked "K.")

Order in Council of 1902 for British East Africa, Article 7 of which deals with Crown Lands. (Sent as a separate paper in print, marked "L.")

Ordinance of British East Africa, under which grants of Crown lands can be made. (Sent as a separate printed paper, marked "M.")

Map of the French Congo Colony, showing the position of the several Concessions and their areas in kilometres, and likewise, approximately, the position and extent of the Congo basin and free trade zone. (Sent as a separate paper, marked "N.")

1903

The correspondence in the case down to the 12th December, 1902. (In print, paper "O.")

The Judgments pronounced in the Colony. The Legal Adviser to His Majesty's Embassy in Paris has stated privately that he considers the Judgment of the 28th June, 1902 (printed Judgments, p. 45), to be one which it would be difficult to set aside. (Marked "P.")

The Berlin Act. (Marked "Q.")

It is a matter of regret that none of the points dealt with by the Judgments pronounced in the French Congo Colony have as yet been carried before the superior Tribunals in Paris. It must be remembered that there are in the Colony neither counsel nor solicitors, and it is very possible that the several appeals lodged by the local agents of the British firms will fail on technical grounds. It is also a matter for regret that it has not been possible to lay before you the opinion of the Legal Adviser to His Majesty's Embassy in Paris on the whole case as seen from the point of view of French law. The Legal Adviser has, however, stated privately that he would dislike undertaking to give such an opinion, as he would not care to find himself in the position of having to criticise the Judgments of French Courts.

I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to request you to take the above-mentioned papers into your consideration, and to favour his Lordship with your opinion—

1. As to whether His Majesty's Government should continue to urge on that of France the view that the Concessions, as interpreted in the Colony, involve a monopoly which is a violation of the Act of Berlin;

2. As to whether, apart from the provisions of the Act of Berlin, the British firms had acquired a right to trade in the produce of these forests to the continued enjoyment of which they are entitled;

3. As to the arguments with which your opinions on these questions can best be supported, from a legal point of view, in making representations on the subject to the French Government; and

4. Generally, with any observations which will, in your opinion, be useful to his Lordship in dealing with the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Decree	March 28, 1899.
(B.)	Mr. de Bunsen	February 19, 1903.
(C.)	In Sir E. Monson's No. 67	April 29, 1900.
(D.)	Memorandum (H. F.)	June , 1903.
(E.)	Law Officers	June 7, 1901.
(F.)	M. Delcassé to M. Cambon	February 11, 1903.
(G.)	Memorandum (H. F.)	February 24, ,,
(H.)	Memorandum (H. F.)	March 12, ,,
(I.)	Memorandum (Mr. Hurst)	March 11, ,,
(K.)	British East Africa Company's Charter. (Confidential 5668*)..	September 6, 1888.
(L.)	East Africa Order in Council. (Confidential 7759*)	August 11, 1902.
(M.)	British East Africa Crown Lands Ordinance. (Confidential 7786)	September 27, 1902.
(N.)	Map of French Congo, shewing Concessions and their areas.
(O.)	Printed correspondence respecting Trade in French Congo down to December 12, 1902.
(P.)	Printed Judgments in case.
(Q.)	Act of Berlin. (Treaty Library No. 757)	February 26 (1885).

Report by the Attorney-General.

1. I think that His Majesty's Government may properly continue to urge on that of France the view that the Concessions, as interpreted in the Colony, involve a monopoly which is a violation of the Act of Berlin. How far such representations should be pressed is, of course, a matter of policy.

2. This question must, in my opinion, be answered in the negative so far as any legal right is concerned. What had been done by the British firms no doubt constitutes a strong claim morally to consideration at the hands of the French Government, and from this point of view it may be used as a subsidiary argument in aid of any representations.

3. The statement in the "Dépêche Coloniale," 29th March, 1903, seems to me to afford a very good illustration of the way in which these Concessions are practically worked. The business of the concessionnaires appears in substance to resolve itself into barter with the natives who collect the products of the forests. The concessionnaires have asserted with success in the French Court the right to exclude British traders from competition with them. The enormous extent of territory over which these Concessions range is well shown on the map of the French Congo which accompanies the papers now before me. When the substance of the matter is looked at it seems quite clear that the only thing that the concessionnaires regard as of real value in the Concession is the right to trade with the natives in the products of the forests and to exclude from this trade all competitors. The natives do not collect these products as agents for the concessionnaires, but on their own account, and the concessionnaires recognize this by buying these products from them. Whatever form of expression may be employed, it is obvious that the concessionnaires have not in reality any property in the forests, except to the extent to which they may avail themselves of their rights as to "mise en valeur des terres." It cannot, of course, be contended that the "free trade provisions of the Berlin Act means that the land in the Congo basin is to remain for ever 'free commercial land,' where any one may trade in natural products." As the land is reclaimed it becomes the subject of private property, and only the owner would be entitled to deal with its products. As regards the unreclaimed forests, both the wording of the Concessions and the fresh facts which are now before me as to the manner in which they have been worked appear to me to show that the concessionnaires have no property in these enormous tracts, and that the right of "jouissance et exploitation" means in substance a monopoly of trade with the natives for the products. This way of looking at the case does not involve the slighest imputation upon the good faith of the French Government, but merely the assertion that the construction which the local French Courts have put upon these Concessions and the manner in which they have been worked constitute an infraction of the Act of Berlin.

4. Generally, I have nothing to add.

(Initialled) R. B. F.

Report by the Solicitor-General.

Upon a further consideration of this case, and upon the fuller materials before me, I regret that I cannot now agree with the view taken by the Attorney-General, or with that contained in the previous Reports to which I was a party.

In my opinion, the case briefly stands thus:—

Upon the passing of the French Presidential Decree of the 28th March, 1899, the French Government had a right to deal with vacant and ownerless lands in such a way as they thought proper, and they could have leased or transferred them to such persons or Companies as they thought right, or to grant restricted or limited rights over them.

As they had this power it is, in my opinion, impossible to quarrel with the decisions come to by the French Colonial Courts, which are binding on the French Government, and declare the rights of the concessionnaires under the Concessions.

Unless, therefore, it could be contended that the granting of the Concession was a breach of the Berlin Act, I do not see how His Majesty's Government can successfully impeach the conduct of the French Government, although no doubt the consequence of so dealing with the vacant lands creates very serious hardship in its result on the trading carried on by Messrs. Holt.

The unfortunate results arise, in my opinion, from a legitimate dealing by the French Government with the vacant lands, and not from any prohibition of or interference with their right to trade, and I cannot see, under the circumstances, how His Majesty's Government can successfully contend that there has been an infraction of the Berlin Act.

I am therefore of opinion that the only claim that can be urged on behalf of Messrs. Holt is an equitable one, founded upon the fact that the result of the dealing by the French Government with the vacant lands has been to seriously injure a long existing trade without any fault on the part of Messrs. Holt.

2. On this question I concur with the opinion of the Attorney-General.

(Initialled) E. C.

No. 11.

[June 5, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, May 11, 1903.

Property of English Benedictines at Douai.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you herewith the papers, marked in the accompanying list, which relate to the closing of the establishment of the English Benedictines at Douai in accordance with the Law lately passed in France in regard to religious corporations.

It will be observed that the Abbot President has appealed to His Majesty's Government to protect the property of the community from confiscation at the hands of the French Government on the grounds that the property in question has hitherto been regarded as British. It has been pointed out, in reply, that although the individual members of the confraternity of the Benedictines at Douai may be British subjects, the community cannot be exempt from the principle that persons who voluntarily settle in another country submit themselves to the law of that country, and that it is beyond the power of His Majesty's Government to interfere to protect them from the operation of that law.

I have the honour to request you to take these papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion whether you concur in the view (1) that the property of the community, as distinct from the personal property of the individual members, is subject to the law of France; (2) that His Majesty's Government have no locus standi to intervene on behalf of the corporate property of a community which has voluntarily established itself and become domiciled in a foreign country.

His Lordship would at the same time be glad to be favoured with any observations of a general character which you may have to offer.

I have, &c.

(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

Abbé Gasquet	April 19, 1903.
To Abbé Gasquet	May 2, „
Abbé Gasquet	May 5, „
To Abbé Gasquet	May 8, „

Report

We concur in your Lordship's view that the property of the community is subject to the law of France, and we think the reply already made to the Abbot President states correctly the view which His Majesty's Government is bound to take.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 5, 1903.

Annex 1.

Foreign Office to Rev. F. A. Gasquet.

Sir,

Foreign Office, May 2, 1903.

I am directed by the Marquess of Lansdowne to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th ultimo on the subject of the closing of the establishment of the English Benedictines at Douai, in accordance with the law lately passed in regard to French religious corporations.

I am to inform you that the Benedictine College at Douai, being situate in France, is governed by the law of that country, and not by the law of England.

His Majesty's Ambassador at Paris took every step which was possible in the interests of the English religious bodies in France during the consideration of the Associations Bill in the Chamber of Deputies, but it is beyond the power of His Majesty's Government to interfere to protect the community at Douai from the operation of the law of the country, in which their establishment is situated.

I am, &c.

(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Annex 2.

Foreign Office to Rev. F. A. Gasquet.

Sir,

Foreign Office, May 8, 1903.

I am directed by the Marquess of Lansdowne to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, in regard to the property of the English Benedictines at Douai.

I am to inform you in reply that his Lordship is advised that, although the individual members of the confraternity of the Benedictines at Douai may be British subjects, the community cannot be exempt from the general principle that persons who voluntarily settle in another country submit themselves to the law of that country. There is in these circumstances nothing in the execution of the present law to which His Majesty's Government can take exception.

His Majesty's Ambassador at Paris is fully aware of the circumstances of the case, and has done what is possible to obtain considerate treatment for the English Benedictines, but His Majesty's Government have no locus standi for further intervention. The points raised in your letter will, however, be carefully examined in consultation with Sir E. Monson and the Law Officers of the Crown.

I am to add that, as Lord Lansdowne has had several interviews with Cardinal Vaughan with regard to this question, his Lordship does not think that, for the present at any rate, there would be any advantage in troubling you to call.

I am, &c.

(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

No. 12.

[September 14, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, August 18, 1903.

Settlement of Anglo-French difficulties by Arbitration.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to address you on the following subject:—

The French Ambassador recently approached his Lordship with regard to the visit of Baron d'Estournelles de Constant and other Members of the French Chamber of Deputies to this country in connection with the movement now in progress for the settlement by arbitration of differences between the French and British Governments. M. Cambon at the same time left with his Lordship, for his confidential information, a copy of a suggested Agreement which, his Excellency said, had been submitted unofficially to M. Delcassé by M. Anatole Leroy-Beaulieu, President of the Committee formed for promoting a good understanding between France and England.

Lord Lansdowne promised M. Cambon to consult his colleagues on the subject, and the text of a draft Agreement, which his Excellency subsequently communicated, was accordingly submitted by his Lordship to the Cabinet, who showed themselves well disposed towards the project, and were ready to examine any such proposals in the most friendly spirit.

The Lord Chancellor has concurred in the text of the draft, and the Cabinet have authorized Lord Lansdowne to accept the proposal.

1903

Before, however, returning a definite reply to the French Government, his Lordship desires me to submit to you the accompanying copy of the draft Agreement for any observations thereon that may occur to you, and I am to state that as the French Chambers meet in the middle of September, it would be desirable that the matter should be arranged before that date, and he would, therefore, be glad to be favoured with your Report as soon as convenient.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

Report.

We have no observations to make on the draft Agreement communicated by M. Cambon.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
September 14, 1903.

Annex.

Draft Declaration.

LES différends tombant sous l'application de l'Article XVI de la Convention pour le réglement pacifique des conflits internationaux, conclue à La Haye, le 29 Juillet, 1899, c'est-à-dire les différends d'ordre juridique et particulièrement ceux qui sont relatifs à des difficultés d'interprétation ou d'appréciation des Conventions existantes, qui viendraient à se produire entre les Hautes Puissances Contractantes, seront, à la condition cependant qu'ils ne touchent ni aux intérêts vitaux ni à l'honneur des dites Puissances Contractantes, et si, d'autre part, ils ne peuvent être résolus par la voie diplomatique, soumis à la Cour Permanente d'Arbitrage, conformément aux dispositions de la Convention susmentionnée.

GENERAL.

No. 13.

[February 4, 1903.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, January 26, 1903.

Gentlemen,

Extension of Foreign Marriages Order in Council to Colonies and India.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers as marked on the accompanying list respecting the extension to the Colonies and to India of the provisions of Article 6 (4) of the Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892.

That Article requires that in cases where one of the parties has not been resident within the district of the marriage officer who is to solemnize the marriage such party shall produce a certificate from the marriage officer of the place in which he or she has been resident that proper notice has been given of the marriage, but these requirements of the Order in Council relate only to foreign countries and to the United Kingdom, while no instructions are given concerning notice of marriage by persons resident in the Colonies and India.

On several occasions difficulties have been experienced in connection with the intended marriage of a British subject under the provisions of the Foreign Marriage Act and Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892, in cases where one of the parties has been resident in a British Colony or India. A case in point is illustrated by Paper (E). Lord Lansdowne therefore considered that it would be well to prepare an Order in Council dealing with this difficulty in so far as the requirements of the Imperial Act are concerned, and in such manner as will be consonant with the preliminary procedure in regard to notice, &c., of marriage prescribed by the Colonial or Indian Government involved.

After consulting the Secretary of State for the Colonies and the Secretary of State for India, his Lordship instructed Mr. A. Gray to prepare a Supplementary Order in Council giving effect to the proposals made by the Departments concerned. The terms of the draft Order in Council so prepared have now been submitted to, and provisionally approved by, both the Secretary of State for the Colonies and the Government of India.

I am to request that you will be so good as to take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and inform his Lordship whether the terms of the draft Order in Council are such as may properly be submitted to the King in Council for His Majesty's approval.

His Lordship will also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may wish to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.)	To India Office and Colonial Office	.. .. ..	February 7, 1901.
(B.)	India Office	.. ..	March 12, ,,
(C.)	Colonial Office	.. ..	May 3, ,,
(D.)	Mr. Gray	.. ..	July 28, 1902.
(E.)	Consul Jerome	.. .. (No. 4)	January 10, 1901.

Report.

In our opinion the terms of the draft Order in Council initialled by us may properly be submitted to His Majesty in Council for His Majesty's approval. We assume that Protectorates have been intentionally omitted from this Order.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 4, 1903.

Annex.

FOREIGN MARRIAGES.

Draft Order in Council.

WHEREAS, by the Foreign Marriage Act, 1892, it is provided (section 1) that all marriages between parties of whom one at least is a British subject solemnized in the manner in that Act provided in any foreign country or place, by or before a marriage officer within the meaning of that Act, shall be as valid in law as if the same had been solemnized in the United Kingdom with a due observance of all forms required by law:

And whereas the said Act also provides (section 2) that in every case of a marriage intended to be solemnized under that Act, one of the parties intending marriage shall give such notice as is therein mentioned to the marriage officer within whose district both of the parties have had their residence not less than one week then next preceding; but the said Act makes no provision for cases where one only of the parties has had such residence:

And whereas the said Act (section 21) authorized Her Majesty the Queen in Council to make Regulations for (amongst other purposes) modifying in special cases or classes of cases the requirements of that Act as to residence and notice, so far as such modification should appear to Her Majesty to be consistent with the observance of due precautions against clandestine marriages:

1903

And whereas, by the Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892, passed in pursuance of the said last-mentioned authority, it was provided (Article 6) as follows:—

"6. The following modifications of the requirements of the Foreign Marriage Act as to residence and notice which appear to Her Majesty to be consistent with the observance of due precautions against the solemnization of clandestine marriages shall have effect in cases where one only of the parties has dwelt within the district of the marriage officer:—

"(1.) A marriage may be solemnized under the Foreign Marriage Act in the official house of a marriage officer in whose district one of the parties has dwelt—

"(a.) If the marriage officer is satisfied that such notice as is mentioned below in Sub-Articles (3) and (4) of this Article has been given of the intended marriage in the place where the other party has dwelt; or

"(b.) If a Secretary of State is satisfied that the intended marriage is not clandestine, and that adequate notice has been given, and gives permission for the same to be solemnized.

"(2.) In either case the oath, affirmation, or declaration under section 7 of the Foreign Marriage Act shall, in addition to the matters specified in sub-sections (a) and (c) of that section, state that one of the parties has for three weeks immediately preceding had his or her usual place of abode within the district of the marriage officer, and further state the place where the party who has not dwelt within that district has, within three months immediately preceding, had for three consecutive weeks his or her usual place of abode, and the notice which has been given in that place during those three weeks.

"(3.) The notice to be given where the marriage is not solemnized with the special permission of a Secretary of State shall, if the party has dwelt in a foreign country, be given, entered, and posted up in the manner and during the period provided by the Foreign Marriage Act, in like manner as if the marriage were to be solemnized by or before a marriage officer in that country, and the marriage officer to whom the notice is given in that country shall, on payment of the proper fee, give a certificate that the notice has been so given and posted up and that he is unaware of any impediment which should obstruct the solemnization of the, marriage.

"(4.) If the party dwells in a place in the United Kingdom, the notice shall be given in the like manner and on payment of the like fee as if that party were about to be married in that place, and in England or Ireland shall be given to the Superintendent Registrar or Registrar, and in Scotland shall be given by proclamation of banns; and the Superintendent Registrar or Registrar shall deal with the notice and give a certificate for marriage in like manner and on payment of the like fee as in the case of a marriage in his district; and the Session Clerk of the parish in which the banns were proclaimed in Scotland shall, in like manner and on payment of the like fee as in the case of a marriage in his district, give a certificate of proclamation of such banns."

And whereas it is expedient that further modifications of the requirements of the said Act as to residence and notice should have effect in cases where one only of the parties has dwelt within the district of the marriage officer and the other has dwelt in a Colony or in India:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers enabling him in this behalf, is pleased, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. The following further modifications of the requirements of the Foreign Marriage Act, 1892, as to residence and notice which appear to His Majesty to be consistent with the observance of due precautions against the solemnization of clandestine marriages, shall have effect in cases where one only of the parties has dwelt within the district of the marriage officer and the other of such parties has dwelt in a Colony or in India, that is to say:—

(1.) If the marriage officer is satisfied that such notice has been given by the party dwelling in such Colony or in India as may be provided by any law of that Colony or of the Governor-General of India in Council (as the case may be) giving effect to this Order.

(2.) In any such case the oath, affirmation, or declaration required by section 7 of the Foreign Marriage Act shall be made subject to the modifications thereof, to which effect is given by Article 6 of the Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892.

2. A law enacted by the Legislature of a Colony or by the Governor-General of India in Council shall be deemed to give effect to this Order if it makes provision (in whatever terms expressed) as follows:—

(1.) That a notice of a marriage intended to be solemnized under the Foreign Marriage Act may be given by one of the parties intending such marriage who has had his or her usual place of abode for three consecutive weeks immediately preceding in some place in that Colony or in India (as the case may be) to such marriage Registrar or other officer as may be designated by the law in this behalf;

(2.) That such notice shall be published either by proclamation of banns or in such other manner as the law may provide; and

(3.) That such marriage Registrar or other officer, unless he is aware of any impediment or objection which should obstruct the solemnization of the marriage, shall, on payment of such fee, if any, as the law may provide, give a certificate that the said notice has been so given and published as aforesaid.

3. In this Order "Colony" and "India" have the same respective meanings as are given to these expressions by section 18 of the Interpretation Act, 1889.

4. This Order may be cited as "The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1902"; and the Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892, and this Order may be cited together as "The Foreign Marriages Orders in Council, 1892 and 1902."

And the Right Honourable Joseph Chamberlain and the Right Honourable Lord George Hamilton, two of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, are to give the necessary directions herein as to them may respectively appertain.

R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 13A. [Board of Trade.]

[July 17, 1903.]

Board of Trade to Foreign Office.

Inter-Imperial Coasting Trade.

Sir, Board of Trade, August 12, 1903.

I AM directed by the Board of Trade to inform you that they have recently submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown the question whether His Majesty has power, by Order in Council made under sections 324 to 326 of "The Customs Consolidation Act, 1853," to impose the necessary prohibitions or restrictions upon shipping belonging to the countries which do not give reciprocity in this matter; and I am now to transmit to you herewith, for the information of Lord Lansdowne, copy of the Opinion which has been received from the Law Officers.

I have, &c.
(Signed) A. E. BATEMAN.

Opinion.

We are of opinion that—

The powers conferred on His Majesty by sections 324 and 325 of 16 and 17 Vict., c. 107, have no reference to the coasting trade of the United Kingdom. Subject to this limitation, His Majesty's Government has, upon the contingencies mentioned in and in the manner provided by the said sections, power to restrict the trade between the United Kingdom and the Colonies and Inter-Colonial trade without fresh legislation.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.
HENRY SUTTON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 17, 1903.

No. 14.

[September 11, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Report of Naval Prize Law Committee.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 11, 1903.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you, for your information, copies of the Report of the Naval Prize Law Committee on the questions referred to them, together with a print of the Naval Prize Manual prepared by the Committee.

Lord Lansdowne will be glad to learn at your convenience whether you have any observations to offer on the recommendations of the Committee or on the Manual.

His Lordship has communicated copies to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty and to the Secretaries of State for the Colonies and for India, and has proposed that the Treasury should be requested to make arrangements for compilations of Reports of leading prize cases as suggested by the Committee, and that Professor Holland should be employed to select the foreign cases which it would be desirable to include in the collection.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

1903

Report.

We have no observations to offer.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
September 11, 1903.

[Home Office.] No. 14^{A}.

[September 29, 1903.]

Opinion by the Attorney-General.

As to marriage of Prince Louis of Battenberg's daughter.

I AM informed that no consent under the Statute 12, Geo. III, cap. 11, was given for the marriage of the mother of Princess Victoria to Prince Louis of Battenberg.

This, no doubt, was in consequence of the view being entertained that the Princess Alice had married into a foreign family within the meaning of the Statute. This view, according to the information at my disposal, seems to be correct, as Princess Alice married a foreign Sovereign who was not naturalized here.

It follows that no consent under the Statute is required for the marriage of the issue of Princess Alice.

No such consent was required for the marriage of her daughter, and no such consent is required now for the marriage of her granddaughter.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
Attorney-General.

Temple, September 29, 1903.

Inclosure in letter from Admiralty of
November 28, 1903.

No. 14^{B}.

CORRESPONDENCE having passed with the Treasury as to the date of cessation of salary of an official who had been summoned home to stand his trial on a criminal charge, as to which he was found guilty, that Department forwarded to this Office, in their letter of the 28th November, 1903, 18897/03, the following opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown in reference to a similar question which had arisen in regard to an official serving under the Admiralty :—

H. H. Miller, official, dismissed for fraud: As to date of cessation of salary.

ON the 10th September, 1900, the Admiral at Queenstown reported that on the audit of the Naval Canteen Accounts of Haulbowline Dockyard, certain irregularities on the part of Mr. Miller, who had been acting as Treasurer of the Naval Canteen at that place, had been brought to his notice.

Mr. Miller was the Deputy Victualling Store Officer and Cashier of the Victualling Yard at Haulbowline, and a Civil Servant, as defined in the Superannuation Acts, 1859 and 1887.

It appeared that during the months of April, July, and August, seven cheques, amounting in the aggregate to 1,036*l*., had been drawn by Mr. Miller on the Canteen Account at the Bank of Ireland, Queenstown, for the purpose of providing money for the payment of the Dockyard workmen. It was his duty as Treasurer of the Naval Canteen to receive the money taken by the Canteen Steward, and lodge it in the Canteen Account kept at the Bank of Ireland. On the audit of the Canteen Accounts it was found that he had drawn cheques on the Canteen Account at the Bank for considerable amounts payable to "self." When asked for an explanation he stated that he had done this to meet yard payments for which he had not received the necessary funds.

The Admiral further reported that as this course was highly irregular, he had suspended Mr. Miller, and placed the public chest in the charge of the Assistant Store Officer, and requested that an officer might be sent from the Admiralty to audit Mr. Miller's cash accounts. He added that he had no means of knowing if there were any deficiency in the public money, but Mr. Miller's action in using Canteen money for public purposes led him to suspect that there might be.

Mr. Roper, an officer of the Department of the Accountant-General of the Navy, was accordingly sent to Haulbowline to examine the cash accounts of the Dockyard. He completed his investigation by the 18th September, on which day the Admiral reported that a deficiency of 418*l*. was found in Mr. Miller's cash account. The Admiral further reported that he had called on Mr. Miller for an explanation, and that, as his answer was unsatisfactory, he had suspended him from all duties.

Mr. Miller's answer was that he regretted that he was unable to explain the apparent deficiency, but that he felt satisfied that the deficiency was only apparent, and not actual, and that some error would subsequently be discovered which would account for it. In the meantime he asked for seven days' leave to enable him to make arrangements for replacing the amount said to be deficient.

On the 19th September, 1900, Mr. Roper reported to the Admiralty the result of his investigation (a copy of his report is left herewith). It will be seen that Mr. Roper reported that there was no possibility of the deficiency of over 400*l*. being due to a clerical error.

On the 24th September, 1900, the Admiral at Queenstown reported that Mr. Miller had informed him that he was in a position to replace the money deficient if he was granted seven days' leave of absence to confer with his brother, and he (the Admiral) submitted that this be granted.

The Admiral was informed by letter of the 27th September that Mr. Miller might be allowed to leave Haulbowline as submitted.

On the 6th October, 1900, the Admiral reported that Mr. Miller left Haulbowline for the purpose of obtaining money to replace deficiency, and had not yet returned, though he should have returned on the 3rd October.

On the 8th October, 1900, Mr. Miller called at the Admiralty and stated that he was making arrangements to replace the deficiency in a few days. He called again at the Admiralty, as requested by telegram, and saw the Secretary, on the 11th October, 1900. It was arranged that he should have further time, and should return to Queenstown. He returned to Queenstown, and on the 17th October reported that he had been unable to procure the whole of the money required to replace the deficit, and asked that the balance might be deducted from moneys that might accrue to him thereafter. He still protested his inability to explain the deficit, and begged that their Lordships' clemency might be extended to him in consideration of the services of his family and himself in the Admiralty. He claimed that his action in first remaining at Haulbowline and afterwards reporting himself at the Admiralty showed that he had no desire to evade inquiry. He stated that he still felt confident that a full examination would reveal some error which would materially reduce, if it did not wholly absorb, the deficit.

On the 23rd October, 1900, the papers were referred to the Treasury Solicitor for advice. Mr. Chance reported that he had discussed the case with the Public Prosecutor, who was of opinion that, although there was no technical objection to a prosecution, it would not result in a conviction, the matter having, up to that time, been dealt with as one of account.

It was, however, on further consideration, decided by the Admiralty that criminal proceedings should be instituted against Mr. Miller, and Sir Patrick Coll, the Chief Crown Solicitor in Ireland, was, on the 14th November, 1900, requested to proceed accordingly. He instructed Mr. Henry T. Wright, Crown Solicitor for the county of Cork, to take charge of the prosecution. Mr. Miller was arrested on the 28th November, 1900, and eventually committed to take his trial at the Cork Assizes. He was tried on the 20th March, 1901, before Chief Baron Palles, and was acquitted. A copy of a report of the trial, taken from the "Cork Examiner," the only one which can be obtained, is sent herewith. As the Treasury Solicitor is informed that no shorthand notes of the evidence were taken, application has been made to the Crown Solicitor for copies of any statements of witnesses which were taken by him, and these will be furnished to the Law Officers as soon as received.

On the 22nd March, 1901, Mr. Miller wrote to the Secretary of the Admiralty reporting his acquittal, and requesting instructions as to where he was to report himself for duty. He also requested information as to the payment of his salary from the 31st August, 1900, the date of the last payment. After full consideration of his case, the Admiralty informed Mr. Miller, on the 29th May, 1901, that they had decided to remove him from his appointment, and that in view of the culpably careless manner in which he had discharged his duty, their Lordships had further decided that he was not fit to be employed in the public service, and that his services should be dispensed with in the future. They added that they did not propose to recommend to the Treasury that he should be granted any gratuity or pension.

1903

A copy of these letters and of the subsequent correspondence with Mr. Miller and his solicitor is left herewith.

On the 31st May, 1901, Mr. Miller wrote requesting that he might be informed of the Regulation under which their Lordships had dispensed with his services in view of the fact that the jury had found that the charge had not been proved. He also asked for his Certificate of Qualification issued by the Civil Service Commissioners to him, and retained by the Admiralty.

On the 10th June, 1901, Mr. Miller wrote with reference to the Admiralty letter of the 29th May, 1901, making a claim (subject to the assumption that the Regulations permitted of his services being dispensed with) for balance of pay, six months' pay in lieu of notice, and expenses incurred, amounting to 594*l.* 10*s.*, and stating that he assumed that he would receive the pension to which he was entitled by length of service from the date when his full pay ceased.

By Admiralty letter of the 21st June, 1901, Mr. Miller was informed that their Lordships had nothing to add to their letter of the 29th May, 1901, in regard to the decision to dispense with his services. He was also informed that their Lordships were not prepared to accede to his request that the Certificates of Qualification issued by the Civil Service Commissioners should be forwarded to him.

The correspondence was then taken by Mr. H. W. Bliss, Solicitor, acting for Mr. Miller, and on the 23rd October, 1901, Mr. Bliss wrote to the Treasury Solicitor the letter a copy of which is with the correspondence left herewith. His client's principal complaint appears to be that he was not allowed to examine the books, and so was prevented from showing that the deficit was the result of a mistake. This, however, is not in accordance with Mr. Roper's Report of the 19th September, 1900.

After an interview with Mr. Mellor at the Treasury on the 31st October, 1901, Mr. Bliss wrote on the 21st November to the Treasury Solicitor, informing him that he had taken Counsel's opinion and was advised that an action would lie against the Crown, and that, even if the Admiralty could prove that there was a balance due to them as a result of careless book-keeping, this could not be set off against arrears of salary.

The Accountant-General of the Navy has furnished a Memorandum, dated the 24th December, 1901, showing, with reference to Mr. Miller's letter of the 10th June, 1901, how his claim would have been dealt with apart from his dismissal, and if he had not been in debt to the Crown. A copy of this Memorandum is left herewith. It will be seen that the Admiralty do not admit that anything beyond the sum of 251*l.* would have been due to him for salary, which is considerably less than the deficiency on his accounts.

The rule of practice approved by the Treasury in the cases of Civil Servants dismissed after a period of suspension is that all claim to suspended pay is forfeited, but that special circumstances may warrant a relaxation of the rule, which is based upon the view that salary cannot be recovered and that payment up to dismissal is a matter of discretion. The sections of the Superannuation Acts which may be considered to bear on this case would appear to be section 2 of 22 Vict., cap. 26, and section 2 of 50 & 51 Vict., cap. 67.

It is apprehended that Mr. Miller's claim to salary in lieu of notice cannot be maintained in view of the decision in the case of Dunn v. The Queen, 1896, 1 Q.B., 116, and that his claim to pension cannot be enforced. (See Edmunds v. Attorney-General, 47 L.J. (N.S.), Ch. 345.)

In Boston Deep-Sea Fishers, &c., Co. v. Ansell, 39 Ch. D., 339, it was held that a servant who is dismissed for wrongful behaviour cannot recover his current salary which is not due and payable at the time of his dismissal, but which is only to accrue due and become payable at some later date, and on the condition that he had fulfilled his duty as a faithful servant down to that date.

But if Civil Servants hold at pleasure, and the Crown is not bound to give any length of notice to determine the service, the question arises whether the salary does not accrue due from day to day until the service is determined, and, if so whether the salary is payable to dismissal notwithstanding suspension for misconduct

As regards the right to set off the deficiency against any claim against the Crown Rule 3 of Order 19 provides that a defendant in an action may set off, or set up by way of counter-claim against the claims of the plaintiff, any right or claim, whether such set-off or counter-claim be sound in damages or not, and such set-off or counter-claim shall have the same effect as a cross-action, so as to enable the Court to pronounce a final Judgment in the same action, both on the original and on the cross-claim. But the Court or a Judge may, on the application of the plaintiff before trial—if in the opinion of the Court or Judge such set-off or counter-claim cannot be conveniently disposed of in the pending action, or ought not to be allowed—refuse permission to the defendant to avail himself thereof.

Their Lordships desire to be advised—

1. Whether Mr. Miller is liable in respect of the deficiency of public money in his hands.

2. Whether he is entitled to recover—
   (a.) The balance of his salary unpaid up to his dismissal;
   (b.) Up to the date of his suspension; or
   (c.) Any salary in lieu of notice.

3. In the event of the Law Officers being of opinion that any portion of Mr. Miller's salary is recoverable, whether the Admiralty can set off against his claim the amount of the loss of public money.

And, generally, on his claim.

Opinion.

1. Yes.

2. He is entitled to recover his salary up to the date of suspension only if there is a well-understood practice known to those in the Civil Service, by Regulations or otherwise, that salary stops on suspension. Otherwise, he will be entitled up to the date of dismissal. He is not entitled to any salary in lieu of notice.

3. Yes.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Law Officers' Department,
January 22, 1902.

JAPAN.

No. 15.

[February 23, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, January 16, 1903.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers indicated in the accompanying list on the subject of the recent action of the Japanese Government in prohibiting British lighters from plying for trading purposes between Yokohama and Tôkio.

British Lighters plying between Yokohama and Tôkiô.

The Japanese Government first showed signs of wishing to restrict British transport traffic in the Bay of Yedo in the early part of 1901, when British steam launches which had hitherto been allowed to ply in all the waters of the bay were compelled to restrict themselves to traffic in Yokohama Harbour, which forms an inlet in the bay (Paper A).

1903

In consequence of the complaints which ensued on this restriction, Mr. Whitehead, then His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Tôkiô, made representations to the Japanese Government; His Majesty's Minister, however, considers that there is now a prospect of the matter being satisfactorily settled locally (Paper E).

Meanwhile, evidently in pursuance of the same restrictive policy, a British firm established at Yokohama, Messrs. Helm Brothers, received a notice from the Japanese authorities, prohibiting them from continuing their business of forwarding goods on lighters from Yokohama to Tôkiô (Yedo), which they had been engaged on ever since foreigners had been allowed in that place (Paper B).

Sir C. MacDonald then addressed a note of remonstrance to the Japanese Government (Paper B, Inclosure 2), appealing not only to the general intention clearly revealed by the text of the Anglo-Japanese Convention of 1894 (Paper C), that equality of treatment should be accorded to Japanese and British subjects in Japan, but also to the specific provisions of Article III of that Treaty, as well as to the arrangements for the settlement of foreigners at Yedo, arrived at in 1867 between Sir H. Parkes and the Japanese Government (Paper D).

Paragraph 3 of Article III of the Treaty of 1894 runs as follows:—

"They (i.e., British and Japanese subjects) shall have liberty freely to come with their ships and cargoes to all places, ports, and rivers in the dominions and possessions of the other which are or may be opened to foreign commerce, and shall enjoy, respectively, the same treatment in matters of commerce and navigation as native subjects, or subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation, without having to pay taxes, imports, or duties, of whatever nature or under whatever denomination, levied in the name or for the profit of the Government, public functionaries, private individuals, Corporations, or establishments of any kind, other or greater than those paid by native subjects, or subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation, subject always to the Laws, Ordinances, and Regulations of each country."

The first sentence of Article 1 of the Arrangements of 1867 is to the following effect:—

"Within the limits . . . . , foreigners of nations having Treaties with Japanese may hire houses and reside for purposes of trade."

Sir C. MacDonald urged that foreigners being thus allowed in Tôkiô for purposes of trade, that place came under the provisions of Article III of the Treaty of 1894 as to the grant to foreign ships of access to places open to foreign commerce. He also quoted Article 7 of the Arrangements of 1867, which runs as follows:—

"Lighters, tow-boats, and passage-boats, propelled by steam or sails, and belonging to foreigners, may ply between Yedo and Yokohama for the conveyance of cargo and passengers under the Regulations annexed to the Agreement, and subject to the provisions of the Regulations of Trade attached to the Treaties.

The Japanese Government in their reply (Paper E, Inclosure 1,), take in turn all the Treaty provisions quoted by Sir C. MacDonald in support of his contention, and deny in each case their applicability to the action complained of by Messrs. Helm.

As they point out at the end of paragraph 3 of their note, they consider the whole question turns on whether Tôkiô is an "open port" in the sense in which the term is used in paragraph 3 of Article XI of the Treaty of 1894. They deny that Tôkiô is such an open port, and are, therefore, of opinion that foreigners cannot claim to enjoy at Tôkiô the right which they possess of carrying cargo between existing open ports of the Empire. In proof of this allegation the Japanese Government quote the words, "Yedo, however, is not an open port," which are to be found in Article 6 of the Arrangements of 1867.

In regard to Article III of the Treaty of 1894, the Japanese Government appear to have missed the point of Sir C. MacDonald's contention, which is that Tôkiô is a "place open to foreign commerce," and therefore free of access to foreign ships and cargoes in that they point out that foreign ships are not allowed, as are foreign nationals, to trade in any part of the Japanese dominions. This is not disputed. They also appear to distinguish between "international commerce" on the one hand, and "special transport business," carried on locally by foreigners, on the other.

As to the express mention of the rights of foreign lighters contained in Article 7 of the Arrangements of 1867, the Japanese Government consider that these rights stand or fall with the "Arrangements," and they hold that these last (together with all other Anglo-Japanese Agreements previous to the conclusion of the Treaty of 1894), have lapsed owing to the provision of Article XX of the Treaty, which says that the Treaty of 1894 shall be "substituted for all Arrangements and Agreements subsidiary" to the Conventions of 1854, 1858, and 1866, and that "from the date of the commencement of the new Treaty, the former Conventions, Treaty Arrangements, and Agreements shall cease to be binding and, in consequence, the jurisdiction then exercised by British Courts in Japan and all exceptional privileges, exemptions, and immunities then enjoyed by British subjects as a part of, or appurtenant to such jurisdiction, shall absolutely and without notice cease and determine," &c.

It seems clear to Lord Lansdowne that the Arrangements of 1867 would fall under the designation of "subsidiary" engagements; it is not, however, equally clear that the privileges referred to in Article XX are necessarily to be considered as at an end.

It is to be observed that the wording of Article XX is peculiar and explicit; it does not say that all privileges whatsoever shall cease; it specifies only those arising out of the extra-territorial jurisdiction; and, unless it can be shown that the stipulations of the Treaty of 1894 are inconsistent with the continued existence of the privilege to convey goods on lighters between Yokohama and Tôkiô, it seems to his Lordship that it may be held that the privilege remains, having been conferred, like many others, once for all, and that it is not dependent on the duration of the "Arrangements" preceding it. Neither Tôkiô nor any other so-called Treaty-ports are specially mentioned in the Treaty of 1894 which repeals previous Treaties; but I am to submit that it would not on that ground be arguable that, by reason of the abrogation of the previous Treaties, the ports therein declared to be open were now to be closed to foreign trade.

The context, on the contrary, would appear to imply that they are still open, and also that commercial facilities hitherto enjoyed by British subjects under the older Treaties remain unimpaired.

Tôkiô (Yedo) was opened as a residence for British subjects for the purposes of trade by Article III of the Treaty of the 26th August, 1858 (Paper F), which says:—

". . . . From the 1st January, 1862, British subjects shall be allowed to reside in the City of Yedo . . . for the purposes of trade only," &c.

The same Article declared that the ports and towns of Hakodate, Kanagawa, and Nagasaki should be opened to British subjects on the 1st July, 1859, and that Niigata or some other port on the west coast should be opened subsequently.

The Arrangements of 1867 contained the details for carrying out these stipulations (or some of them).

In the Arrangements respecting Yedo it is explained that that place is not an "open port," and that, therefore, foreign merchant-ships cannot anchor there, but must enter at Yokohama, where there is a custom-house. It is, however, added in Article 7 of the Arrangements already quoted (as a means whereby British subjects may carry on their trade at Yedo), that "lighters, tow-boats, and passage-boats . . . belonging to foreigners may ply between Yedo and Yokohama, for the conveyance of cargo and passengers."

This permission appears to Lord Lansdowne to be incidental to the opening of Yedo to British subjects for purposes of trade, and unless the Treaty of 1894 is to be understood as reversing all the stipulations of former Treaties (a construction which could hardly be seriously put forward), it must be held to be effective as long as British subjects are permitted to reside at Yedo for purposes of trade.

Moreover, it seems clear from the preamble and general tenour of the Treaty of 1894 that the curtailment of British privileges, except where specially expressed, was not present to the minds of the negotiators.

The preamble says that Her Majesty the Queen and the Emperor of Japan "being equally desirous of maintaining the relations of good understanding which happily exist between them, by extending and increasing the intercourse between their respective States have resolved upon a revision of the Treaties, based upon principles of equity and mutual benefit."

Article I of the Treaty declares that the subjects of each of the High Contracting Parties shall have full liberty to enter, travel, and reside in any part of the dominions and possessions of the other.

As was represented by Sir C. MacDonald to the Japanese Government, Article III says that there shall be reciprocal freedom of commerce and navigation between the respective dominions. The subjects of each Contracting Party "shall have liberty freely to come with their ships and cargoes to all places, ports, and rivers" in the dominions of the other "which are or may be opened to foreign commerce, and shall enjoy the same treatment in matters of commerce and navigation as native subjects" or those entitled to the most-favoured-nation treatment, subject always to the laws, &c., of each country.

1903

Tôkiô may not be open to foreign commerce as a port, having a custom-house, but it is evidently a "place" open to British subjects as a residence for purposes of trade, and that trade, as shown in the Arrangements of 1867, must be carried on in lighters, the cargoes having previously entered at the Yokohama Custom-house. This fact does not seem to be disputed by the Japanese Government, and as British subjects enjoy the same treatment in matters of navigation as native subjects, it would appear to follow that the intention of the Treaty of 1894 is that the privilege of owning and trading by means of lighters is vested in British subjects in future as it has been in the past.

As regards Article III of the Treaty, however, the Japanese Government would not appear themselves to rely implicitly on it in support of their contention that they have a right to exclude foreign lighters from plying between Yokohama and Tôkiô, as in their reply to Sir C. MacDonald (Paper E, Inclosure 1) they have, in quoting the Article, omitted the word "places," under which category Tôkiô would come.

I am to request that you will take the papers submitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Are the provisions of all Treaties concluded between Great Britain and Japan previously to that of 1894 (in cases where they are not explicitly or implicitly recognized by that Treaty), invalidated by Article XX thereof, even when these provisions do not deal with "exceptional privileges, exemptions and immunities" enjoyed hitherto by British subjects "as a part of, or as appurtenant to" the jurisdiction hitherto exercised by British Courts in Japan?

2. If so, would the Japanese be justified in taking advantage of the fact that Tôkiô is expressly stated in the "Arrangements" of 1867 not to be an "open port" (a status recognized in the Treaty of 1894), to revoke, at any time, the privileges granted to foreigners of residing in that place for trading purposes, if that Government desired to do so?

3. If not, was the privilege, granted to foreigners under Article 7 of the "Arrangements" of 1867, of carrying on lighter traffic between Yokohama and Tôkiô given once for all as an incidental to the permission given to foreigners to reside there for purposes of trade; or was the privilege dependent on the duration of the validity of the Arrangements?

4. Can Tôkiô, as a "place" where foreigners may reside for trading purposes be considered "open to foreign commerce" in the sense in which it is used in Article III of the Treaty of 1894; and, if so, are British subjects entitled at Tôkiô to the privileges granted to them in Article XI of the same Treaty, of carrying "cargo between the existing open ports of the Empire, excepting the ports of Osaka, Niigata, and Ebisu-minato"?

5. If Tôkiô is "open to foreign commerce" are the Japanese Government entitled to deprive British subjects living there of the privileges explicitly granted to them previously to the conclusion of the Treaty of 1894 (such as those given under Article 7 of the Arrangement as to lighter traffic), seeing that, in the case of open ports, that Treaty implicitly provides for the continuance of all such privileges?

His Lordship will also be glad to receive any observations of a general character which you may be good enough to offer on the subject of this reference.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 11)	February 17, 1902.
(B.)	Ditto	(No. 94)	August 9, „
(C.)	Treaty between His Majesty's Government and Japan. [Treaty Library No. 957. C.—7588.]		July 16, 1894.
(D.)	Arrangements of 1867. [See Conf. 1579.]
(E.)	Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 121)	October 28, 1902.
(F.)	Treaty between His Majesty's Government and Japan. [Treaty Library No. 433.]		August 26, 1858.

Report.

We do not think that Article XX of the Treaty of 1894 can be construed so as to limit its effect to merely putting an end to the jurisdiction formerly exercised by British Courts in Japan and the privileges of British subjects under such arrangement. The Treaty of 1894 seems to have been intended to determine the previously existing Treaties and to define the rights of the subjects of each Power in the country of the other. Whether any previously existing privileges, exemptions, or immunities have been determined by this Treaty must depend upon a consideration of the circumstances of any case which may arise, and the effect of the Treaty thereon.

2. We do not think, having regard to Article III, that the Japanese could during the existence of the Treaty of 1894 refuse to foreigners the right to reside in Tôkiô for the purposes of trade. This right is not affected by the question as to whether Tôkiô is an open port or not and results from Articles I and III of the Treaty.

3. The right granted under the special Arrangements made in 1867 was dependent on the duration of such Arrangements. The question now depends on the Treaty of 1894.

4 and 5. We are of opinion that, upon the true construction of Article III of the Treaty of 1894, the port of Tôkiô should be considered a port open to foreign commerce to the extent to which it was so open before the Treaty, viz., by traffic in lighters, &c., from Yokohama, and that there is therefore nothing in the Treaty indicating any intention to limit the rights and privileges which previously existed at Tôkiô. We therefore think that British subjects are still entitled to the same privileges as to lighter, &c., traffic as existed before the Treaty.

Generally, it might be arguable that the right to bring in lighters goods which have been imported into a port open to foreign commerce is incident to the right to trade conferred by Article III, like the right to carry such goods by road to the place of trade, unless the circumstances are such as to constitute coasting trade within the meaning of Article XI; but it does not appear to be necessary to raise this general question in the present case.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 23, 1903.

No. 16.

[August 13, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 11, 1903.

Arbitration respecting Taxation in former foreign Settlements in Japan.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the accompanying papers relating to the forthcoming arbitration at The Hague between Great Britain, France, and Germany on the one side, and Japan on the other side, with reference to the power of the Japanese Government to tax property in the former foreign Settlements in Japan.

These foreign Settlements ceased to exist when the Treaty of 1894, which swept away the British extra-territorial jurisdiction in Japan, came into force.

Article XVIII of that Treaty provided for the Settlements being incorporated in the Japanese communes; it also provided for the confirmation of the leases under which property was then held in the Settlements, and stipulated that no conditions whatsoever other than those contained in the existing leases should be imposed in respect of such property.

The actual words of the Article were as follows:—

"ARTICLE XVIII.

"Her Britannic Majesty's Government, so far as they are concerned, give their consent to the following arrangement:—

"The several foreign Settlements in Japan shall be incorporated with the respective Japanese Communes, and shall thenceforth form part of the general municipal system of Japan.

1903

"The competent Japanese authorities shall thereupon assume all municipal obligations and duties in respect thereof, and the common funds and property, if any, belonging to such Settlements, shall at the same time be transferred to the said Japanese authorities.

"When such incorporation takes place the existing leases in perpetuity under which property is now held in the said Settlements shall be confirmed, and no conditions whatsoever other than those contained in such existing leases shall be imposed in respect of such property. It is, however, understood that the Consular authorities mentioned in the same are in all cases to be replaced by the Japanese authorities.

"All lands which may previously have been granted by the Japanese Government free of rent for the public purposes of the said Settlements shall, subject to the right of eminent domain, be permanently reserved free of all taxes and charges for the public purposes for which they were originally set apart."

The corresponding Articles of the French and German Treaties were (in the French Treaty) :—

"ARTICLE XXI.

"Le Gouvernement de la République Française donne, en ce qui le concerne, son adhésion à l'arrangement suivant :

"Les divers quartiers étrangers qui existent au Japon seront incorporés aux communes respectives du Japon et feront dès lors partie du système municipal du Japon.

"Les autorités Japonaises compétentes assumeront en conséquence toutes les obligations et tous les devoirs municipaux qui résultent de ce nouvel état de choses, et les fonds et biens municipaux qui pourraient appartenir à ces quartiers seront, de plein droit, transférés aux dites autorités Japonaises.

"Lorsque les changements ci-dessus indiqués auront été effectués, les baux à perpétuité en vertu desquels les étrangers possèdent actuellement des propriétés dans les quartiers seront confirmés, et les propriétés de cette nature ne donneront lieu à aucuns impôts, taxes, charges, contributions, ou conditions quelconques autres que ceux expressément stipulés dans les baux en question. Il est entendu toutefois qu'aux autorités Consulaires dont il y est fait mention seront substituées les autorités Japonaises.

"Les terrains que le Gouvernement Japonais aurait concédés exempts de rente, vu l'usage public auquel ils étaient affectés, resteront, sous la réserve de droits de la souveraineté territoriale, affranchis d'une manière permanente de tous impôts, taxes, et charges ; et ils ne seront point détournés de l'usage auquel ~~ils~~ était primitivement destinés."

In the German Treaty :—

"ARTIKEL XVIII.

"Die vertragschliessenden Theile sind über Folgendes einverstanden :—

"Die einzelnen Fremdenniederlassungen in Japan sollen in betreffenden japanischen Gemeinden einverleibt werden und hinfort Bestandtheile der japanischen Gemeinden bilden.

"Die zuständischen japanischen Behörden sollen demnach mit Bezug auf dieselben alle Verbindlichkeiten und Verpflichtungen übernehmen, welchen ihnen hinsichtlich der Gemeinden obliegen, und gleichzeitig sollen die öffentlichen Gelder und Vermögensverstände, welche diesen Niederlassungen gehören, den genannten japanischen Behörden übergeben werden.

"Sobald diese Einverleibung erfolgt, sollen die bestehenden, zeitlich unbegrenzten Ueberlassungsverträge, unter welchen jetzt in den gedachten Niederlassungen Grundstücke besessen werden, bestätigt und hinsichtlich dieser Grundstücke sollen keine Bedingungen irgend einer anderen Art auferlegt werden, als sie in den bestehenden Ueberlassungsverträgen enthalten sind.

"Die Besitzrechte an diesen Niederlassungsgrundstücken können in Zukunft von ihren Besitzern frei und, ohne dass es dazu, wie bisher in gewissen Fällen, der Genehmigung der konsularischen oder japanischen Behörden bedarf, an Inländer oder Ausländer veräussert werden.

"Im Uebrigen gehen die nach den ursprünglichen Ueberlassungsverträgen den Konsularbehörden zustehenden Funktionen auf die japanischen Behörden über.

"Alle Ländereien, welche von die japanischen Regierung für öffentliche Zwecke der Fremdenniederlassung bisher Zinsfrei hergegeben worden sind, sollen, unbeschadet der aus der Gebietshoheit sich ergebenden Rechte, frei von allen Steuern und Lasten den öffentlichen Zwecken, für welche sie ursprünglich bestimmt worden, dauernd erhalten bleiben."

On the date on which the German Treaty was signed, complementary notes were exchanged between the German Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and the Japanese Minister at Berlin, from which the following are extracts from the former's note :—

"3. dass, da das Eigenthum an den im Artikel XVIII des Vertrages erwähnten Niederlassungsgrundstücken dem japanischen Staate verbleibt, die Besitzer oder deren Rechtsnachfolger für ihre Grundstücke ausser dem kontraktmässigen Grundzins Abgaben oder Steuern irgend welcher Art nicht zu entrichten haben werden."

and from the note of the Japanese Minister in reply—

"dass die darin unter Nummer 1 bis 4 zum Ausdruck gebrachten Voraussetzungen, welche den Erwerb dinglicher Rechte an Grundstücken, die Errichtung von Waarenhäusern, die Steuerfreiheit der Grundstücke in den Fremdenniederlassungen und die Erhaltung wohlerworbener Rechte nach Ablauf des Vertrages zum Gegenstande haben, in allen Punkten zutreffend sind."

The Treaties came into operation in 1899, and it at once became apparent that the Japanese Government placed a very much narrower interpretation upon these clauses than did the land-renters and the foreign Governments concerned.

The diplomatic correspondence that ensued between 1899 and 1902 chiefly centred round two points—(a) the claim of the Japanese Government to treat the tenure created by the perpetual leases as equivalent to "superficies" under the Japanese Civil Code ; (b) the claim of the Japanese Government to sever the houses from the land on which they are built in accordance with the Japanese custom, and to impose the same taxes upon the houses as are paid by Japanese, thus confining the operation of the third paragraph of Article XVIII of the Treaty with Great Britain, and of the corresponding portions of the Treaties with France and Germany, to the ground on which the houses stand.

On the first point the Japanese Government gave way, and by a law promulgated on the 20th September, 1901, enacted that subject to the terms of the title-deeds the provisions of the Civil Code as to ownership should apply to the rights created by a perpetual lease.

On the second point they declined to give way, but ultimately agreed to submit the question to arbitration. For this purpose a Protocol was signed on the 28th August, 1902, at Tôkiô, under which the question at issue is to be submitted to an Arbitral Tribunal, composed of three members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration of The Hague, one to be named by each of the parties to the arbitration and the two so named to choose the third ; and the question at issue was defined by Article II to be :—

"Whether or not the provisions of the Treaties and other engagements above quoted exempt only land held under leases in perpetuity granted by or on behalf of the Japanese Government, or land and buildings of whatever description, constructed, or which may hereafter be constructed, on such land, from any imposts, taxes, charges, contributions, or conditions whatsoever, other than those expressly stipulated in the leases in question."

Article VIII provided that for the purposes of the arbitration the Government of Japan should be regarded as one party, and the Governments of Great Britain, France, and Germany, jointly, should be regarded as the other party.

It was at first intended that the three European Governments should each draw up their own Case, and under instructions from the Foreign Office the preparation of the British Case was undertaken in Japan ; later on it was decided to have a Joint 1903

Case, but the work was continued at Tôkiô by a Committee representing the various Legations.

After a considerable delay, the draft of a Case was completed by Mr. Bonar, His Majesty's Consul at Yokohama, no person of legal training or experience being available.

The Representatives of the three Governments concurred in the draft, and it was sent home with the proposal that, after being considered by the Foreign Offices in London, Paris, and Berlin, the draft should be revised by a Committee of Representatives before its final submission to the Tribunal.

A copy of the draft Case, with its proposed annexes, will be found in the bundle of papers marked (A).

Arrangements have been made for the selection by the French Government of the Arbitrator to be appointed by the three European Governments, and they have selected a French jurist, M. Reynault. The Japanese Government have selected as their Arbitrator M. Motono, their Minister in Paris, who knows French, but does not know English.

It is therefore obvious that the Case must be presented to the Arbitrators in French, and it will probably be convenient that the actual wording should be left to the French Government.

Lord Lansdowne is advised that the terms of the Protocol of the 28th August exclude oral arguments, and he would be glad to be favoured with your opinion whether this view is correct.

Mr. A. B. Walford, a barrister, formerly in practice at Yokohama, who has had considerable local experience of the question, has been retained to represent His Majesty's Government with Mr. Bonar on the Revision Committee, and the Committee is to meet in Paris on the 17th instant.

The draft Case has been since its arrival in London subjected to careful consideration by Mr. Walford, in concert with Mr. Hurst, the Assistant Legal Adviser to this Department, and with Mr. Bonar.

It will be seen from a perusal of the Case that it is directed towards claiming, first, a complete exemption from all taxation—Imperial, Prefectural, or municipal—imposed on property held by land-renters in the former foreign Settlements, both land and buildings; and, secondly, complete exemption for the owners of such Settlement property from all taxes or impositions levied to raise money for municipal purposes, whether charged on the property or not, upon the ground that the annual payment or ground-rent is a commutation for all municipal services.

It is obvious that the scope of the Case as drafted is far more extensive than the question at issue as defined in the Protocol of 1902, and it also appears to Lord Lansdowne to travel beyond the points raised and the claims made in the diplomatic correspondence that took place before the agreement for arbitration was entered into.

It appears to have been thought at Tôkiô that it would be possible to obtain from the Tribunal an award that would explain what was the correct interpretation of Article XVIII of the Treaty of 1894 and the corresponding Articles of the French and German Treaties, and would indicate how those Articles should be applied.

It will also be seen that the arguments in support of each claim are not clearly distinguished in the draft Case, but are worked up together in a way that renders it somewhat difficult to follow.

The reasons which have led to the Case being given so extended a scope are believed to be as follows: the English system of raising money for municipal purposes exclusively by rates assessed on the property is not followed in Japan; direct impositions on the property form but a small part of the money raised for local purposes in that country, the greater portion being levied by adding a percentage on to the amount of Imperial taxes paid by inhabitants of the town. Many of these Imperial taxes, such as the income tax, are not assessed on the property at all, or only to a very slight extent. Assuming, therefore, that the members of the Tribunal decided unanimously against the Japanese contention, and held that the exemption from taxation extended to both land and buildings, it would still be open to the Japanese authorities, while continuing to exact the ground-rent, to levy upon the holders of the old Settlement property exactly the same municipal contributions that are paid by the native owners. In this way the holders of the Settlement property would be made to pay twice over for municipal services, first in ground-rent and then in municipal taxes, and no benefit would have resulted from the arbitration.

To avoid this result the Case puts forward the claim for exemption from all municipal taxation for the owners of Settlement property based chiefly on the contention that the ground rent was a commutation for all municipal taxation, and that such was an incident of the tenure of Settlement property which the confirmation of the leases provided for in the Treaty of 1894 must be taken to have perpetuated.

The exemption from payment of the municipal percentages on the Imperial taxes is also of far greater importance financially to the landholders than the exemption from municipal taxes imposed directly on the property.

The bearings of this question may perhaps not have been fully understood at the time the Protocol of 1902 (which defines the question at issue) was negotiated, and Lord Lansdowne is advised that the terms of Article II will enable the Tribunal to avoid giving any award upon the second head of the claim.

I am also to refer you to the opinion given by the Law Officers on the 11th September, 1901, in which you reported on the papers then laid before you that no such exemption could be claimed.

Mr. Hurst and Mr. Walford consider that there is nothing revealed by the consideration the Case has undergone since that date, and by the documents and papers now produced, which shows that that opinion requires reconsideration.

Lord Lansdowne therefore proposes to instruct the British Representatives at the Revision Committee in Paris to suggest that the Case should be rearranged under three heads:—

1. Claiming exemption from taxation directly imposed either on the land or the houses, upon the ground that the word "property" in Article XVIII of the Treaty of 1894 covers both land and houses.

2. Claiming exemption for the owners of Settlement property from all taxation imposed for municipal purposes, upon the ground that, as the annual payment or ground rent was a commutation for all municipal services, any further municipal taxation would constitute a variation of the tenure and the imposition of a new condition in respect of the property.

3. Claiming relief upon equitable grounds, as it is unreasonable that holders of Settlement property should pay the same municipal taxes as the Japanese and ground rent as well.

The accompanying Memorandum (Paper B), prepared by Mr. Walford in the form of a Report on the draft Case, contains an outline of the argument that Lord Lansdowne is advised may reasonably be put forward in support of 1 and also in support of 2, and which he purposes, subject to your opinion on their validity, to instruct the British Representatives to put forward at the meetings of the Revision Committee in Paris.

As the arguments under 3 will consist mainly of figures, &c., drawn from Japanese municipal accounts, it is not considered necessary to trouble you with them at the present stage. The claim under 2 is so important to the holders of Settlement property that Lord Lansdowne proposes to concur in its being submitted to the Tribunal if the Governments of France and Germany concur, provided that the Case is so arranged that its inclusion will not endanger the claim under 1.

Accompanying the draft Case will be found a number of Annexes, but Lord Lansdowne is advised that many of them are not, in their present shape, suitable for incorporation in the Appendix to the Case. Extracts are printed instead of whole documents; italics are introduced which were not present in the originals; and some of the documents consist of Memoranda or statements of fact which are unsupported by proof in any way.

A list is accordingly inclosed (Paper C) of the documents that, so far as His Majesty's Government are concerned, will be required, though additions will no doubt be made by the Representatives of France and Germany.

I am to request you to take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion—

1. Whether the terms of the Protocol of the 28th August, 1902, exclude oral argument before the Tribunal at The Hague, where it has been decided that it shall sit.

2. Whether you consider that the arguments outlined in the accompanying Memorandum may be put forward by the British Representatives at the Paris Revision Committee.

His Lordship will also be glad to be favoured with any observations of a general character that you may have to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

1903

List of Papers.

(A.) Draft Case and Annexes.
(B.) Mr. Walford's Memorandum, [?] August 11, 1903.
(C.) List of Annexes required.
(D.) Protocol of August 28, 1902.
(E.) Law Officers' opinion of April 4, 1900.
(F.) Law Officers' opinion of September 11, 1901.
(G.) Treaty between Great Britain and Japan of July 16, 1894, Library No. 957.
(H.) Treaty between France and Japan of August 4, 1896, State Papers, Vol. 88, p. 530.
(I.) Treaty between Germany and Japan of April 4, 1896, State Papers, Vol. 88, p. 582

PROPOSED List of Exhibits.

1. Protocol of Tôkiô, August 28, 1902, Library No. 1160.
2. Anglo-Japanese Treaty, 1894	Volume of Treaties and Conventions, p. 37.
3. Franco-Japanese Treaty, 1896	Ditto, p. 237.
4. German-Japanese Treaty, 1896	Ditto, p. 131.
5. British Treaty, 1858	Volume (1884) of Treaties and Conventions, p. 418.
6. French Treaty, 1858	Ditto, p. 291.
7. Prussian Treaty, 1861	Ditto, p. 367.
8. North German Treaty, 1869	Ditto, p. 392.
9. Austro-Hungarian Treaty, 1869	Ditto, p. 1.
10. United States of America Treaty, 1858	Ditto, p. 717.
11. Japanese draft Treaty, April 2, 1887	Confidential Print, 1887, p. 100.
12. Report of the Commercial Committee	Ditto, p. 191.
12A. Letter. Mr. Braess to Mr. Van der Pot	Ditto, p. 203.
13. Viscount Aoki to the Committee	Ditto, p. 204.
14. Japanese draft of Article XXII	Blue Book, 1894 (Japan), p. 2.
15. 1889. British counter-draft (Article XXV)	Ditto, p. 12.
16. 1890. British counter-draft (Article XXV) as amended	Ditto, p. 30.
17. Memorandum of interview, April 2, 1894	Ditto, p. 92.
18. „ by Viscount Aoki, April 11, 1894	Ditto, p. 95.
19. „ of interview, April 24, 1894	Ditto, p. 99.
20. „ „ May 7, 1894	Ditto, p. 106.
21. Draft Article proposed by Great Britain	Ditto (Annex B), p. 108.
22. Memorandum of interview, May 25, 1894	Ditto, p. 111.
23. Japanese draft Article	Ditto, p. 114.
24. Land Regulations, &c.	As printed in Exhibit "C 1."
25. Marquis Ito's communication, March 30, 1868	Volume (1884) of Treaties and Conventions, p. 1134.
26. Kobe Hill Lots Arrangement, 1888	Volume II of Treaties and Conventions, p. 406.
27. Specimen Title Deeds	As produced in Exhibit "D 1."
28. Specimen Transfers	Ditto, "E 1."
29. Correspondence between British Legation and Japanese Foreign Office	As printed in Exhibit "F 1."
30. 1860 Correspondence between British Legation and Japanese Government	Ditto, "F 5."
31. 1860 Correspondence between British Consul at Kanagawa and local Japanese authorities	Ditto, "G 1."
32. 1860 Correspondence between British Consul at Nagasaki and British Minister at Tôkiô	Ditto, "G 2."
33. Imperial Ordinance No. 329	Confidential Print, 1899, p. 130.
34. „ „ No. 458	Ditto, 1900, p. 41.
35. Perpetual Lease Law, 1900	As printed in Exhibit "I 4."
36. 1867 or 1868 Correspondence relating to Form of Title Deed for Yokohama Bluff Land	To be obtained from Japan.
37. Kobe Foreign Settlement Municipal Accounts 1890 to 1899	Ditto.
38. Japanese Government Notification promulgating the Treaty of 1894	Translation to be made; original in Japanese only.
39. Japanese Income Tax Forms	As printed in Exhibit "I 8."
40. Business Tax Law, Articles 12 and 18	Ditto, "I 5," p. 35.
41. Law concerning the Registration of Immoveables (February 24, 1899), Article 1	To be obtained.
42. Registration Fees Law, Articles 1 and 2	As printed in Exhibit "I 5," p. 113.
43. Speech of Mr. Uchida	Confidential Print, 1901, p. 23.
44. Stamp Law, Articles 1 and 2	As printed in Exhibit "I 5," p. 144.

Report.

1. We answer this question in the affirmative.

2. As the Committee are to meet on the 17th instant, and the very voluminous papers in this case were only delivered yesterday, it would be impossible for us to express any opinion which would be of any value on the validity of the arguments in the Memorandum.

R. B. F.
E. C.

NETHERLANDS.

No. 17.

[February 27, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, July 31, 1902.

Foreign Consuls taking evidence in Great Britain.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to inclose a note from the Netherland Minister at this Court, in which he inquires (1) whether it is competent for a Netherland Consul in Great Britain to take evidence on oath from witnesses who come before him spontaneously, without infringing English law; and (2) if so, whether the matter is affected by the Consul being a British subject.

With regard to the first point, I am to refer you to two Reports from the Law Officers of the Crown, dated respectively the 6th May, 1884, and the 17th January, 1887 (copies of which are inclosed), in which divergent opinions are expressed.

On the second point, Lord Lansdowne assumes that it would be immaterial to the issue whether the Consul were a British or a foreign subject.

I am to request that you will take Baron Gericke's note into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to the reply which should be returned to the question he raises.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

Baron Gericke	January 1, 1902.
Law Officers	May 6, 1884.
Ditto	January 17, 1887.

Report.

1. Though there is an absence of legal authority for taking evidence on oath before a foreign Consul in Great Britain, we cannot, as the taking of such oaths seems to have prevailed to a considerable extent, and for a long time without objection, advise any proceedings to put a stop to the practice.

Lord Coke lays down in general terms that the administration of oaths without authority is punishable at common law by fine and imprisonment (3 Inst. 165), but there is a total absence of any precedent in the books for a proceeding of this nature, and there is nothing to show that Lord Coke's dictum is applicable to proceedings before a foreign Consular officer, and for the purposes only of a suit in the foreign country.

2. The matter is not affected by the Consul being a British subject.

1903

3. We would suggest that Baron Gericke be informed that His Majesty's Government does not propose, under present circumstances, to raise any objection to the continuance of the practice in question.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 27, 1903.

No. 18.

[July 29, 1903.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, June 18, 1903.

Gentlemen,

Mr. Godden's claims in Aruba: Land concessions, working of phosphates, &c.

I AM directed by the Marquess of Lansdowne to transmit to you herewith copy of a letter from Mr. John Godden relating to his complaints against the action of the Netherland Colonial authorities in the Islands of Curaçao and Aruba, as well as copies of letters from Mr. Henniker Heaton, M.P., and Mr. Ernest Flower, M.P., on the same subject.

Various points arising out of Mr. Godden's claims have been submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown on previous occasions, and reports have been received in reply, dated respectively the 28th April, 1886, the 30th March, 1887, the 29th February, 1888, the 11th November, 1899, and the 22nd July, 1901.

Copies of these papers are inclosed for convenience of reference, together with a Memorandum prepared in this Office and dated the 12th March, 1888.

Mr. Godden's first complaint referred to the assessment of his estate at Santa Barbara in Curaçao for purposes of taxation. The local authorities, it seems, decided to tax the land according to its mineral value rather than according to its value as agricultural land. The amount payable by Mr. Godden was consequently greatly increased. The matter was referred in March 1886 by the Earl of Rosebery to the then Law Officers of the Crown and to Dr. Deane, Q.C., who were of opinion that the interpretation placed upon the terms of the Ordinance No. 20 of the 20th December, 1881, by the Netherland Government was not incorrect, and that the case afforded no ground for the further intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Godden subsequently submitted a statement of his grievances against the Colonial authorities of Curaçao and Aruba in respect of a Concession of lands obtained by him in the latter island for agricultural and stock-breeding purposes.

The right to work the lime phosphate deposits was, however, put up for public tender and granted, notwithstanding Mr. Godden's protest, to another concessionnaire, who afterwards transferred his rights to the Aruba Phosphate Company, whose operations, as Mr. Godden alleged, were prejudicial to his agricultural interests.

He further complained that he was not permitted to blast stones on Aruba, although the right to do so was conceded to the Aruba Phosphate Company.

A third grievance was that he was not allowed to store gunpowder in Aruba, the Regulations in force in Curaçao not being applicable in that island, while the Aruba Phosphate Company kept their powder close to their works.

The system of assessment applied in the case of the Santa Barbara estate was again brought forward, and, owing to the refusal of the authorities to supply the complainant with a copy of the Register of Mortgages for the Island of Aruba, this further (and fifth) grievance was submitted at a later period.

Mr. Godden also stated that he had appealed to the Courts of Law, but that no qualified person would undertake the conduct of his case.

The points raised in Mr. Godden's complaints involved a number of questions of Dutch Law, and Her Majesty's Minister at the Hague was requested to obtain the opinion of a Netherland jurist thereon. In the meanwhile a sixth complaint was received from Mr. Godden, who stated that a Decree of the Government of Curaçao, dated the 23rd November, 1868, No. 654, permitted concessionnaires on Aruba, who had been in possession for three years, as from the 1st January, 1869, to acquire the ownership of the soil by paying into the Colonial Treasury a reasonable amount for the properties. Mr. Godden, however, declared that on applying to the authorities for leave to take advantage of this Regulation, the Governor of Aruba had replied that the Government was "not disposed, for the present, to grant in property grounds in Aruba to any one, whomsoever it may be." This point was submitted with the others to the legal expert at the Hague, who gave it as his opinion that none of Mr. Godden's complaints were well founded.

The case was then again laid before the Law Officers of the Crown, who dissented from the view taken by the Netherland jurist in respect of Mr. Godden's first complaint, viz., that in granting to Mr. Godden his agricultural Concession in Aruba, the Netherland authorities had reserved the minerals, and were entitled to grant to other parties the right to work them.

The Law Officers considered that the language of the Ordinance relating to such Concessions (May 8–9, 1867, No. 4) did not amount to a reservation of the property in the minerals, and still less of any right of going upon the land in order to take them. They held that the Colonial Government was not authorized to put up to tender and to grant to another concessionnaire a licence to go upon Mr. Godden's land and extract minerals therefrom.

They further thought that Mr. Godden ought not to be expected to sue Netherland subjects in a Netherland Court of Justice for wrongs due to the action of the Netherland Government; and they stated that in their opinion a claim could be made for payment to Mr. Godden and those claiming under him of a fair equivalent for the profit made by the Aruba Phosphate Company out of the deposits on his land.

The Law Officers also considered that the refusal of the local authorities to give Mr. Godden a copy of the Register of Mortgages was a substantial grievance.

The Netherland Government denied all liability in respect of the extraction of the phosphates from Mr. Godden's land, and referred him to the Courts of Law. They, however, admitted that an error had been committed in refusing a copy of the Register of Mortgages, and expressed their regret.

The reply of the Netherland Government was referred to the Law Officers, who were of opinion that the explanations given by them should be accepted.

As regards Mr. Godden's other complaints, their view coincided with those of the Netherland expert.

Mr. Godden was accordingly informed that no further representations would be made on his behalf.

This was the state of the case in March 1888.

On the 24th July, 1899, Mr. Godden again addressed a letter to the Marquess of Salisbury in support of his claims, transmitting copies of certain documents relative to the action taken by him.

The first of these is a statement in which he recapitulates his grievances against the Administration of Curaçao. He begins by adducing a number of Ordinances which he alleges to have been contravened to his prejudice, and states that the local Government have received 235,000*l.* for royalty, export duty, and share of profits in the phosphates out of the land in dispute, and that the Aruba Phosphate Company has made a net profit of over 136,000*l.*

In 1891 Mr. Godden addressed a Memorial to the Netherland Minister for the Colonies. In this he emphasizes the fact that the Concession granted to work certain estates in Aruba gives the owners the right to work them for agricultural purposes, "which right necessarily implies the prerogative to hold and use the surface of the soil to the exclusion of every other person." The grant of Concessions to another person or persons to work phosphate deposits was, he considered, a direct infringement of his rights.

Another point to which he drew attention is that in the Concession granted to Mr. Sewell (who afterwards sold it to the Aruba Phosphate Company), it is stipulated that "the concessionnaire is obliged to allow upon the lands granted the exercise of rights to those who may have obtained them upon any portion of such lands for the purposes of agriculture."

It is undoubtedly the case that the operations of the Phosphate Company must interfere with agriculture as the phosphate deposits form the actual surface soil of that part of the island.

Mr. Godden then proceeded to dilate on the delays to which his suit had been exposed in the Courts of Justice at Curaçao, and stated that the Counsel for the defendants had openly declared that it was proposed to endeavour to delay proceedings until the deposits were exhausted.

He next pointed out that there is a clause in the Concession of the Aruba Phosphate

1903

Company which prescribes that the Concession shall be null and void whenever the concessionnaire fails to carry out any of the obligations imposed on him. Mr. Godden contended that the Government of Curaçao ought to apply this clause because his rights had been infringed by the Phosphate Company, although the Administration recognized the existence of these rights by receiving every year the special tax levied on his Concession. He then alluded to the refusal of the Governor of Curaçao to entertain his request to be permitted to acquire the ownership of the soil by payment to the Treasury.

Mr. Godden requested the Netherland Minister of the Colonies to cause the nullity clause to be applied to the Aruba Concession, to sell the ownership of the land to himself or rather to the Alliance Phosphate Company (which he represented, being Managing Director and chief shareholder), and to cause a portion of the sum of 2,324,500 guilders to be paid to him.

The Netherland Minister for the Colonies refused to accede to these requests.

In a letter to the Minister for the Colonies, Mr. Godden contests the reasons on which this refusal is founded, more especially with reference to the request to acquire the ownership of the land.

From the Foreign Office Memorandum of March 1888, p. 5, it will be perceived that the Netherland legal expert was of opinion that Mr. Godden had no "right" to have his Concession in Aruba converted into ownership.

The Dutch Government, however, contended that only the concessionnaires of the three years 1869, 1870, and 1871 could have acquired the ownership, whilst persons who obtained their Concessions only in 1873 and 1874 (Mr. Godden purchased his on the 1st December, 1875) were debarred from any such right. Mr. Godden pointed out that this argument was not employed by the Lieutenant-Governor of Aruba, who based his refusal to accede to Mr. Godden's request on his own arbitrary will and pleasure.

The Netherland Minister for Foreign Affairs would not modify the decision previously come to with regard to Mr. Godden's case.

Mr. Godden obtained both a Dutch and an English legal opinion on the Law of the 23rd November, 1868, by which concessionnaires who have been in possession for three years can acquire absolute ownership, in support of his contention that this Law does not only apply to the years 1869, 1870, and 1871, and that the Netherland Government are bound to compensate him for the infringements of his rights by the grant of a Concession to the Aruba Phosphate Company. The English legal expert considered that the interpretation placed on the Law by the Dutch Minister of the Colonies was not in accordance with the principles of general jurisprudence.

The Law Officers replied on the 11th November, 1899, that they did not think there was any ground for renewed representations to the Netherland Government in favour of Mr. Godden.

The Concession to Mr. Godden was only for agricultural purposes. It was, in their opinion, quite clear that he had not under this Concession any right to remove the phosphates. His claim, therefore, could at the outside be only for disturbance of agricultural operations. This was not the claim which he made, and his claim to the value of the phosphate which had been realized appeared to them to be quite unfounded.

In this respect they thought that the Report of the Law Officers of the 30th March, 1887, went too far in suggesting that a claim might be made for the profit made in working the phosphates.

It was, in their opinion, open to very serious question whether Mr. Godden had any claim even for damage to his agricultural operations. The question depended upon Dutch Law, and they were not in a position to dissent from the view which M. de Brauw took as to the effect of the reservation of minerals. If phosphate of lime be included in this reservation, it was possible that there would be a right on the part of the Government to authorize the breaking up the surface for the purpose of getting these minerals, even though they themselves formed the surface of the ground. It was, however, enough to say that Mr. Godden's claim was not for damage sustained by him in pursuit of agriculture.

It appeared from M. de Brauw's supplementary opinion that the effect of the Resolution of the 23rd November, 1868, had been misunderstood by Mr. Godden and his advisers. According to M. de Brauw, this Resolution had not the force of law, but was a mere Resolution of the Executive Government, which might, or might not, be acted on at their discretion, and upon this view, from which the Law Officers saw no reason to dissent, it conferred no right upon any one to the acquisition of the fee.

Moreover, M. de Brauw stated that this Resolution had been mistranslated by Mr. Godden, and, according to the translation which he gave as being correct, the Resolution was only in favour of those who had occupied for three years consecutively, reckoning from the 1st January, 1869. This Resolution, if M. de Brauw was correct in his translation, would have no application to Mr. Godden.

The Law Officers added that it is by no means clear that acquisition under the Resolution would enlarge the rights of the concessionnaire so as to confer a title to the minerals.

Upon the whole, therefore, the then Law Officers were unable to advise Her Majesty's Government further to press Mr. Godden's case.

In July 1901, Mr. Godden forwarded to this Office an opinion given by M. H. de Ranitz, of the Dutch Bar, and asked for a reconsideration of the case. You then reported that you did not think that the situation was altered by the further materials submitted to you, and that you could not advise His Majesty's Government to take any further action in the matter.

It will be observed in the letter now submitted to you that Mr. Godden appeals for the intervention of His Majesty's Government on the following grounds:—

That the action of the Dutch Colonial Government by which he has been wronged was outside questions of civil law.

That it was not reasonable to expect him, in face of his experience of the Court of Curaçao, and of the animus shown against him in the letters from the Government Secretary at Curaçao to the Lieutenant-Governor of Aruba, to sue the Netherland Government in their own Courts or Netherland subjects in those Courts for wrongs inflicted by that Government.

That the Netherland Colonial Government cannot escape responsibility for the direct injuries done by itself. It cannot transfer such responsibility to third parties.

That material matters of complaint were not in possession of this Office when a demand was addressed to the Netherland Government in 1887.

That he had no opportunity of answering the reply of the Netherland Government, and that particularly he was not given an opportunity of showing that M. de Brauw's view of his claim was incorrect, and that a good and decisive answer could have been made to the reply of the Netherland Government.

That a serious wrong has been inflicted upon him by the action of the Netherland Government, and that the justice and equity of his claim to indemnification from that Government are evident.

I am to request that you will be good enough to consider the inclosed papers, and to favour his Lordship with your opinion (1) whether there has been such a failure or denial of justice as would entitle His Majesty's Government to make an official representation to the Netherland Government on Mr. Godden's behalf, and (2) whether, having regard to all the circumstances, you think the case to be one in which His Majesty's Government should press for arbitration, and, if so, on what grounds such a request could most advantageously be urged.

His Lordship will also be obliged if you will at the same time furnish him with any observations of a general character which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.

(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

Law Officers' Report	April	28, 1886.
Ditto	March	30, 1887.
Ditto	February	29, 1888.
Ditto	November	11, 1899.
Ditto	July	22, 1901.
Mr. Henniker Heaton and Mr. Ernest Flower (joint letter)	May	14, 1903.
Ditto ditto ditto	June	6, ,,
Mr. John Godden	May	12, ,,
Memorandum by Mr. Farnall	March	10, 1888.
MS. correspondence respecting land tax in Curaçoa (Mr. Godden's claim), in two volumes:—
Vol. I, Library Catalogue, No. 714		1885–1887.
Vol. II		1888–

1903

Report.

We do not think that there is any new or additional information disclosed in the papers now sent, such as to enable us in any way to alter or modify the conclusion already arrived at.

We cannot recommend any further protest, and we do not think that His Majesty's Government have sufficient grounds for insisting on arbitration.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 29, 1903.

PERSIA.

No. 19.

[December 3, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, November 23, 1903.

Gentlemen,

Loans to Persian Government by Imperial Bank of Persia.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the powers of the Imperial Bank of Persia under the Concession granted to them in 1899 by His Majesty the Shah to make loans to the Persian Government.

These powers are at present limited by Article 6 of Appendix 4 to the Concession (Paper A, p. 56), which runs as follows:—

"The Bank shall not be required to make any advances to the Imperial Government beyond the stipulated 40,000*l.* without having approved securities for such further advances. The total amount of loans by the Bank to the Government shall not at any one time exceed one-third of the then paid-up capital of the Bank."

For political reasons, however, it is considered desirable that this limit should now be exceeded.

The Persian Government are bound by the terms of the Russo-Persian Loan Contract of 1899 not to accept for a term of years any foreign loan, and, consequently, the Imperial Bank of Persia, which is a Persian institution, is the only agency through which His Majesty's Government can acquire the influence to be derived from placing the Persian Government under financial obligations.

His Majesty's Government and the Government of India are agreed that it is important that they should give financial assistance to Persia, and a sum of 200,000*l.* has already been advanced by them in the name of the Imperial Bank; but His Majesty's Minister at Tehran is of opinion (Paper B) that, if any further advance of the kind were made, the Russian Government would raise the question of the right of the Persian Government to borrow more than one-third of the subscribed capital from the Bank, an amount which has already been exceeded.

Sir A. Hardinge has suggested that steps might be taken, by agreement between the Persian Government and the Imperial Bank, to modify, or even strike out, the limitative clause in Article 6 of the Concession. This the Directors of the Bank feel themselves unable to do (Paper E) without calling a general meeting of their shareholders, and they point out that the explanations which it would be necessary to give at such a meeting would defeat the intention of the operation.

It is suggested, however, that it may in practice be found possible to get rid of, evade, or modify the limitative clause without the necessity of explaining the circumstances to a general meeting of the shareholders of the Bank.

I am to request that you will take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to the possibility of overcoming, without publicity, the restrictions laid down in Article 6 of the Bank's Concession, and with any observations of a more general character which you may desire to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CHARLES HARDINGE.

List of Papers.

(A.) Charter, Deed of Settlement, and Concession of the Imperial Bank of Persia. Communicated to Foreign Office on November 19, 1889.
(B.) Sir A. Hardinge .. .. .. (No. 125) August 16, 1903.
(C.) To Imperial Bank .. .. September 15, ,,
(D.) Imperial Bank .. .. September 17, ,,
(E.) Imperial Bank .. .. September 30, ,,

Report.

In our opinion, it would not be possible to alter or modify, as proposed, the restrictions laid down in Article 6 of the Bank's Concession and Appendix without the assent of the shareholders, and such a course, as pointed out in Mr. Hardinge's letter to us, would necessitate the publication of the objects in view.

We do not know of any way in which the legal difficulty can be got over without the objects being made public.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
December 3, 1903.

PORTUGAL.

No. 20.

[February 10, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, December 11, 1902.

Gentlemen,

Shore and Chapman claim for losses in Benguela revolt.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers, as marked in the accompanying list, which relate to an insurrection which has recently taken place in the Benguela district of Portuguese West Africa, and to the claims which have been put forward by certain British subjects in connection with losses incurred through the insurrection.

In reporting to Mr. Chamberlain on the 17th August, 1899, on the subject of the damage caused during the rebellion in Sierra Leone, the then Law Officers of the Crown expressed the opinion that no Government guaranteed either its own subjects or the subjects of foreign States against the possibility of insurrection, and that all residents in a State must take the chance of damage arising from such causes. They added, however, that, if it could be clearly established that the damage was the result of the neglect of some obvious and necessary precaution on the part of the Government of the State in which the insurrection took place, or that the insurrection was caused by misconduct or neglect on the part of the Government itself or its officials, they thought that in the case of foreigners a claim for compensation might be put forward by their Government.

1903

The question therefore arises whether, in the present instance, such neglect as that indicated can be proved to have taken place on the part of the Portuguese authorities.

It will be seen that there is good ground for believing—

1. That the insurrection was largely due to the Slave Trade, which Portugal is bound to do her best to put down, a portion of the district whence these claims originated being within the purview of Article IX of the Berlin Act.

2. That individual Government officers have countenanced, and even on occasion actually shared in, that trade.

And I am accordingly to request you to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether these circumstances are sufficient to afford His Majesty's Government fair ground for holding Portugal responsible for any losses that may have occurred to British subjects during the progress of the insurrection, or whether there are any points on which you require further information before coming to a decision in the matter; and generally, with any other observations on the case which may occur to you.

A copy of the Law Officers' Report above alluded to is inclosed for convenience of reference, as also a Memorandum, which was drawn up in this Office, on the liability of Governments to give compensation for losses incurred during insurrections, rebellions, riots, and civil disturbances.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Law Officers		August 17, 1899.
(B.)	Memorandum, H. Farnall		November 17, ,,
(C.)	Consul Nightingale	(No. 2)	June 20, 1902.
(D.)	,, ,,	(No. 8)	August 20, ,,
(E.)	,, ,,	(No. 12)	September 6, ,,
(F.)	,, ,,	(No. 15)	September 23, ,,
(G.)	,, ,,	(No. 18)	October 6, ,,

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 22, 1902.

WITH reference to my letter of the 11th instant I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you a despatch from His Majesty's Consul at Loanda* regarding the claim for compensation preferred by Mr. Shore for losses sustained in connection with the insurrection which has recently taken place in the Benguela district of Portuguese West Africa.

Lord Lansdowne would be obliged if you would add the accompanying paper to those already submitted to you by his Lordship for your opinion.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

Report.

Upon the materials before us we do not think there is sufficient evidence that the revolt was caused by misconduct or neglect on the part of the Portuguese Government to enable His Majesty's Government to press a claim for compensation to be paid to Messrs. Shore and Chapman.

The effective government of such a country as the Benguela district of Portuguese West Africa is necessarily attended with great difficulty, and it would be no easy matter to trace clearly the causes of insurrection amongst natives in such a district.

The putting forward of such a claim as the present might, moreover, form a very inconvenient precedent in the case of disturbances in territories under our own control.

---

* Consul Nightingale No. 22, Africa, November 6, 1902.

It is only in very clear cases that compensation on such grounds should be insisted on. The case, however, appears to be one in which it might be proper to bring the claims unofficially under the notice of the Portuguese Government, with a view to that Government giving it friendly consideration.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 10, 1903.

SWITZERLAND.

No. 20^{A}. [Home Office.]

[December 19, 1903.]

Case for the Opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown.

Bloesch: As to holding in custody in England under a Colonial extradition warrant.

ONE, Bloesch, charged with fraud in Switzerland, absconded to Cape Colony. A warrant was taken out in Switzerland for his arrest, and an application for his extradition was made by the Swiss Government. Bloesch has not yet been arrested.

The question has been raised whether, if Bloesch is surrendered from Cape Colony on a warrant signed by the Governor of the Colony, and is sent to England for delivery to the Swiss authorities, he can be lawfully held in custody under the Colonial Governor's warrant, while in England, pending his re-shipment to the Continent.

An Opinion of the Law Officers in 1887 is submitted herewith, in which they advised that a Canadian warrant of surrender in extradition has no force or effect outside Canadian territory. That Opinion, however, turned on the fact that Canada possesses Extradition Acts of its own, and the Imperial Extradition Acts have been suspended within the Dominion by Order in Council of the 28th December, 1882.

Reference is made to a letter from Mr. Vaughan, one of the Magistrates of Bow Street Police Court, dated the 3rd September, 1887 (of which a copy is attached to the case above referred to), in which he expressed the opinion that "the possessions of the Colonies and the territory of Great Britain were for the purposes of extradition intended to be regarded as identical," and that a prisoner surrendered in extradition to a foreign State by a Colonial Government could therefore be conveyed across England under the Colonial Governor's warrant.

Reference is also made to the last paragraph of section 11 of "The Extradition Act, 1870," which runs as follows:—

> "It shall be lawful for any person to whom such warrant is directed, and for the person so authorized as aforesaid to receive, hold in custody, and convey within the jurisdiction of such foreign State the criminal mentioned in the warrant; and if the criminal escapes out of any custody to which he may be delivered on or in pursuance of such warrant, it shall be lawful to retake him in the same manner as any person accused of any crime against the laws of that part of Her Majesty's dominions to which he escapes may be retaken upon an escape,"

And to section 17, subsection (2) of the same Act which provides—

> "(2) No warrant of a Secretary of State shall be required, and all powers vested in or acts authorized or required to be done under this Act by the Police Magistrate and the Secretary of State, or either of them, in relation to the surrender of a fugitive criminal, may be done by the Governor of the British possession alone."

The effect of these sections would appear to be that a prisoner surrendered to some foreign Government from the Cape or other Colony in which the Imperial Extradition Acts are in force would be in legal custody while temporarily detained in England for the purpose of extradition under a warrant issued in pursuance of section 17 of the Act of 1870, and if escaping, could be recaptured in the same way as a person arrested for an offence committed in England. The Secretary of State, however, thinks it right to point out that some doubt appears to have been felt in Cape Colony, where "The Extradition Act, 1870," is in force, as to the power to detain a fugitive offender in transit under a warrant granted elsewhere, since a Colonial Act (No. 6 of 1895), of which a copy is inclosed, has been passed for the purpose of dealing with the case of persons surrendered not only from foreign possessions, but also from British possessions and Colonies (other than the Cape Colony) in South Africa.

1903

The Law Officers are therefore requested to advise:—

Whether in the case of a fugitive offender whose surrender to a foreign State has been ordered by the Governor of a British possession under section 17 of "The Extradition Act, 1870," and who has been removed to the British Islands on his way to such foreign State, the warrant of the Colonial Governor ordering the fugitive's surrender is sufficient to authorize his detention, and his recapture, should he attempt to escape, while in the British Islands.

Opinion.

Yes.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Law Officers' Department,
December 19, 1903.

TURKEY.

No. 21.

[February 11, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, November 1, 1902.

Gentlemen,

Jurisdiction over foreign seamen in British ships within the limits of the "Ottoman Order in Council, 1899."

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list regarding the exercise of jurisdiction over foreign seamen in British ships within the limits of the "Ottoman Order in Council, 1899."

The facts of the particular case which has made it necessary to consider this general question are set forth in a despatch from Mr. Cumberbatch, His Majesty's Consul-General at Smyrna, of the 31st October, 1901 (Paper A), and are shortly as follows:—

On the 20th September, 1901, while the British steam-ship "Ayr" was at her moorings in the port of Smyrna, and therefore in the territorial waters of Turkey, a seaman of Greek nationality, named Stavro Dassis, who was a member of the crew of the vessel, committed an offence under section 2 of "The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885" (48 & 49 Vict., cap. 69), upon the person of another member of the crew of the same ship, who was a British subject.

When the charge was investigated and the accused person was found to be a Greek subject, the Acting British Consul-General, following the precedents during the last few years of that Consulate, communicated with the Greek Consul-General, with a view to obtaining his consent to the trial of the accused man in the British Consular Court. The Greek Consul-General, however, declined to consent to this course, and further stated that his own Consular Court could not try the case, as the alleged crime had not been committed on board a Greek vessel.

With the concurrence of the Judge of His Majesty's Supreme Court at Constantinople the accused person was then committed for trial, and tried at Smyrna by the Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court. The jury brought in a verdict of "guilty," but upon the question of jurisdiction, which was raised on behalf of the prisoner, the Assistant Judge decided, after argument, that the Court had no jurisdiction, and the prisoner was in consequence discharged.

Mr. Consul-General Cumberbatch, who was himself away on leave at the time of the occurrence, states that, had he been at Smyrna, he would, on the refusal of the Greek Consul to consent to trial in the British Court, have acted under section 689 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894" (Paper B), in which case the prisoner would have been sent home to, and tried in, the United Kingdom. He also asks for instructions whether he would have been right in so doing, and it is upon this point more especially that your opinion is desired.

In view of the importance of the case, the opinions of Sir E. O'Malley and of Mr. de Sausmarez, the Judges of the Supreme Court at Constantinople, and also of the Board of Trade, have been obtained.

Before dealing with the opinions they have expressed it may be well to refer to Reports given by the then Law Officers of the Crown in 1877 on the case of Stiglitch; in 1880, in the case of D. Ross; and, in 1884, upon the case of an Italian and a German (Papers C, D, E). But, though these cases arose out of similar circumstances, they do not touch the point whether an accused person who is not a British subject can be sent away for trial, either to England or to a British possession, though the existence of such power seems to be recognized in the Report in the Stiglitch case, in which a Memorandum by Sir J. Pauncefote expressing this view (Paper C) appears to have been approved—at any rate, implicitly—by the then Law Officers.

In the present case the question depends upon the construction of the "Ottoman Order in Council, 1899" (Paper F). In Sir E. O'Malley's view (Paper G), the Court had no jurisdiction to try Dassis, because it only has jurisdiction to try foreigners in the cases specified in Article 5 (3) and (4), which do not cover that of Dassis; nor would the Consul have been entitled to act under section 689 of the Merchant Shipping Act, because, by Article 6 of the Order in Council, "all Her Majesty's jurisdiction in the Ottoman dominions . . . . must be exercised under, and in accordance with, the provisions of this Order," and the Consul is given no such power in the Order; but Sir E. O'Malley makes no reference to Article 5 (5), which gives jurisdiction over "British ships . . . . . . and the persons . . . . . . on board thereof . . . . . . being within the Ottoman dominions," nor to Article 28, where the Order appears to recognize the power the Consul-General desired to exercise.

In Mr. de Sausmarez' view (Paper H), "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," did not confer on Consuls power to arrest seamen in a foreign country, nor does the Order in Council give such power where the seaman is a foreigner. He thinks, however, that section 689 is not abridged by the Order in Council, but that it could only be put in force where the authorities of the country have refused to put the man on his trial.

In the opinion of the Board of Trade (Paper I), the Court had, under the "Ottoman Order in Council, 1899," jurisdiction to try Dassis.

On the other hand, both the Legal Adviser and the Assistant Legal Adviser of the Secretary of State are of opinion, with the Judge and the Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court, that the Court, under the Ottoman Order in Council, had no jurisdiction to try the man. If section 686 and section 687 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," are looked at and compared, it will be seen that section 686 (which confers jurisdiction upon Courts in British possessions) is, except as to the high seas, limited to British subjects; section 687 (which reserves the trial for England) covers foreigners. The powers of section 686 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," are conferred upon the Ottoman Court by Article 55 of the Order in Council; but it is under section 687 that Dassis would be brought to justice, and power to try under that section is not conferred upon the Court under the Order in Council.

Mr. Hurst is, however, of opinion that the mode of dealing with Dassis suggested by Mr. Consul-General Cumberbatch was correct—i.e., that he might have been sent home for trial at the Central Criminal Court, and that this mode of procedure is contemplated under the "Ottoman Order in Council, 1899."

By Article 5 (5) of that Order, British ships, and the persons and properties on board thereof, within the Ottoman dominions, are within the jurisdiction conferred by the Order, in so far as, by Treaty, usage, sufferance, or other lawful means, His Majesty has jurisdiction in relation to such matters or things. It is clear from sections 687 and 689 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," that this country regards herself as entitled to legislate with regard to foreigners on board a British ship within the territorial dominions of another Power, as the word "persons" is not limited to British subjects; similarly, there appears to be no ground for construing the word "persons" in Article 5 of the Order in Council as limited to British subjects.

1903

Again, the Act contemplates that persons committing offences within section 687 of the Act shall be sent home for trial in England. Similarly, Article 28 of the Order provides that every Court may cause to be arrested any persons subject to, and within the limits of, its jurisdiction and charged with an offence cognizable under the Order, and may deal with the accused according to the jurisdiction of the Court and in conformity with the provisions of the Order, or, when the offence is liable and is to be tried in England, may take the preliminary examination and commit the accused for trial, and cause or allow him to be taken to England.

The effect of Article 6, in so far as it bears upon the question, seems to be that the power conferred by section 689 of the Merchant Shipping Act upon the Consul is, under Article 28 of the Order, only to be exercised by the Consular Court; but the jurisdiction is recognized and provided for in the Order. It seems, therefore, that when the charge against Dassis was investigated by the Consular Court, there would have been jurisdiction to commit him for trial in England.

About the year 1880 a prolonged correspondence took place between this country and the United States as to a prisoner named Ross, a British subject employed on board an American vessel, and convicted by an American Court in Japan for a murder committed within Japanese waters. The English Court claimed jurisdiction over the prisoner and demanded his surrender, but the United States declined; the protest, however, against the United States exercising jurisdiction was not withdrawn by Her Majesty's Government. This case, which is the converse of that of Dassis, shows that this country has not in the past regarded the Power to whose mercantile marine the vessel belonged as primarily entitled to exercise jurisdiction over foreign seamen for serious crimes—i.e., other than breaches of discipline—committed within the territorial jurisdiction of another Power. On the other hand, where the territorial Power declines to exercise jurisdiction, England has claimed and exercised the right. (Reg. v. Anderson, L.R., 1 C.C.R., 161.)

In a country where extraterritorial rights are enjoyed by foreign Powers the national Power stands in the position of the territorial, and therefore, in this case, as Greece declined jurisdiction, it would have been in accordance with precedent for His Majesty to claim and exercise jurisdiction over Dassis.

If this view is upheld, it would, of course, in practice be necessary to instruct His Majesty's Consuls that jurisdiction in such cases should only be exercised where there would be otherwise a failure of justice.

Mr. Davidson, while not altogether dissenting, if the matter be regarded as one of pure statutory construction, from the conclusions arrived at by Mr. Hurst, thinks that there are strong reasons of policy and expediency which militate against the carrying of those conclusions into actual practice.

It can scarcely have been contemplated, whatever may be the result of a technical interpretation of the various Statutes and Orders in Council concerned, that a foreigner who commits a crime on a British merchant-vessel within the territorial waters of Turkey should, although not amenable to the special Courts established for the exercise of His Majesty's jurisdiction within the limits of the Ottoman dominions, yet be triable at the Central Criminal Court in this country; and it is suggested that attempts to exercise such a jurisdiction, if it exist, would be likely to provoke remonstrance on the part of the Government of the foreign country to which the offender belonged.

It would not be easy in such circumstances to explain why, if the offender were not justiciable by the British Tribunals on the spot, he should yet be punishable by some other British Tribunal hundreds—or, possibly, thousands—of miles away, or to defend such a practice as reasonable and just, or even as convenient.

I have the honour to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion—

1. Whether His Britannic Majesty's Supreme Court for the Ottoman dominions had jurisdiction to try Dassis.

2. Whether it would have been legal for Dassis to have been sent home for trial under sections 687 and 689 of the Merchant Shipping Act, or under Article 28 of the Ottoman Order in Council.

3. If the answers to the preceding questions should be in the negative, whether it would be advisable to amend the "Ottoman Order in Council, 1899," with a view of rendering offences committed by foreigners and members of the crew of a British merchant-vessel on such ship when within the territorial waters of Turkey justiciable by His Majesty's Supreme Consular Court, or to take any other—and, if so, what—steps with a view to preventing a failure of justice in any similar cases which may arise in the future.

His Lordship would also be glad to receive any general observations which you may wish to offer on the matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Mr. Cumberbatch	(No. 29)	October 31, 1901.
(B.)	Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict., Ch. 60).
(C.)	To Mr. Fawcett	(No. 8)	March 20, 1877.
(D.)	Law Officers		September 7, 1880.
(E.)	Ditto		March 15, 1884.
(F.)	Ottoman Order in Council, 1899 (Confidential No. 7171*).
(G.)	Sir E. O'Malley	(No. 17)	November 22, 1899.
(H.)	Memorandum by Judge de Sausmarez		March 5, 1902.
(I.)	Board of Trade		February 5, 1902.
(J.)	Memorandum by Mr. Hurst		September 5 1902.
	"Treaties, &c., between Turkey and foreign Powers, 1535–1855."

Report by the Attorney-General.

1. In my opinion, Dassis could not properly be tried in the British Consular Court. It appears that the Porte raises no objection to the trial in the British Consular Court of a foreigner on board a British ship if the Consul of his country consents, and Dassis fell under the description in Article 5 (5) of the "Ottoman Order in Council, 1899." But the Greek Consul refused his consent, and, under these circumstances, it appears to me that the British Consular Court could not properly exercise jurisdiction.

2. I think that Dassis might have been tried under the Admiralty jurisdiction at the Central Criminal Court (Reg. v. Anderson, 1 C.C.R., 161), and no international difficulty as to his trial would probably have arisen if he had been brought here without leaving his ship or had been transferred direct to another. But, when he was once ashore, I think that he could be brought here only with the consent of the Greek Consul. The jurisdiction conferred by section 689 is, in my opinion, vested in the Consular Court under the Order in Council, Articles 6 and 28; but Dassis would not have been a person subject to the jurisdiction without the consent of the Consul of his own country.

3. I do not think that any good would be done by altering the Order in Council. Any difficulty in the case is international, and could not be removed by any modification of the terms of the Order.

I have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Report by the Solicitor-General.

1. I agree with the opinion of the Attorney-General that Dassis could not properly be tried in His Majesty's Supreme Court for the Ottoman dominions.

2. In my opinion, it would have been legal for Dassis to have been sent home for trial, as the Consul had the jurisdiction conferred by section 689 of the Merchant Shipping Act vested in him by Articles 6 and 28 of the Order in Council, and no objection is made to the exercise of such jurisdiction by the Porte.

If such a course elicited a protest by the Greek Government I do not think the protest could be sustained, having regard to the fact that admittedly the Greek Consular Court had no jurisdiction to try the case, and that the Greek Consul had refused to have the prisoner tried. To press such a contention would be to assist the escape from punishment of a foreign subject who was guilty of a crime against English law upon a British ship which is admittedly punishable in England.

THE OCEANA GROUP PUBLISHERS

1903

I think, too, that if such a protest were made it would be material that the proceedings under section 689 are only ancillary to having the person charged tried in the proper venue, and are taken for the benefit of such person and with a view to having him transferred to the proper place of trial, as otherwise it might be necessary to detain him in custody on board the vessel upon which the crime had been committed until such vessel again returned to England.

3. I agree with the Attorney-General.

I have, &c.
(Signed) EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 11, 1903.

No. 22.

[April 28, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, March 9, 1903.

Registration of issue, &c., of Marriages in Polygamous countries.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you a despatch from His Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, forwarding a despatch from His Majesty's Consul-General at Beyrout, in which the latter inquires: (1) whether, in view of a Circular addressed by the Marquess of Salisbury to His Majesty's Consular officers on the 4th November, 1899, which forbids the registration of lex loci marriages in Mahometan or polygamous countries without fulfilment of the provisions of "The Foreign Marriages Act, 1892," the issue of such marriages are to be registered at His Majesty's Consulate-General as British subjects; and (2) whether, after such marriage has been dissolved in the Mahometan or polygamous country, and the divorce is valid according to the personal law of the parties, the husband can claim to register a second wife and her children as British subjects.

A copy of the Circular above referred to is inclosed for convenience of reference.

I am also to transmit to you a Memorandum which has been drawn up by the Assistant Legal Adviser to this Office on the subject; and I am to request that, in taking these papers into your consideration, you will inform his Lordship whether you concur in the conclusions arrived at in this Memorandum, and, if so, whether instructions may properly be sent to Mr. Drummond-Hay to the effect suggested.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CHARLES HARDINGE.

List of Papers.

Sir N. O'Conor	(No. 25. Treaty)	December 18, 1902.
Consul-General Drummond-Hay	(No. 4. Treaty)	December 5, ,,
Foreign Office Circular (Library No. 2739)		November 4, 1899.
Memorandum by Mr. Hurst		February 2, 1903.

Report.

We agree with the view of the Assistant Legal Adviser that the answers to both the questions asked by Mr. Drummond-Hay should be in the affirmative, and we think instructions may be sent accordingly.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
April 28, 1903.

Annex.

Memorandum by Mr. Hurst.

BOTH the questions asked by the Consul should, in my opinion, be answered in the affirmative. I think he enunciates the correct principle when he writes:—

"The validity of these marriages would, I conclude, be decided by the laws of their country of origin."

The doctrine is recognized that a man carries his common law with him wherever he goes; if he is in a foreign country he continues to be subject to that law except in so far as entrance into that foreign country has subjected him to another code which supersedes his common law.

For a British subject of Indian origin, polygamy is lawful if he is a Mahometan or a Hindoo, or, I think, if he is a Jew; marriage is one of the questions which is decided in the British Courts in India by the personal law of the litigant, and the bigamy clause of the Indian Penal Code is carefully worded so as to preserve this right.

When a British Indian settles in the Ottoman Empire, where he will still be subject to the King's jurisdiction, he will continue subject to his personal law of marriage, except in so far as His Majesty enacts otherwise for him; no such legislation has, in fact, been provided with regard to him, and, consequently, a British Indian marrying according to his personal law, contracts a marriage which is valid, and of which the offspring will be legitimate; if his personal law permits polygamy, the marriage in the Ottoman dominions will not be invalid because it is polygamous.

The same reasoning applies to the British subject of Maltese origin: if he contracts in the Ottoman dominions a marriage which is valid by canon law, which is the common law of Malta, that marriage is valid.

The Law Officers recently advised that the marriage of an Englishman in a Greek island, celebrated by an ordained clergyman, was valid because it was good by the common law of England; as Greece had made no other provision for the marriage of Christians of other communions, the Englishman was governed in this particular matter by his common law.

This opinion of the Law Officers really covers the questions asked by the Consul.

If the marriage is valid the issue are legitimate, and, consequently, entitled to be registered at the Consulate both in the register of British subjects and in the register of births.

Similar considerations apply to the divorce question, where, under the religious law of his community, a man's marriage can be severed, a divorce in accordance therewith in the Ottoman Empire is permissible and valid for a British Indian, as being in accordance with his personal law, and because no machinery for divorce, that he could make use of, has been provided under the Ottoman Order in Council.

For Christians, this question as to divorce cannot arise, because the canon does not, any more than the English common law, allow divorce.

If the divorce is recognized, then the subsequent marriage is lawful, and its issue legitimate.

Cases that were decided on the rights of Englishmen to inherit real estate in this country, and cases on the jurisdiction of the English Divorce Court, do not appear to me to have any bearing on this question.

I have also read all the Abensur print, but nothing in the decisions arrived at in that case appears to me to conflict with what I have written above.

As to the practical working out of the proposition, there might, with Hindoos or Mahometans, be difficulty in finding out whether the marriages (and divorces for Mahometans) were, in fact, valid by the religious law of the community; but the Consul's despatch appears to refer chiefly to Jews and Maltese, and I do not see why there should be trouble as to these: the care with which Jewish records are kept is proverbial.

(Signed) C. J. B. HURST.

February 2, 1903.

No. 23.

[October 8, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 18, 1903.

Claim owing to damage by bomb of "Guadalquivir."

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to certain claims advanced in respect of losses caused by an explosion on board the French steam-ship "Guadalquivir" at Salonica.

The case was brought to the notice of His Majesty's Government by Lloyd's, with whom part of the cargo of the "Guadalquivir" was insured, and who stated that the owners of the ship had asked for the intervention of the French Government in putting forward a claim against the Ottoman Government for the loss of the steamer.

1903

Lloyd's requested that a similar claim might be lodged on their behalf by His Majesty's Government.

The matter was referred by Lord Lansdowne to His Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, who discussed it with his French colleague (Paper C). The latter was of opinion that the Ottoman Government might be held responsible, firstly, under the Capitulation of 1740, which made the Turkish authorities liable for the proceedings of the Barbary pirates, and secondly, because, although a French merchant-ship practically enjoys extra-territoriality in a Turkish port, such ship is not French soil, and the Turkish authorities should therefore make good losses sustained in consequence of their failure to take proper precautions.

Sir N. O'Conor, however, points out that as the Turkish authorities cannot properly, and do not, in fact, claim to place police agents on foreign merchant-vessels in harbour, or to institute a search on board, without the consent of the Consul concerned, Turkish responsibility is greatly lessened in respect of outrages on board such vessels.

The arguments employed by the French Ambassador at Constantinople have been sustained by the French Ambassador at this Court in a Memorandum communicated to this Department on the 28th ultimo (Paper D). His Excellency there puts forward, as a ground for holding the Turkish Government responsible for the outrage, the alleged fact that that outrage was committed under the orders of the Macedonian insurgent leaders.

The established principle of His Majesty's Government is, on the other hand, that a Government is not responsible for the acts of armed insurgents whom it cannot control, in the absence of evidence of negligence.

Lord Lansdowne is advised that the fact of the bomb having been brought on board the vessel is not evidence of such negligence, as Turkey cannot be held to be bound to prevent explosives leaving her soil at all, and so long as foreign merchant shipping in Turkish waters does not allow the authorities of the Porte to exercise police supervision on board the ship, the responsibility for seeing that bombs are not brought on board must rest on the ship's officers.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and furnish Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether liability attaches to the Ottoman Government, and, if so, to what extent, in respect of the losses caused by the explosion on board the steam-ship "Guadalquivir." His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any observations of a more general nature which you may wish to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS

List of Papers.

(A.) Lloyd's	.. ..		July 8, 1903.
(B.) To Sir N. O'Conor	.. ..	(No. 186)	July 15, ,,
(C.) Sir N. O'Conor	.. ..	(No. 476)	August 14, ,,
(D.) M. Cambon	.. ..		August 28, ,,

Report.

We cannot see any evidence of negligence on the part of the Turkish police. There is nothing to show that they ought, by the exercise of ordinary care, to have detected, and stopped upon the quay, the bearer of the bomb.

The only ground which occurs to us as a possible means of sustaining a claim of such a nature would be that the damage might be regarded as resulting from an insurrectionary movement caused by gross misgovernment in Macedonia. A State may be held liable for damage directly resulting from insurrectionary movements provoked by its own misconduct, but we think that there are two fatal objections to urging this ground of claim in the present case. The first is that it would, no doubt, be maintained by the Turkish Government that the true cause of the insurrection was not misgovernment, but the aspirations of the Macedonian Committees. The second is that damage of this kind can hardly be considered as a direct or natural result of an insurrection. It was caused by an atrocious crime on the part of one miscreant, and, even if he were acting under the orders of a Revolutionary Committee, we do not think that such an act could be regarded as having its effective cause in Turkish misgovernment.

For these reasons, we do not think the payment of these claims can be properly insisted upon.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
October 8, 1903.

UNITED STATES.

[See No. 31 under "Venezuela."]

VENEZUELA.

No. 24.

[January 14, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, January 8, 1903.

Reference of dispute with Venezuela to Hague Tribunal.

AMONG the alternative suggestions which have been made for the solution of the Venezuelan difficulty is one that the questions at issue should be submitted to the arbitration of the Hague Tribunal.

The Tribunal itself is of very recent establishment, and recourse has only as yet been had to it in a single instance. There is little, therefore, in the shape of precedent for guidance as to the terms of reference or the procedure to be adopted beyond the Protocols of the Conference which resulted in the Convention signed at the Hague on the 29th July, 1899, and those of the "Pious Fund" case, recently submitted to the Tribunal by the United States of Mexico.

In view of the possibility of a reference of the Venezuela question to the Tribunal, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you copies of these Protocols and of the text of the Convention referred to,* marked Papers (A), (B), and (C), and to submit to you the following observations:—

So far as the position of the Powers is concerned, the circumstances in the case of the Pious Fund were not similar to those at present under consideration, inasmuch as both the United States and Mexico were Signatories of the Hague Convention, whereas although this country was a party to the Convention, Venezuela was neither represented at the Hague, nor did she subsequently adhere to that Convention.

No agreement has yet been arrived at with regard to the conditions in which non-Signatory Powers not represented at the Conference can adhere to the Convention, although such adhesion is contemplated under Article LX, which provides that the conditions of such adhesion shall form the subject of a subsequent agreement among the Contracting Powers.

The question has, however, just been raised in consequence of an application from the Republic of Salvador. It has been referred to His Majesty's Government, and, no doubt, to all the other Contracting Powers, and is under consideration by Sir E. Fry, Professor Westlake, and Sir John Ardagh, British members of the Permanent Court.

There is no doubt, however, that Venezuela can appeal to the Tribunal at the Hague under the provisions of Article XXVI, which runs as follows:—

"The International Bureau at the Hague is authorized to place its premises and its staff at the disposal of the Signatory Powers for the operations of any special Board of Arbitration.

---

* Proceedings of Hague Convention; Hague Convention; Record of Papers in "Pious Fund" case.

THE OCEANA GROUP PUBLISHERS
1903

"The jurisdiction of the Permanent Court may, within the conditions laid down in the Regulations, be extended to disputes between non-Signatory Powers or between Signatory Powers and non-Signatory Powers, if the Parties are agreed on recourse to this Tribunal."

It will be seen that the Convention contemplates two kinds of Courts of Arbitration: (1) the Permanent Court of Arbitration of the Hague, the provisions in respect of which are contained in chapter 2 of the Convention; (2) the Special Courts to be instituted by agreement between the Parties having recourse to arbitration. The Arbitrators in the alternative first named must be chosen from among the members of the Permanent Court; in the second, they may be selected at will by the Parties interested, as provided under Articles XXIV and XXXII.

It is believed that the intention of Article XXVI was to open the door as wide as possible to Powers, whether Signatories or non-Signatories of the Convention. But the wording of the Article, if strictly interpreted, does not carry out that intention in an explicit manner. It is only the "jurisdiction of the Permanent Court" which may be extended to disputes in which non-Signatory Powers are concerned. It is not stated that the Special Courts, where the Arbitrators may be selected at will, are open to non-Signatory Powers.

It would seem highly undesirable to delay reference to arbitration by a discussion of this point. But it is necessary to call attention to the difficulty in case it should be raised. The best plan for meeting it would, it is thought, probably be to express a preference for the Permanent Court on account of the doubt which exists, but not to raise a formal objection to the Special Court if all the Parties to the arbitration are agreed to adopt this alternative. An agreement of this kind would prevent any attempt at withdrawal from the desired arbitration. The Permanent Administrative Council would not be likely to object, as the desire at the Hague is rather to attract disputants than to place difficulties in their way.

So soon as the form of Court is determined, the next step would be for the Powers concerned to sign a special Act ("compromis") defining the subject of difference and the extent of the Arbitrator's powers, as provided in Article XXXI.

The Arbitrators have then to be chosen. Here a question will arise: In the "Pious Fund" case, the first, and so far the only, matter referred to the Hague, the Governments of the United States and Mexico, both Signatory Powers, agreed to appoint non-national Arbitrators. If the Permanent Court is adopted in the present instance it would seem necessary to follow the same course, for Venezuela, being non-Signatory, there are, of course, no Venezuelan members of the Court.

It might, it is suggested, be agreed that the Umpire should be one of the United States' members of the Court.

It will also be necessary to decide upon the number of Arbitrators. Venezuela will, it may be assumed, not be disposed to go into Court in a minority of one to three, viz., Venezuela v. Great Britain, France, and Italy. There would seem to be three courses open: either for the three Powers to name one Arbitrator each, and for Venezuela to name three; or for the three Powers to name one Arbitrator between them, and Venezuela one; or for the cases to be taken separately—that is to say, the British cases to be heard before the British and Venezuelan Arbitrators and the Umpire, the German cases before the German and Venezuelan Arbitrators and the Umpire, and so on. There would, in that case, be separate "compromis"—and perhaps this last alternative may be the best.

The whole question of procedure appears to abound in opportunities for controversy, but Lord Lansdowne, as at present advised, is disposed to consider—

(1.) That it would be better to have recourse to the Permanent Tribunal, as there appears to be no reason why this country should desire a special Court, and it seems doubtful whether Venezuela is entitled to claim one.

(2.) That each power should have its own "compromis" with the Venezuelan Government. This would, it is hoped, avoid protracted discussions, and would, moreover, be in harmony with the procedure of His Majesty's Government in other particulars throughout the discussion of the Venezuelan question—e.g., His Majesty's Government have had separate notifications of blockade, separate instructions to their naval officers, and separate reservations as to the claims to be referred to arbitration, &c.

(3.) That each of the three complainant Powers should name its own Arbitrator, who would, with the Venezuelan Arbitrator and the Umpire, adjudicate as to the claims of that Power.

I am accordingly to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour his Lordship by informing him whether, and, if so, to what extent you concur in the above conclusions. His Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to receive any observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer on the whole question.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

Report.

I concur in all of the above conclusions, 1, 2, and 3.

As to 1. The Permanent Court seems to be the natural Tribunal to deal with the proposed reference, but if all parties are agreed the decision may very well be left to a Special Court.

As to 2. It seems clearly expedient that each Power should have its own "compromis" with the Venezuelan Government. The claims are distinct, and an attempt to deal with them in one "compromis" might cause delay.

As to 3. This conclusion appears to me to follow from conclusion No. 2.

I have no further observations to offer.

R. B. F.

Royal Courts of Justice,
January 14, 1903.

No. 25.

[January 21, 1903.]

Law Officers of the Crown to Foreign Office.

Claims of H.M.'s Govt. on Venezuela: Draft "Compromis" for Arbitration.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, January 21, 1903.

SUBJECT to the alteration and additions suggested in red ink[*] in Article II and Article V, we approve of the draft Protocol initialled by us.

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

Annex.

Draft Protocol of an Arbitration Agreement ("Compromis") between Great Britain and Venezuela for the Adjustment and Settlement of Claims for Compensation, Indemnification, and Redress, on account of Losses, Damages, Injuries, and Maltreatment alleged to have been suffered by British Subjects, in consequence of the Wrongful Acts and Neglects of the Government of Venezuela.

WHEREAS certain differences and controversies have arisen between Great Britain and Venezuela, in connection with the claims of British subjects against the Government of Venezuela, which have not been susceptible of settlement by ordinary diplomatic methods, but which, with the reservations hereinafter mentioned, the High Contracting Parties are desirous of terminating by a reference to arbitration; and

Whereas the Venezuelan Government have undertaken to pay without reference to arbitration the claims arising out of the seizure and plundering of British vessels and outrages on their crews, and the maltreatment and false imprisonment of British subjects; and

Whereas the Venezuelan Government have admitted in principle that a liability on their part exists in cases where the claim is for injury to, or wrongful seizure of, property, and that in such cases the questions which the Arbitral Tribunal will have to decide will only be—

(a.) Whether the injury took place, and whether the seizure was wrongful, and (b) if so, what amount of compensation is due; and

Whereas the Government of His Britannic Majesty have consented, in the case of claims other than the above, to accept arbitration without any reserve; and

Whereas the High Contracting Parties have agreed that the Arbitral Tribunal shall not only determine the amount of compensation payable by Venezuela, but shall also define the security to be given by the Venezuelan Government, and the means to be resorted to for the purpose of guaranteeing a sufficient and punctual discharge of the obligation;

[*] Printed in italics.

1903

The High Contracting Parties have, with a view to carry out their intention, authorized their Representatives:

For Great Britain:—

For Venezuela:—

to conclude the following Agreement:—

I.

The Convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes, concluded at The Hague on the 29th July, 1899 (hereinafter described as "the Convention"), shall, unless otherwise herein expressed, govern and regulate the proceedings of this arbitration.

II.

The High Contracting Parties desiring to avail themselves of the permissive faculty accorded by the 2nd paragraph of Article XXVI of the Convention, whereby—"The jurisdiction of the Permanent Court may, within the conditions laid down in the Regulations, be extended to disputes between non-Signatory Powers, or between Signatory Powers and non-Signatory Powers, if the Parties are agreed on recourse to this Tribunal"—and having so agreed to have recourse to the jurisdiction of the said Permanent Court of Arbitration—as constituted by the 2nd Chapter of the said Convention—for the examination and determination of the said claims, other than those which the Venezuelan Government have as aforesaid agreed to pay without reference to arbitration, and of the manner and method of securing the due liquidation and discharge of such obligations as may be created by the Awards delivered thereon by the Arbitral Tribunal, do now further agree that such jurisdiction shall be exercised upon the terms above stated, and that such Tribunal shall be constituted in the following manner:—

III.

Each of the two High Contracting Parties shall name one Arbitrator from the general list of members of the Permanent International Court; and an Umpire ("Sur-Arbitre") shall be selected in accordance with the provisions of the Convention (Article XXIV). None of those so named shall be a subject or citizen of either of the States who are Contracting Parties hereto.

The names of the Arbitrators so chosen shall be signified by the High Contracting Parties—each to the other—within   days from the date of signature of this Protocol, by their Representatives, and also to the Secretary-General of the International Bureau established at the Hague.

The name of the Umpire shall in like manner be communicated immediately after the selection has been made.

IV.

The Arbitral Tribunal thus constituted shall assemble at the Hague within   days of the appointment of the Umpire.

V.

Each of the High Contracting Parties, acting in conformity with Article XXXVII of the Convention, shall, within thirty days of the signature of this Protocol, nominate and appoint an Agent; and such Agents, hereinafter described as the British Agent and the Venezuelan Agent respectively, shall represent them before the said Tribunal in all matters concerning this arbitration.

The Tribunal shall be bound to receive and consider all written documents or statements which may be presented to them by the said Agents on behalf of their respective Governments, in support of, or in answer to, any claim submitted for arbitration, and to hear, if required, one person on each side on behalf of each Government, on each and every separate claim, such person being either the Agent, or a Counsel, or Advocate, whose name shall be communicated to the Tribunal by the Agent of the Party concerned.

The evidence of witnesses shall be taken in the manner and subject to the precautions and conditions ordinarily prescribed for the conduct of notaries public, Commissioners for oaths, or other officers duly empowered to take such depositions, provided always that such manner, precautions, and conditions shall be recognized as sufficient, and accepted by the Tribunal.

Saving and except in those cases in which the Tribunal shall determine and notify to the Agents that, in their opinion, the personal attendance of a witness for the purpose of giving oral evidence before it on a matter material to the issue is absolutely indispensable and essential to the ends of justice, the Agents shall not be required nor permitted to tender oral evidence in support of their contentions.

All documents connected with the cases, and forming the preliminary examination or first phase, shall be furnished by the respective Agents in print, in the English and Spanish languages. The documents in support of the claims shall be delivered to the adverse Party within   days from the date of signature of this Protocol; ~~and~~ the documents rebutting the claim shall be delivered to the claimant's Agent within   days from the same date of signature, and any documents by way of reply in support of the claims shall be delivered to the adverse party within   days of the same date of signature.

On or before the expiration of the latter period, i.e., within   days from the date of signature of this Protocol, the whole of the documents, on either side, as aforesaid, shall be delivered in six certified copies, in print, in the English and Spanish languages, to the Arbitral Tribunal, and upon their delivery the first phase, as specified in Article XXXIX of the Convention, shall be deemed to be completed, and no further documents, except only those which may be called for by the Tribunal to be produced shall be received.

VI.

Upon the completion of the first phase, the Tribunal may adjourn for the purpose of taking into consideration the documents which have been presented to it, or which it has called for; the period of such adjournment not to exceed   days, within which time it shall fix, and notify to the Agents of both parties, the date for commencing the hearing of oral arguments and, if required, oral evidence; and the period within which—in default of good and sufficient cause being shown to its satisfaction for an extension—it considers that such arguments and evidence should be concluded. In no case shall the total period allowed for the trial of the claims, reckoning from the first meeting of the Arbitral Tribunal to the pronouncement of the Awards upon the claims, exceed   days.

VII.

All vacancies occurring among the members of the Arbitral Tribunal or the Agents shall be filled within   days, in the same manner as is provided for their nomination.

VIII.

No counter-claims arising out of reprisal, retortion, embargo, blockade, or other acts done or performed in pursuance of the enforcement of redress and reparation shall be entertained by the Arbitral Tribunal.

IX.

The High Contracting Parties undertake to publish in their official Gazettes, as soon as may be after the signature of this Protocol, and not exceeding a delay of   days, Notifications for the information of all whom it may concern, of the names, addresses, styles, and titles of the Agents whom they have respectively appointed to represent them before the Arbitral Tribunal.

X.

In every case in which compensation is awarded in respect of the claims of British subjects' the Tribunal shall state in its findings the amount in each case, and in what currency, and at what date the same shall be payable, and it shall further define the security to be given for payment by the Government of Venezuela, and the means to be resorted to for the purpose of guaranteeing a sufficient and punctual discharge of the obligations imposed by the Award.

In deciding upon these last-named points, the Tribunal shall have regard to all existing external obligations of the Republic constituting preferential claims upon its sources of revenue by other Powers, and also to the claims which may be preferred contemporaneously with Great Britain by other Powers.

In the event of the Tribunal deciding that any sources of revenue accruing to the Government of Venezuela shall be assigned and set apart for the purpose of securing the due liquidation and discharge of the obligations created by the Award, and by the Awards which may be made by the other Arbitral Tribunals which may be constituted for the settlement of the claims preferred against Venezuela by other Powers, the present Tribunal is empowered, by and with the consent of those other Powers, if such consent—duly asked for through the usual diplomatic channels—shall have been obtained, to confer with the other Arbitral Tribunals engaged in the settlement of the claims of the said other Powers, and in conjunction with them to determine the manner in which the said assigned revenues shall be administered for the above-named purposes.

1903

XI.

Each of the Parties hereto shall pay its own expenses, and one-half of the expenses of the arbitration, including the remuneration of the Members of the Arbitral Tribunal, except as hereinafter provided with regard to appeals for revision, but the Tribunal shall not be empowered, in delivering Judgment, to specify the amount of, or to make any order with regard to, such expenses.

XII.

Revision, in any case where an Award has been made, may be permitted by the Tribunal on the demand of either Party made within eight days after the announcement of the Award, on the conditions prescribed in Article LV of the Hague Convention—the grounds upon which the demand is based being submitted to the Tribunal at the time the demand is made, as well as communicated to the other Party. The Tribunal shall forthwith call upon the Agents and Counsel of the Parties to appear before it on a date not later than four days from the presentation of the demand for revision, for the purpose of interrogating them, and requiring explanations or exceptions as to the existence and nature of the new matter upon which the demand for revision is based, and shall on the following day declare its decision granting or refusing the demand.

In the event of the demand for revision being granted, proofs upon such demand shall be submitted to the Tribunal and to the adverse Party within five days from such grant, and counter-proofs within the following ten days. The Tribunal shall decide the further period within which the arguments must be completed, and shall pronounce its Judgment or Award upon the appeal for revision not later than forty days after the date of the original Award. The Judgment or Award upon appeal for revision shall be final and conclusive as to the matters adjudicated upon therein.

XIII.

In appeals for revision it shall be competent for the opposing party to plead that the demand for revision is vexatious and dilatory, and to claim, as an exception to the Rule laid down by Article LVII of the Convention, that the entire expenses of the appeal shall be borne by the appellant, and the Tribunal shall be competent to award such expenses if it shall find such plea to be justified.

XIV.

The High Contracting Parties reserve to themselves the right, at any stage of this arbitration, to arrange, through their Agents or otherwise, for the settlement out of Court of any or all the subjects of dispute which have arisen between them, and if any such settlement shall be arrived at, they undertake to notify the terms thereof to the Tribunal, and to all other Powers then engaged in the settlement of claims against the Republic of Venezuela by way of arbitration or otherwise.

The Tribunal, upon receipt of such notification, shall take note of such arrangement, and shall discharge such case from further hearing.

R. B. F.
E. C.

Note.—The above proposed form of Agreement with Venezuela was subsequently recast. For Agreements actually concluded see "Treaty Series No. 8, 1903." [Cd. 1538.]

No. 26.

[February 10, 1903.]

Foreign Office to Attorney-General.

Claims on Venezuela. Article in Agreement as to assignment of the 30 per cent.

Dear Attorney-General, Foreign Office, February 10, 1903.

LORD LANSDOWNE is anxious to have your opinion, and that of the Solicitor-General, as soon as possible, upon the inclosed communication made to-day by the German Ambassador.*

The Protocol† and telegram are annexed, showing the addition to Article V, which

---

* German Embassy, February 9.

† Printed as Annex (B).

was made after our conference on Friday, and also telegram No. 62* which has been received this afternoon (12·15 P.M.) from Herbert. I do not think that you will require any other papers, but if you do, and will let me know, to the Foreign Office to-morrow, I will send them, or bring them down myself at any time which may be convenient to you.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) W. E. DAVIDSON.

Foreign Office to Attorney-General.

Dear Attorney-General, Foreign Office, February 10, 1903, 3·30 P.M.

I HAVE had a conversation with Lord Lansdowne since I wrote to you this morning, and find that the point which is specially causing him anxiety is this. It turns on the words which were added after our conference on Friday at the end of Article V, "if the Powers concerned so agree."

The Powers concerned means, of course, all the Powers concerned (i.e., not only the three blockading Powers but the other Powers interested, such as France, Belgium, &c.).

Lord Lansdowne wants to know how the thing is to work out if one or more of the blockading Powers do not agree, and I don't quite see what the answer is except that the Power so not agreeing will place itself in an unsympathetic and false position, and that practically there is little chance of a Power like France adopting such a line. However, it is clear, as it seems to me, that the decision of the Tribunal of The Hague will not be binding on any Power which does not "so agree."

If it would suit the Solicitor-General and yourself to look in at the Foreign Office at 6.15 (unless in the meantime I telegraph to you or you to me to the contrary), I think Lord Lansdowne would be grateful.

Meanwhile, if you or the Solicitor-General have time to add anything to your opinion (left herewith) on the specific point mentioned above, we should all of us be grateful.

I do not see how it is possible to securely stop every hole which the insidious Bowen has been able to burrow—but I think your solution of Friday is by far the best yet proposed, though it may be capable of yet further improvement.

Would it be possible by some form of words specifically to confine the category of the "Powers interested" to Powers who had already a vested interest, i.e., claims which, like those of France, had been acknowledged and recognized as valid by Venezuela.

This would prevent Nicaragua or some other Power being incited by Castro and Bowen to make a bogus claim which Venezuela would recognize in order to complicate the situation and upset the reference to The Hague.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) W. E. DAVIDSON.

Report by Law Officers.

WE think it reasonable and advantageous to meet one point raised by the insertion in Article V of a date for the assignment of the 30 per cent. This might be effected by inserting after the words "undertake to assign" the date selected.

It appears to us that the argument of the German Government on the question of the proposed addition of the words as to possible arbitration between the Powers concerned overlooks the fact that in the very nature of things the rights of other Powers cannot be settled by arbitration between the blockading Powers and Venezuela without the concurrence of the other Powers concerned. This is expressed by the words "if the Powers concerned so agree," but it would in any case be implied, and if the omission of these words would facilitate the acceptance by Germany of the Protocol in the form proposed we see no objection to the omission of these words.

As regards the difficulty raised as to the necessity for the accession of all the Powers to the proposed arbitration, we may point out that only the Powers concerned in the question as to which difference had arisen would have to accede, and the accession of the parties interested appears inevitable. This is, in fact, involved in the clause to which we understand the German Government offers no objection, that the distribution is to be "in accordance with arrangements to be hereafter made among the Powers interested."

---

* Sir M. Herbert's telegram No. 62, February 10, 1903.

1903

We think the proposed addition to Article V instead of a separate Agreement would be an improvement, as we feel much pressed by the objections which might be raised to the separate Agreement in the form proposed; but it is, of course, possible that this difficulty may have to be faced if it is necessary to secure the co-operation of the German Government in the proposed arrangement.

R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Law Courts, February 10, 1903.

Annex (A).

The Marquess of Lansdowne to Sir F. Lascelles.

(No. 51.)

Sir, Foreign Office, February 9, 1903.

I HAD a further conversation to-day with the German Ambassador in regard to Venezuelan affairs.

His Excellency called my attention to the alteration which we proposed to make in Article V of the draft Protocol.

The German Government regarded it as objectionable, and his Excellency made to me the following statement upon the subject:—

"Although we have shown our willingness to accept all proposals of Lord Lansdowne, my Government do not think that the newest proposal of the British Government is suitable for coming to an arrangement according to the wishes of the three Powers, in regard to the separate satisfaction out of Customs revenues. The proposal tends to settle the question, not by arbitration between the three Powers and Venezuela but by arbitration between the three Powers and the other creditor Powers. This of course implies that all other creditor Powers consent to such a settlement. (I refer to the English proposal 'If the Powers concerned so agree.') Every single creditor Power could prevent the conclusion of the Arbitration Treaty, which is necessary, according to Article XXXI of the Treaty of The Hague. Besides, it may be apprehended that Venezuela would induce one of the Powers to do so by promising special advantages. But even apart from that, the negotiations would take much time in consequence of the large number of Powers concerned, and would probably result in an Arbitration Treaty which would, from the beginning, leave no possibility of a result favourable to us.

"We therefore strongly recommend to adhere to the former English proposal. A claim of the other creditor Powers to be invited to the arbitration cannot be admitted since, as has repeatedly been pointed out, the question at issue solely concerns Venezuela and the blockading Powers. Besides, the claims of the other creditor Powers are already sufficiently supported by Venezuela, as in this point her interests are identic with theirs. In any case, the English proposal does not contain a stipulation as to who is to receive the Customs revenues until the question at issue has been decided. Venezuela would probably try to retain the Customs revenues up to that moment for herself."

His Excellency then called my attention to the additions to the Protocol suggested in Sir M. Herbert's telegram No. 60 of the 7th February.

Count Metternich was evidently under the impression that this proposal had originated with Sir M. Herbert. I explained to him, however, that Sir M. Herbert had reported it to us as having been put forward by the German Minister. On hearing this, Count Metternich referred to his notes and said that it had, at all events, been "warmly recommended" by the British and Italian Ministers.

The German Government would be glad to know what we thought of it, and whether we knew how it was regarded by the United States' Government.

I told his Excellency that the amendment of Article V had been the result of its examination by the Law Officers of the Crown. We believed that the questions affecting the distribution of any revenues set apart by the Venezuelan Government concerned the Powers amongst whom these revenues were to be distributed, and was a matter for decision as between them rather than as between them and Venezuela. It did not seem to us to be possible to prevent the Powers who had not been engaged in the blockade from having something to say to the question of distribution, if once that question were referred to arbitration.

I pointed out, moreover, that if the proposals described in Sir M. Herbert's telegram of the 7th February were to be adopted, questions affecting the obligations of Venezuela to the other Powers would certainly not be withdrawn from the consideration of the Tribunal at The Hague. I promised, however, that the criticisms of the German Government should be immediately considered.

Count Metternich then informed me that the German Government had learned that Mr. Bowen had refused to admit the first-rank claims of Germany. The German Government, therefore, intended to refuse to sign their Protocol or to raise the blockade until those claims had been settled in a satisfactory manner. The German Government trusted that we should concur with them in considering that this was the proper course, and that we would instruct our Ambassador to make a similar declaration to Mr. Bowen.

I said that we had never denied the right of Germany to demand prompt satisfaction for their first-rank claims, if not by immediate payment in cash, at least by "a safe guarantee for prompt payment" (vide the German note of the 22nd December, 1902). I was, however, bound to tell his Excellency that the situation which was being created by the unfortunate prolongation of these negotiations at Washington and the continuation of the blockade of the Venezuelan ports was most serious. We were warned by Sir M. Herbert as to the danger of an explosion of public feeling in the United States. In this country, too, the tension was becoming acute. I feared that the position of His Majesty's Government might become intolerable if, when Parliament met, it were found that although our own demands had been complied with, we had broken off negotiations on account of difficulties arising in consequence of the terms demanded by Germany for the payment of claims, the nature of which, it was well known, differed materially from that of our own. I reminded his Excellency that we had originally claimed an immediate payment of 66,000*l.* towards the satisfaction of our claims, and that, in order to facilitate a settlement, we had reduced our cash claims to a sum just sufficient for the satisfaction of our claims arising out of the seizure and plundering of British vessels and outrages on their crews.

His Excellency fully recognized the difficulty of the situation. He reminded me, however, as to the German first-rank claims, that the whole action of the German Government was based on them. If it had not been for these claims they would never have resorted to coercion. Many of these claims were, moreover, not very different from ours. Again, it should be borne in mind that our second-rank claims amounted to a much larger sum than those of Germany. Finally, we should not forget that the German first-rank claims had been twice taxed: once by the Legation at Carácas, and a second time by the Legal Department of the German Foreign Office. It was, therefore, only reasonable that Germany should insist upon their prompt payment, and upon their immunity from revision by the Mixed Commission.

I admitted the force of some of his Excellency's arguments: I said that it seemed to me that Germany required the fulfilment of two conditions in regard to her first-rank claims so far as these were not covered by the cash payment of 5,500*l.* which she was to receive.

These were:—

1. That she should have, to use the language of the German note of the 22nd December, a safe guarantee for prompt payment; and
2. That the claims in question should not be subject to further revision.

I told his Excellency that we were ready to do all that was possible in order to facilitate the fulfilment of the first condition, and that we were ready to agree that in any settlement which might be arrived at the balance of German first-rank claims should have priority over all British claims other than those covered by the cash payment which we were to receive.

As for the second condition, I doubted whether it would be resisted by the Venezuelan Government, and we should support the German Government in making such a demand.

Count Metternich seemed favourably impressed by my proposal, and promised to telegraph it to the German Government.

I informed Count Metternich confidentially that Sir M. Herbert was under the impression that there had been some misunderstanding between Mr. Bowen and the German Chargé d'Affaires upon the point which we had been discussing, and that Mr. Bowen probably believed that on his undertaking to pay 5,500*l.* to the German Government they would be willing not to press for an immediate settlement of the balance.

At the close of our conversation his Excellency mentioned to me that the German Government had heard that pamphlets were being circulated in Carácas throwing doubts upon Mr. Bowen's power to conclude an Agreement on behalf of the Republic without the consent of Congress.

I am, &c.
(Signed) LANSDOWNE.

Annex (B).

The following is the version, as actually signed, of the Protocol referred to in the above Report (see footnote):—

Protocol between the United Kingdom and the United States of Venezuela relating to the Settlement of the British Claims and other Matters.

WHEREAS certain differences have arisen between Great Britain and the United States of Venezuela in connection with the claims of British subjects against the Venezuelan Government, the Undersigned, his Excellency the Right Honourable Sir Michael H. Herbert, K.C.M.G., C.B., His Britannic Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States of America, and Mr. Herbert W. Bowen, duly authorized thereto by the Government of Venezuela, have agreed as follows:—

NOTE.—The copy actually submitted to the Law Officers was not forthcoming on going to press

1903

ARTICLE I.

The Venezuelan Government declare that they recognize in principle the justice of the claims which have been preferred by His Majesty's Government on behalf of British subjects.

ARTICLE II.

The Venezuelan Government will satisfy at once, by payment in cash or its equivalent, the claims of British subjects, which amount to about 5,500*l.*, arising out of the seizure and plundering of British vessels and the outrages on their crews, and the maltreatment and false imprisonment of British subjects.

ARTICLE III.

The British and Venezuelan Governments agree that the other British claims, including claims by British subjects other than those dealt with in Article VI hereof, and including those preferred by the Railway Companies, shall, unless otherwise satisfied, be referred to a Mixed Commission constituted in the manner defined in Article IV of this Protocol, and which shall examine the claims and decide upon the amount to be awarded in satisfaction of each claim.

The Venezuelan Government admit their liability in cases where the claim is for injury to, or wrongful seizure of, property, and consequently the questions which the Mixed Commission will have to decide in such cases will only be—

(a.) Whether the injury took place, and whether the seizure was wrongful; and

(b.) If so, what amount of compensation is due.

In other cases the claims shall be referred to the Mixed Commission without reservation.

ARTICLE IV.

The Mixed Commission shall consist of one British member and one Venezuelan member. In each case where they come to an agreement, their decision shall be final. In cases of disagreement, the claims shall be referred to the decision of an Umpire nominated by the President of the United States of America.

ARTICLE V.

The Venezuelan Government being willing to provide a sum sufficient for the payment within a reasonable time of the claims specified in Article III and similar claims preferred by other Governments, undertake to assign to the British Government, commencing the 1st day of March, 1903, for this purpose, and to alienate to no other purpose, 30 per cent. in monthly payments of the Customs revenues of La Guaira and Puerto Cabello. In the case of failure to carry out this undertaking, Belgian officials shall be placed in charge of the customs of the two ports, and shall administer them until the liabilities of the Venezuelan Government, in respect of the above-mentioned claims, shall have been discharged.

Any question as to the distribution of the Customs revenues so to be assigned and as to the rights of Great Britain, Germany, and Italy to a separate settlement of their claims, shall be determined, in default of arrangement, by the Tribunal at The Hague, to which any other Power interested may appeal.

Pending the decision of The Hague Tribunal, the said 30 per cent. of the receipts of the customs of the ports of La Guaira and Puerto Cabello are to be paid over to the representatives of the Bank of England at Carácas.

ARTICLE VI.

The Venezuelan Government further undertake to enter into a fresh arrangement respecting the external debt of Venezuela, with a view to the satisfaction of the claims of the bondholders. This arrangement shall include a definition of the sources from which the necessary payments are to be provided.

ARTICLE VII.

The British and Venezuelan Governments agree that, inasmuch as it may be contended that the establishment of a blockade of Venezuelan ports by the British naval forces has, ipso facto, created a state of war between Great Britain and Venezuela, and that any Treaty existing between the two countries has been thereby abrogated, it shall be recorded in an exchange of notes between the Undersigned that the Convention between Great Britain and Venezuela of October 29, 1834, which adopted and confirmed, mutatis mutandis, the Treaty of April 18, 1825, between Great Britain and the State of Colombia, shall be deemed to be renewed and confirmed, or provisionally renewed and confirmed, pending conclusion of a new Treaty of Amity and Commerce.

ARTICLE VIII.

Immediately upon the signature of this Protocol arrangements will be made by His Majesty's Government, in concert with the Governments of Germany and Italy, to raise the blockade of the Venezuelan ports.

His Majesty's Government will be prepared to restore the vessels of the Venezuelan navy which have been seized, and further to release any other vessels captured under the Venezuelan flag, on the receipt of a guarantee from the Venezuelan Government that they will hold His Majesty's Government indemnified in respect of any proceedings which might be taken against them by the owners of such ships or of goods on board them.

ARTICLE IX.

The Treaty of Amity and Commerce of October 29, 1834, having been confirmed in accordance with the terms of Article VII of this Protocol, His Majesty's Government will be happy to renew diplomatic relations with the Government of Venezuela.

Done in duplicate at Washington, this 13th day of February, 1903.

(L.S.) (Signed) MICHAEL H. HERBERT.
(L.S.) (Signed) HERBERT W. BOWEN.

No. 27.

[March 9, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Agreement for procedure of Claims Commission.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, March 7, 1903.

WITH reference to my letter of the 3rd instant* respecting the settlement of the claims preferred by British subjects against the Government of Venezuela, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit the draft of an Agreement (Paper A) dealing with the procedure of the Mixed Commission to which those claims are to be referred.

In my preceding letter I forwarded a copy of the Protocol of the 13th February, which provides for the constitution of the Mixed Commission, and a further copy (Paper B) of that document is inclosed for convenience of reference. At Mr. Bowen's request, all questions of detail were postponed until the Protocol had been signed and the blockade of the Venezuelan ports raised; but it now becomes necessary to complete the arrangements connected with the Commission. The present Agreement follows in the main points an Agreement (Paper C) signed between the United States' Government and the Government of Venezuela for the settlement of the claims of United States' citizens.

I have the honour to request that you will take these papers into your consideration and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether the Agreement may properly be signed in its present form, or whether any, and if so what, alterations may advantageously be introduced.

Lord Lansdowne would also be glad to receive any observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

Report.

We have the honour to return the draft Agreement as to the Commission. We approve of its terms subject to the query as to the phraseology to be used as to the currency in which payment is to be made.

(Signed) R. B FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

March 9, 1903.

---

* The Law Officers Report of March 11 (which see) was in reply to the above letter.

1903

Annex.

Whereas by a Protocol signed on the 13th February, 1903, by his Excellency the Right Honourable Sir Michael Henry Herbert, G.C.M.G., C.B., His Britannic Majesty's Ambassador, &c., and Mr. Herbert W. Bowen, duly authorized thereto by the Government of Venezuela, it was agreed that certain claims by British subjects, including those preferred by the Railway Companies against the Government of Venezuela should, unless otherwise satisfied, be referred under the conditions specified in the Protocol to a Mixed Commission, to consist of one British and one Venezuelan member; and that in each case where the Commissioners came to an agreement, their decision should be final; and that, in cases of disagreement, the claims should be referred to the decision of an Umpire nominated by the President of the United States of America:

Now, the Undersigned, &c., have further agreed as follows:—

If either of the said Commissioners or the Umpire should fail or cease to act, his successor shall be appointed forthwith in the same manner as his predecessor. The said Commissioners and Umpire are to be appointed before the 1st day of May, 1903.

The Commissioners and the Umpire shall meet at   , on the 1st day of June, 1903. Before assuming the functions of their office the Commissioners, and the Umpire if necessary, shall make solemn oath or declaration carefully to examine and impartially decide according to justice and the provisions of the Protocol of the 13th February, 1903, all claims submitted to them, and the oath or declaration so made shall be embodied in the record of their proceedings. The Commissioners, or, in case of their disagreement, the Umpire, shall decide all claims upon a basis of absolute equity, without regard to objections of a technical nature or the provisions of local legislation.

The decisions of the Commission, and, in the event of their disagreement, those of the Umpire, shall be final and conclusive. They shall be given in writing. All awards shall be made payable in sterling.

The Commissioners or Umpire, as the case may be, shall investigate and decide the said claims upon such evidence or information only as shall be furnished by or on behalf of the Governments of Great Britain and Venezuela respectively. They shall be bound to receive and consider all written documents or statements which may be presented to them by or on behalf of these Governments respectively in support of, or in answer to, any claim, and to hear oral or written arguments submitted by the Agent of each Government on every claim. In case of their failure to agree in opinion upon any individual claim the Umpire shall decide.

Every claim shall be formally presented to the Commissioners within thirty days from the day of their first meeting, unless the Commissioners or the Umpire in any case extend the time for presenting the claim for a further period not exceeding three months. The Commissioners shall be bound to examine and decide upon every claim within six months from the day of its first formal presentation, and, in case of their disagreement, the Umpire shall examine and decide within a corresponding period from the date of such disagreement.

The Commissioners and the Umpire shall keep an accurate record of their proceedings. For that purpose each Commissioner shall appoint a secretary, versed in the language of both countries, to assist him in the transaction of the business of the Commission. Except as herein stipulated all questions of procedure shall be left to the determination of the Commissioners, or, in case of their disagreement, to the Umpire.

Reasonable remuneration to the Commissioners and to the Umpire for their services and expenses, and the other expenses of the said arbitration, are to paid in equal moieties by the Powers parties to this Agreement.

R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 28.

[March 11, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, March 3, 1903.

Agreement to refer to Hague Tribunal the claims of all the Powers.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the accompanying draft of an Agreement (Paper A) which has been prepared with a view to the submission to the Tribunal of the Hague of certain further questions arising out of the action of Great Britain, Germany, and Italy, in connection with the settlement of their claims against Venezuela, beyond those in respect of which a Protocol has already been signed by His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington and Mr. Bowen as the Representative of Venezuela. A copy of this Protocol is inclosed (Paper C).

The circumstances which have made it necessary to draw up this Agreement are as follows:—

On the 24th January Mr. Bowen, as Representative of the Venezuelan Government, informed Sir M. Herbert, His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington, that he was authorized by President Castro to offer 30 per cent. of the Customs receipts of La Guayra and Puerto Cabello in satisfaction of the claims of the creditor Powers against Venezuela.

Mr. Bowen in reply to inquiries explained that this offer was intended to satisfy not only the claims of the three Powers, Great Britain, Germany, and Italy, then engaged in active operations against Venezuela, but also the claims upon Venezuela of other Powers, namely, France, Belgium, the United States, Spain, the Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, Denmark, and Mexico.

His Majesty's Government declined to accept this offer. Their views were explained in a note addressed, according to his instructions, by Sir M. Herbert to Mr. Hay on the 6th ultimo, in which, after reviewing some of the previous communications with the United States' Government, his Excellency proceeded as follows:—

"Mr. Bowen has apparently felt himself precluded from coming to any arrangement which would not place all the Powers claiming compensation from Venezuela upon precisely the same footing.

"This seems to His Majesty's Government to be a course quite opposed both to principles of equity and to international practice. They could not assent to it except at the instance of some competent Umpire or Arbitration Tribunal.

"It must be remembered that no proposal of the kind was made until Mr. Bowen's arrival in Washington; that neither the President of the United States in his communications with His Majesty's Government, nor any of the blockading Powers, nor, so far as His Majesty's Government are aware, President Castro had ever suggested making the neutral Powers party to the controversy between the blockading Powers and Venezuela. It must further be borne in mind that the preferential treatment for which the blockading Powers have asked is not one which either exhausts the resources at the disposal of Venezuela for the payment of her external debt, or which interferes with what is known as the 'Diplomatic Debt,' a charge amounting to only 5·2 per cent. on the total Customs revenue of Venezuela. There can be no doubt that the neutral Powers will be in a far better position under the proposal made by the blockading Powers than they have ever been before, and this without any of the cost and trouble necessarily incidental to naval operations.

"Under these circumstances it seems to his Majesty's Government that the most expeditious mode of terminating the hostilities would be to embody the conditions already accepted by Mr. Bowen on behalf of the Government of Venezuela, including those for the settlement of the first rank of claims, in a Protocol to be signed at Washington, and to refer the proposal made by him for the identic treatment of all the creditor Powers to the Hague Tribunal, unless indeed the President of the United States would be prepared in the interests of a speedy settlement to decide the single point which appears to stand in the way of a complete agreement between the blockading Powers and Venezuela.

"Should the President consent to adopt this suggestion, the following questions would have to be adjudicated upon by him:—

"1. Whether the three Powers are not entitled to a separate settlement provided this settlement leaves an adequate margin for the payment of claims of the other Powers, having regard to the resources of Venezuela?

"2. If the answer to the first question is in the affirmative, then what are the terms of payment which would leave such adequate margin?

"If the answer to the first question is in the negative, then is it not equitable that some compensation should be made by Venezuela to the three Powers for the expense which they have incurred in connection with the blockade."

The President of the United States declined to adjudicate on the question thus raised, and it therefore became necessary to provide, in the Protocol signed on the 13th ultimo between His Majesty's Government and the Government of Venezuela, for a reference to the Tribunal at the Hague. This was done by Article V in the following terms:—

"Any question as to the distribution of the Customs revenues so to be assigned, and as to the right of Great Britain, Germany, and Italy to a separate settlement of their claims, shall be determined, in default of arrangement, by the Tribunal at the Hague by arbitration, to which any other Power interested may appeal."

1903

Similar provision was made in the Protocols signed on the same date by Mr. Bowen and the Representatives at Washington of Germany and Italy.

Mr. Bowen has since been engaged in negotiating Protocols with the other creditor Powers. It was intended, before any further step was taken by His Majesty's Government, to ascertain whether these Protocols contained an engagement to refer to the Hague the question of a separate settlement for Great Britain, Germany, and Italy. If so, the idea was, after consultation with the Law Officers of the Crown, to propose to all the Powers an Agreement on the lines of the accompanying draft marked (A).

Mr. Bowen has, however anticipated any such proposal on the part of His Majesty's Government, and has himself drawn up a form of Agreement, the text of which Sir M. Herbert, at Mr. Bowen's request, has transmitted by telegraph (see paper marked B).

The Agreement (A) reproduces the conditions set forth in Sir M. Herbert's note to Mr. Hay of the 6th February, and is so drawn as to include all the creditor Powers, on the assumption that they will engage to refer to the Tribunal at the Hague, and also to include Venezuela, who may rightly claim to be one of the Powers interested if the resources of the country are to be considered.

With regard to the third condition of reference, it is necessary to point out that no provision for repayment of the expenses of the blockade was made in the Protocol signed by Sir M. Herbert and Mr. Bowen, nor has any such claim ever been specifically made upon the Venezuelan Government.

On the other hand, it is not unreasonable to contend that if, contrary to the just expectation of His Majesty's Government, the Tribunal at the Hague should decide that the blockading Powers are not entitled to a separate settlement they should obtain in some other way reimbursement of the expenses to which they have been put. It is understood that this view is strongly held by the German Government.

The Agreement proposed by Mr. Bowen seems to be open to objection on two points at any rate.

1st. It leaves the adhesion of the non-blockading Powers an open question. It would therefore be possible for any of these to prevent a settlement by refusing to appear before the Tribunal, and declining to accept any decision given in favour of the blockading Powers.

2ndly. Article 1 would restrict the provision made for the settlement of all the claims to the 30 per cent. of the two ports, and would preclude the Tribunal from taking account of the assignment already made for the liquidation of "the Diplomatic Debt," or from dealing in its Award with any sources of revenue other than the 30 per cent. above mentioned.

I have the honour to request that you will take these papers into your consideration and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether the Agreement, marked (A), may properly be put forward in its present form by His Majesty's Government, or whether any, and, if so, what alterations in its language may advantageously be introduced.

His Lordship would also be glad to receive any observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.) Draft Agreement prepared by His Majesty's Government.
(B.) Draft Agreement submitted by Mr. Bowen.
(C.) Protocol providing for settlement of claims.

Report.

On the whole we are disposed to prefer Form (B) with the additions which we have suggested in pencil.*

The last Article provides for the accession of the other Powers, but will admit of the arbitration proceeding whether they accede or not. This will probably lead to their coming in as parties, while delay might be caused if they had to be made formal parties to the Agreement in the first instance.

R. B. F.
E. C.

March 11, 1903.

Annex.

Form (B.)

"Article 1. The question as to whether or not Great Britain, Germany, and Italy, are entitled to preferential or separate treatment in the payment of their claims against Venezuela, by reason of the fact that they blockaded the ports of Venezuela so as to compel her to make a settlement with them, shall be submitted for final decision to the Tribunal at the Hague. Venezuela having agreed to set aside 30 per cent. of the Customs revenues of La Guayra and Puerto Cabello for the payment of the claims of all nations against Venezuela, the Tribunal at the Hague shall decide how the said revenues shall be distributed among the said nations, and its decision shall be final.

"In deciding this question the Tribunal shall have regard to the resources of Venezuela other than the 30 per cent. Customs revenues so set aside which may be available for the payment of the claims of other Powers.

"Art. 2. If preferential or separate treatment is not given to Italy, Great Britain, and Germany, the Tribunal may consider whether any and what compensation should be made by Venezuela to these Powers for the expense which they have incurred in connection with the blockade.

"Art. ~~2~~. 3. The facts on which shall depend the decision of the questions stated in Article 1 shall be ascertained in such manner as the Tribunal may determine.

"Art. ~~3~~. 4. The Emperor of Russia shall be invited to name and appoint three Arbitrators to constitute the Court that is to determine and settle the questions submitted to it under and by virtue of this Agreement. The Court shall meet on the 1st day of September, 1903, and shall render its decision within six months thereafter.

"Art. ~~4~~. 5. The proceedings shall be carried on in the English language. Except as herein otherwise stipulated the procedure shall be regulated by the Hague Convention of the 29th July, 1899.

"Art. ~~5~~. 6. The Court shall decide how, when, and by whom the cost of this arbitration shall be paid.

"Art. ~~6~~. 7. Any nation having claims against Venezuela may join as a party in the arbitration provided for by this Agreement."

No. 29.

[July 1, 1903.]

*Report by the Law Officers of the Crown.

British vessels proceeding to Ciudad Bolivar. As to seizing in absence of blockade.

IT appears to us that the telegram should not be sent in either of the forms proposed. We think it would be legitimate for His Majesty's Government to protest and, if necessary, to enforce reprisals if the Government of Venezuela should, without proclaiming a blockade, seize or attempt to confiscate any British vessels making their way to Ciudad Bolivar, as such penalties could only be enforced for breach of a formal blockade which would involve the recognition of the insurgents as belligerents, but we know of no principle of international law by which His Majesty's Government could prevent Venezuela from prohibiting the passage through her territorial waters in the Orinoco of British and other ships on their way to Ciudad Bolivar. The fact that Ciudad Bolivar is in the hands of the insurgents is, we think, a circumstance which would prevent such prohibition from constituting a breach of the comity of nations.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the telegram to be sent should be confined to protesting against seizure or confiscation of British ships. We may add that it does not appear on what ground Venezuela bases her action, and we have thought it right to indicate the above considerations in order that His Majesty's Government may not

---

* Printed in italics.

* No document explaining the points referred to the Law Officers was forthcoming on going to press.

1903 become involved in a line of action which, if Venezuela resisted, might prove not to be justifiable on principles of international law.

R. B. F.
E. C.

July 1, 1903.

Annex.

The Marquess of Lansdowne to Mr. Bax-Ironside.

(No. 25.)
(Telegraphic.)

Foreign Office, July 3, 1903.

INFORM Venezuelan Government that as Ciudad Bolivar is in possession of insurgents, His Majesty's Government cannot recognize the right of the Venezuelan Government to seize and confiscate British merchant-vessels proceeding thither unless a blockade of the port be proclaimed and effectively maintained.

Such a blockade will involve recognition of the insurgents as belligerents.

His Majesty's Government may have to send a British man-of-war to Bolivar in case of necessity to protect British life and property there.

The text of the President's Decree will be published in the "London Gazette," with a notification that as Ciudad Bolivar is in the possession of the insurgents, who have not yet been recognized as belligerents, His Majesty's Government are in communication with the Government of Venezuela as to the effect of the above notification.

R. B. F.
E. C.

July 2, 1903.

No. 30.

[July 24, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, June 11, 1903.

Gentlemen,

Law affecting National Status, in Venezuela, of foreigners.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying List, which relate to a Law passed by the Venezuelan Congress on the 16th April last, affecting the status of foreigners resident in Venezuela.

Since the date (18th April) of the despatch from His Majesty's Minister at Carácas (Paper A) in which he forwards a translation of this Law, a telegram has been received from him (Paper D), in which he states that the President of Venezuela has instructed the Governors of the various States forming the Republic not to enforce the provisions of the new Law against foreigners for the present.

It is thought necessary, however, in view of the intrinsic importance of this Law and of its possible effects on the rights of British subjects, that, notwithstanding the receipt of this information, His Majesty's Government should come to a decision as to the attitude to be taken up with regard to it, for its suspension appears to have been only temporary, and its provisions may be put into effect at any moment.

The Law appears to Lord Lansdowne to be an attempt on the part of the Venezuelan Government to deprive foreigners within the territories of the Republic, as soon as they have been in the country for two years, of their nationality of origin, and of the advantages which that nationality might confer, without giving them (1) any option or election in the matter, or (2) any complete national status in exchange for that which they will lose. It rigorously excludes them from any share in the public life of Venezuela (Article 6, (3), and Article 8, despite the general statement contained in Article 1), and compels them, on pain of expulsion, to agree to bear all the burdens that Venezuelans have to bear (except military service and forced loans during revolutions), and to forego resort to diplomatic intervention (Articles 5, 11, and 12).

In this there is, of course, nothing which directly affects His Majesty's Government, as neither residence in Venezuela nor the declaration provided for in the Law (Article 12) confer Venezuelan nationality, so as to amount to naturalization under section 6 of the Naturalization Act of 1870, which would deprive the individuals of their British nationality according to English law. In practice, however, it would be much more difficult for His Majesty's Government to intervene on behalf of a man who had made such a declaration, and the Venezuelan Government would meet such intervention with the expulsion of the individual.

Lord Lansdowne is advised that in the strict theory of international law a State may be entitled to exclude or even to expel all foreigners from her borders (subject to reasonable conditions as to notice), but that where Treaties of amity and commerce exist the theoretical right is limited by the Treaty engagement, and that this Law cannot be applied against British subjects without contravening British Treaty rights.

By Article II of the Treaty (Paper E) with Colombia of 1825 (of which State Venezuela then formed a part), confirmed by Venezuela as an independent State in 1834, the latter has agreed to allow British subjects to enter, remain, and reside in any part of her territories.

According to the natural and obvious meaning of language, the terms of this stipulation would seem to import that British subjects having entered Venezuela should be permitted to remain and reside in any part of the territories of that Republic without being compelled in any way to modify the British national status with which they were clothed on entering these territories; and it would therefore in his Lordship's opinion be contrary both to the spirit and the letter of the Treaty for Venezuela to refuse to allow British subjects to remain in her territory unless they agreed to divest themselves, in contemplation and for the purposes of Venezuelan law and so long as they remained within Venezuelan jurisdiction, of the attributes of British nationality.

It is true that the right of residence conferred by Article II of the Treaty is qualified by the final phrase "subject to the laws of the two countries respectively." Lord Lansdowne does not think, however, that this has any deeper significance than has a phrase which occurs in Article XI of the same Treaty, to the effect that the Parties may carry on their trade in the dominions of the other "so long as they behave peaceably and commit no offence against the laws," and that neither of these expressions can entitle Venezuela, by an internal Law, to render inoperative one of the principal provisions of the Treaty.

In addition to the above general considerations the following observations may be made with regard to certain details of the Law:—

Article IX of the Treaty provides for the exemption of British subjects from all compulsory military service whatever. Article 5 of the new Law is limited to exemption from military service, &c., in revolutions and intestine struggles. Any attempt to compel British subjects to undertake military service against a foreign Power would seem to violate Article IX of the Treaty.

Article 14 of the Law prohibiting the issue of exequaturs to Consular officers engaged in trade appears to be contrary to Article X of the Treaty, which states that the Contracting Parties shall be free to appoint Consuls for the protection of trade, but in that Article there is no mention of, and nothing to point to, the entire exclusion of the class from which a large proportion of Consular officers is habitually drawn. If Venezuela desires not to have British Consuls residing in her territory who are engaged in trade, her proper course would be to enter into negotiations with His Majesty's Government with a view to amending, in this regard, the provisions of the Treaty of 1825.

Article 15 of the Law prohibits the establishment within the territory of Venezuela of Societies of any kind whatever which have not their head-quarters in that country. It is presumed that the expression "Societies" means "Companies," and that the intention of the provision was to exclude all Companies from trading in the Republic, unless their head-quarters are in Venezuela. Lord Lansdowne has some doubt as to how far the Treaty of 1825 covers Corporations. It was drafted at a time when trading Companies scarcely existed, and seems to refer only to individual persons; but his Lordship is disposed to think that His Majesty's Government might be entitled to claim that a British Company under Article VIII of the Treaty can carry on their business in Venezuela by an agent.

Article 11 of the new Law states that foreigners shall not have any right to resort to diplomatic intervention, except when they have exhausted their legal remedies before the Venezuelan Courts, with the result that a denial of justice is clearly apparent. The attitude usually adopted by His Majesty's Government with regard to Decrees of this nature, which have from time to time been promulgated by various South American Republics, has, as you are aware, been to decline to recognize their validity.

For instance, in 1873, the Venezuelan Government issued a Decree requiring that foreigners having claims against the Republic should have recourse to the Tribunals of the country, to the exclusion of diplomatic intervention. The then Law Officers of the Crown, who were consulted in the matter, advised that His Majesty's Minister at Carácas should be instructed to inform the Venezuelan Government that His Majesty's Government reserved to themselves the right, if occasion should require it, of objecting to any claim on the part of the Venezuelan Republic at any future time to have relieved itself by its own Decree from responsibility towards Great Britain in respect of wrongs or injuries done to British subjects, for which the Venezuelan Republic would be liable to make compensation either under the general law of nations or under Treaty engagements. A copy of this Report (Paper F) is inclosed herewith.

1903

His Majesty's Minister at Carácas was at the time instructed in the sense of this Report, and an intimation in the same sense has been renewed on more than one subsequent occasion, both to Venezuela and to others of the South or Central American Republics.

With reference to Article 11 it may, therefore, be thought sufficient to recall attention to these previous communications.

Other Reports, furnished by your predecessors at various times, on subjects which bear some analogy to the one now under discussion, are transmitted herewith for your information and for convenience of reference, but no completely analogous precedents have been discovered in the archives of this office.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether a general remonstrance should be made against the Venezuelan Law in question, on the ground that it attempts to limit the protection which His Majesty's Government is entitled to afford to British subjects in Venezuela.

2. Whether the following provisions of the Law would not, if enforced against British subjects, be contrary to the stipulations of the Treaty of 1825:—

(a.) Article 8, requiring domiciled foreigners to make a declaration of their submission to the Law;

(b.) Article 5, which exempts foreigners from military service only in the case of revolution;

(c.) Article 14, prohibiting the issue of exequaturs to Consuls engaged in trade;

(d.) Article 15, relative to "Societies."

Lord Lansdowne would also be glad to be furnished with any observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer on the papers.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Mr. Bax Ironside	(No. 67)	April	18, 1903.
(B.)	Ditto	(No. 81)	April	25, ,,
(C.)	Ditto	(No. 89)	May	2, ,,
(D.)	Ditto	(No. 97)	May	11, ,,
(E.)	Ditto	(No 23. Telegraphic)	May	12, ,,
(F.)	Treaty between His Majesty's Government and Colombia of April 18, 1825 (Library No. 214).
(G.)	Law Officers' Report		April	22, 1873.
(H.)	Ditto .. .. (Together with copy of despatch to Mr. Graham No. 25 of August 5, 1881.)		July	18, 1881.
(I.)	Ditto		May	14, 1884.
(K.)	Ditto		September	(?), 1862.
(L.)	Ditto		April	28, 1880.
(M.)	Ditto		February	1, 1881.
(N.)	Two Reports from Law Officers		February and April	11, 1890. 25, ,,

---

Report.

1. We think a general remonstrance should be made upon the ground stated, and also upon the ground that the Law, taken as a whole, is inconsistent with the Treaty rights existing between His Majesty's Government and Venezuela.

2. We think that the provisions referred to under heads (a), (b), and (d) would be contrary to the stipulations of the Treaty of 1825. As regards (c) it is not in direct violation of the Treaty, but if in practice it prevents His Majesty's Government from taking advantage of the right to appoint Consuls, we think it may properly be made the subject of diplomatic representation.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 24, 1903.

No. 31.

[July 29, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, July 10, 1903.

Treatment of United States' vessels "Carácas" and "Maracaibo" during Venezuelan Blockade.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying List relative to the treatment of the American steam-ships "Carácas" and "Maracaibo" by the British naval authorities engaged in blockading the port of La Guayra during the early part of this year.

The "Carácas" and "Maracaibo" are vessels belonging to the "Red D" line of steamers, which are under a contract with the Government of the United States to carry the mails between the port of New York and several ports of Venezuela. A note was received from the American Chargé d'Affaires (Paper A) in which he complained—

1. That the days of grace allowed by the Proclamation of Blockade (Paper B), published in the "London Gazette" of the 19th December, 1902, were not observed by Captain de Horsey, of His Majesty's ship "Tribune," the British man-of-war engaged in carrying out the blockade at La Guayra; and

2. That unfair discrimination was exercised against the "Carácas" and "Maracaibo" by the blockading force in that—

(a.) They were informed by Captain de Horsey that, having called at La Guayra, they would not be allowed to enter the ports of Puerto Cabello and Maracaibo respectively, whereas a Dutch vessel, which had called at the port of Guanta, had been allowed to enter La Guayra;

(b.) That the "Carácas" was ordered to leave La Guayra before she had completed the discharge of her cargo.

It was considered necessary in the first place to ascertain the exact facts and the reasons for the course alleged to have been followed by the Captain of His Majesty's ship "Tribune." The Admiralty were, consequently, requested (Paper C) to obtain a report on the case, and a letter has been received from that Department (Paper D) forwarding a Report from Captain de Horsey.

With regard to the charges of non-observance of the days of grace and unfair discrimination, based on the alleged prohibition to enter Puerto Cabello and Maracaibo, the following considerations occur to Lord Lansdowne:—

Puerto Cabello and Maracaibo were the two ports blockaded by Germany under an independent German Proclamation of Blockade, and the blockading ships were acting under the instructions of the German Imperial Government. It is clear that Captain de Horsey was not in a position to prohibit a vessel from entering these ports, and even if he had attempted to do so, the German naval authorities would not have been in any way bound by anything he said or did. Captain de Horsey denies, however, that he at any time communicated any information with regard to restrictions affecting ports other than La Guayra, as such ports were outside his jurisdiction. He adds that his opinion on such points was several times asked, and that he gave it to the best of his ability, expressly stating, however, that he had no jurisdiction over the acts of other Commanders.

It appears to his Lordship that Captain de Horsey had, in reality, no better means of knowing what would or would not be permitted at Puerto Cabello and Maracaibo than had the captains of the "Red D" steamers themselves.

It seems probable that, to avoid the trouble of going to the two ports concerned in order to ascertain whether they would be admitted, the masters of the American vessels applied to the Senior British Naval Officer on the spot for information on the subject, and that hearing that there was a probability of their not being admitted, they decided to sail straight to Curaçoa, and subsequently to make an attempt to shift the responsibility on to the blockading Powers.

1903

As to the treatment meted out to the Dutch steamer, it appears to show (if it shows anything) that if the two vessels had gone to Puerto Cabello and Maracaibo respectively and had been denied admittance by the German blockading ships, their owners might have had a good cause of complaint against the German Government; but Lord Lansdowne is unable to see that the British naval authorities are in any way involved or concerned as regards this point.

For the above reasons it appears to his Lordship that, in so far as the complaints of the American vessels are based on the alleged prohibition against entering Puerto Cabello and Maracaibo, the charges of non-observance of the days of grace and unfair discrimination cannot be sustained.

As to the complaint that the "Carácas" was not allowed sufficient time to discharge her cargo, it appears from a despatch received from His Majesty's Minister at Carácas (Paper E) that the British steam-ship "Yucatan" was, for reasons unconnected with the blockade, which had not then been established, not allowed to enter La Guayra on the 17th December, and, consequently, discharged her cargo for that port at Curaçoa; and that the master of the steam-ship "Carácas," with the object, it may be assumed, of making additional profit, took on board all the goods from the "Yucatan," proposing to discharge them at La Guayra as well as his own. The date on which he shipped them and sailed from Curaçoa was the 22nd December, i.e., two days after the blockade began, and Lord Lansdowne is advised that the goods shipped at Curaçoa were not entitled to enter La Guayra under the days of grace clause, seeing that, in so far as those goods were concerned, the voyage of the vessel did not begin till two days after the notification and commencement of the blockade. His Lordship understands that the allowance of a period of grace is intended to enable the ship to complete a voyage which had been begun, and to land cargo which she had on board when the blockade was declared; but that it no more entitles her to load cargo at an intermediate port after the declaration of blockade, and to convey it to the blockaded port than the period of fifteen days of grace allowed by the Proclamation of the 20th January to vessels lying in the blockaded port enables them to begin loading a cargo after the commencement of the blockade.

On these grounds the captain of the "Tribune" would, it is thought, have been justified in refusing admittance to the American vessel, all the more as he had already written a Circular letter to the Consular Body at La Guayra, in which he announced that a steamer arriving in the harbour would be allowed "to discharge cargo consigned before the 20th December, 1902," and that "no cargo consigned since that date could be landed."

Captain de Horsey, however, examined the ship's papers, and allowed her to enter. All vessels similarly allowed to enter La Guayra under the days of grace clause were given one day to land their passengers and discharge their cargo (the average time at La Guayra for the double process of loading and unloading being one and a-half days).

It seems to be pretty clear that if the "Carácas" had unloaded only the cargo consigned from New York she would have had ample time to do so, but she occupied her time in discharging the goods from Curaçoa. No doubt this cargo was stowed on the top of her original cargo, and therefore had to be removed before the New York cargo underneath could be reached. But, in Lord Lansdowne's opinion, although this supposition would explain the inability of the "Carácas" to discharge the whole within the time limit, it would not, if a fact, appear to furnish any ground of complaint on her part.

It is to be noted, moreover, that, according to the statement of Captain de Horsey, no complaint was made at any time by either vessel to the naval officers, and that no formal protest in writing was made, either then or subsequently.

I am to request that you will take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether the owners of the "Carácas" and "Maracaibo" have any claim against His Majesty's Government for compensation on account of their treatment by the British naval authorities, and in the event of the reply to this inquiry being in the negative, as to the answer which should be returned to the United States' Government, and the considerations by which such answer may most effectively be supported.

Lord Lansdowne would at the same time be glad to be furnished with any observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Mr. White		January 22, 1903.
(B.)	Proclamation of Blockade [Confidential 7829*]		December 20, 1902.
(C.)	To Admiralty		February 28, 1903.
(D.)	Admiralty		June 9, "
(E.)	Mr. Bax-Ironside	(No. 85)	April 29, "

Report.

We are of opinion that the owners of the "Carácas" and "Maracaibo" have no claim against His Majesty's Government for compensation under the circumstances stated.

We think the facts should be fully laid before the Government of the United States with a statement that under the circumstances His Majesty's Government cannot admit any claim for compensation.

We agree with the minute of Mr. Hurst and the reasons stated by him.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 29, 1903.

Annex.

Minutes on Admiralty Letter of June 9, 1903.

WE are now in a position to answer the complaints of the United States' Government with regard to the treatment of the steam-ships "Maracaibo" and "Carácas" of the "Red D" line during the Venezuelan blockade.

The complaints are twofold: (a) that the days of grace were not observed; and (b) that unfair discrimination was exercised against the American ships, in that—

(i.) Having called at La Guayra they were told they could not call at Maracaibo; when a Dutch vessel that had called at Guanta had been allowed to enter La Guayra.

(ii.) That the "Carácas" was ordered to leave La Guayra before she had completed the discharge of her cargo.

As to the prohibition to enter Maracaibo because the vessels had called at La Guayra—

Maracaibo was one of the ports blockaded by Germany: the Captain of His Majesty's ship "Tribune," the ship maintaining the blockade at La Guayra, states that no information was at any time communicated by him as to entering ports other than La Guayra as they were outside his jurisdiction; that his opinion on such points was several times asked, and he gave it to the best of his ability, expressly stating, however, that he had no jurisdiction over the actions of other commanders.

It is clear that Captain de Horsey (of His Majesty's ship "Tribune") was not in a position to prohibit a vessel from entering a port blockaded by Germany; even if he had attempted to do so, which he denies the Germans would not have been in the least bound by anything he said or did; they were carrying on an independent blockade, initiated under a German Proclamation and maintained under German instructions, and Captain de Horsey had no better means of knowing what would or would not be permitted at Maracaibo than the Captains of the "Red D" steamers had themselves. To save themselves the trouble of going to Maracaibo to see if they would be admitted, I expect they asked the Senior British Naval Officer if they would be allowed to call at Maracaibo, and hearing that they very likely would not be allowed to, decided to sail straight away to Curaçoa, and try to shift the responsibility on to the Blockading Powers. The treatment meted out to the Dutch steamer shows (if it shows anything) that had these vessels gone to Maracaibo and been denied admission by the German blockading ships they might have a good cause of complaint against the German Government. In so far as the complaints are based on the alleged prohibition against entering Maracaibo, the charges of non-observance of the days of grace and unfair discrimination appear to me to break down.

1903

As to the complaint that the "Carácas" was not allowed sufficient time to discharge her cargo, it appears from Mr. Bax Ironside's No. 85 that the British steam-ship "Yucatan" was not allowed to enter La Guayra on the 17th December, so she discharged her cargo for that port at Curaçoa. The Captain of the steam-ship "Carácas," thinking to do a good stroke of business, took on board all the goods from the "Yucatan," proposing to discharge them at La Guayra as well as his own. The date on which he shipped them and sailed from Curaçoa was the 22nd December, i.e., two days after the blockade, and, in my opinion, the goods shipped at Curaçoa were not entitled to enter La Guayra under the days of grace at all; in so far as concerned those goods the voyage of the vessel did not commence till after the blockade; the allowance of a period of grace is to enable the ship to complete her voyage and land the cargo which she had on board when the blockade was declared; it does not, in my opinion, enable her to load cargo at an intermediate port after the declaration of blockade and convey it to the blockaded port, any more than the fifteen days of grace allowed to vessels lying in the blockaded port enables them to load cargo after the commencement of the blockade (Hall, p. 733*).

The Captain of the "Tribune," however, examined the ship's papers and allowed her in, but, according to the letter which he had previously issued to the Consular Body at La Guayra, the cargo from Curaçoa ought not to have been landed at all. All vessels allowed to enter that harbour under the days of grace were given one day to land their passengers and discharge their cargo (the average time being one and a-half days for unloading and loading); had the "Carácas" unloaded only the cargo consigned from New York she would have had ample time to do so, but she occupied her time with the goods from Curaçoa. It does not appear to me that she has any ground for complaint if, being given time sufficient for landing what she was entitled to land, she fails to do so, and prefers to discharge cargo that she was not entitled to have on board at all, and the presence of which, in my opinion, exposed her to liability to seizure and condemnation.

According to the Admiralty information no complaint was made at any time by either of these vessels to the naval officers, nor was any copy of any protest given them.

I think this will afford material to answer the United States' Government.

C. J. B. H.

Foreign Office, June 30, 1903.

I agree. It is clear that the "Carácas" when she took on board the "Yucatan's" cargo at Curaçoa, whence she cleared for La Guayra on the 22nd December, was fixed with knowledge of the existence of the blockade, and although she may have been entitled to unload her original cargo at La Guayra she was not entitled to land the cargo she took on board at Curaçoa after the blockade had commenced.

No doubt this cargo was stowed on top of her original cargo, and therefore had to be removed before the blameless cargo underneath could be reached; but this fact, although it explains why she could not unload her original cargo within the time limit prescribed furnishes no ground of complaint on her part.

I need not add further, however, to what Mr. Hurst has already said, as he has gone into the matter fully, and I agree generally with his views.

I think, however, that as this is rather an important case, involving discussion with a foreign Government, and also (incidentally) a complaint in my opinion absolutely unfounded and unsustainable—against an officer in His Majesty's service in the discharge of his duty, it will be right and proper as well as in accordance with our usual procedure to refer the papers to the Law Officers of the Crown before taking further action.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, July 1, 1903.

Seen.—C. J. B. H.

Foreign Office, July 1, 1903.

---

* Mr. Hurst: I believe this means to begin to load a cargo. I think the ship may finish loading a cargo bonâ fide bought and begun to be put on board before the commencement of the blockade. But the subject is full of obscurity, and is treated in a hazy manner even by Hall.—W. E. D. July 1, 1903.

ZANZIBAR.

No. 32.

[February 9, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, January 12, 1903.

Infringement of Liquor Ordinance by foreigners: As to who deals with.

ON the 11th February, 1899, the then Law Officers of the Crown reported as follows with regard to the application of certain Articles of the General Act of the Brussels Conference relative to the African Slave Trade, signed the 2nd July, 1890, in the case of a man named Reich:—

"It seems quite clear that in practice the provisions of the Brussels Act in regard to fire-arms would become a dead letter unless all persons who offend against them of whatever nationality are amenable to the Courts of the State within whose territory the offence has been committed. It is obvious that it is by that State that the prohibition against importations must be enforced, and this applies also to the enforcement of penalties for unlawful possession. We therefore think that by implication the Brussels Conference superseded the right of extra-territoriality in the case of offences against its provisions in respect of fire arms"; and the Law Officers then proceeded to add that inasmuch as the offence for which Reich had been tried at Mombasa in the Sultanate of Zanzibar was for having fire-arms in his possession contrary to the provisions of the Brussels Act, and of the laws made in pursuance of those provisions, he was for the reasons given in the Report amenable to the jurisdiction of the State within whose frontiers the infraction of the Act was committed.

The question has now arisen whether a similar principle applies to the "restrictive measures concerning the traffic in spirituous liquors" which form Chapter VI of the Brussels Act (Article XC), due regard being had to the fact that under Article XCVI all contrary stipulations of earlier Conventions between the Signatory Powers are repealed.

The provisions of this Act as to arms differ, however, in an important respect from those in regard to liquor. Article XII regarding arms says: "The Powers undertake to adopt . . . . . . the measures necessary to insure that those who infringe the prohibitions laid down in Articles VIII and IX and their accomplices shall . . . . . . be punished either by fine or by imprisonment. . . . . ."

This provision appears to support the claim to jurisdiction over foreigners who would, but for the provisions of the Act, be entitled to the privileges of extra-territoriality; the provision in question is not, however, specifically referred to in the Law Officers' Report above mentioned.

But there is no corresponding provision in regard to liquor, and, in these circumstances, the Treaty Powers might not be willing to agree with the principle quoted in the earlier part of this letter from the Law Officers' Report, viz., that foreigners violating the provisions of the Brussels Act, so far as arms are concerned, and, by parity of reasoning, those who violate the provisions regarding liquor are under the Sultan's jurisdiction, because those provisions would become a dead letter unless offenders were under the jurisdiction of the Sultan's Courts. They might point, for instance, to the Zanzibar Customs Law, which prohibits the importation of, say, cotton cloth without the payment of 5 per cent. import duty, and draw attention to the fact that this prohibition is maintained in the case of foreigners, although infractions of it are justiciable only in their respective Consular Courts; and it would be contended that these Courts would be equally able to enforce the Zanzibar laws relating both to the prohibition of the importation of liquor generally and to the admission of limited quantities for non-natives.

On the other hand, it may be maintained that the fulness of the provisions of the Brussels Act as to fire-arms and the scantiness of those as to liquors is due to two causes:—

(a.) Because the Brussels Act was chiefly aimed at the suppression of the Slave Trade, and this, to a great extent, depended on fire-arms for its existence.

(b.) Because there is less importance as compared with the restriction on entry attaching to the Regulations affecting the subsequent use of consumable stores like spirituous liquors than in the case of fire-arms.

1903

The territory of Zanzibar is, as to spirituous liquors, an area of total prohibition, with the exception of limited quantities imported for the use of non-natives. Such liquor is imported, as provided by the Act, under the system and conditions determined by the Government. This may well be taken to mean that it is the business of the territorial Government to see that the liquor does not reach the natives. Can they do this if they cannot enforce their Regulations?

Again, "imported" in Article XCI is "introduites." The same expression is also used in Article VIII, which deals with the introduction of fire-arms. Article IX forms the code of "conditions" under which fire-arms may be imported: in case of liquors, it is left to the territorial Power to lay down the "system" and "conditions." It would seem to follow that the conditions as to liquor may be as comprehensive as is Article IX. Article X shows that as to fire-arms the territorial Power is to do all the administrative work; and Article XII that the penalties for a breach of the stipulations as to fire-arms were to be enacted and enforced by the territorial Government.

If the jurisdiction for the enforcement of the conditions laid down by the Act on which arms may be imported is to be exercised by Zanzibar, it would appear as if she should also have jurisdiction to enforce her own conditions laid down in accordance with the Act on which liquors may be imported for the non-natives.

I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to request you to take the above observations into your consideration, together with the papers which accompany this letter, and to favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether the Government of Zanzibar can claim, in the case of a breach of the Liquor Regulations, jurisdiction over foreigners who, but for the provisions of the Act, would be entitled to be tried by their respective Consular Courts; and also with any general observations on the case which may occur to you.

Should you be of opinion that the Government of Zanzibar can claim such jurisdiction as that referred to above, I am to inquire further whether you would concur in the terms of the accompanying draft to His Majesty's Consul at Zanzibar instructing him in this sense.

Copies of the German and British Treaties with Zanzibar are inclosed as examples of those under which foreigners enjoy extra-territorial rights at Zanzibar.

I have, &c.
(Signed) FRANCIS BERTIE.

List of Papers.

Law Officers		February 22, 1899.
Brussels Act (Treaty Library No. 889)		July 2, 1890.
Sir C. Eliot	(No. 199)	, 1902.
To ditto	(No. 287)	"
Mr. Cave	(No 86)	"
Ditto	(No. 94)	"
Ditto	(No. 96)	"
To ditto	(No.)	January , 1903.
German Treaty with Zanzibar ("State Papers," vol. lxxvi, pp. 247 et seq.)		December 20, 1885.
British Treaty with Zanzibar (Treaty Library No. 782)		April 30, 1886.

Report.

In our opinion, the circumstances of the present case as to the liquor traffic in Zanzibar materially differ from those in Reich's case as to the possession of fire-arms in Mombasa.

In Mombasa there were, as we understand at the time of [Wilhelm] Reich's case, no German Consular Courts in which offences under the Brussels Convention in regard to fire-arms could be dealt with. In Zanzibar there is no difficulty in the way of taking proceedings in the Consular Courts against foreigners who may commit offences in regard to the liquor traffic, and we see nothing in the provisions of the Brussels Convention in regard to liquor traffic, which necessarily involves the abolition of the right of foreigners to be tried in Zanzibar in their own Consular Courts. It must, of course, be assumed that the Consular Courts will loyally give effect to the provisions of the Brussels Convention. We are, therefore, unable to concur in the terms of the proposed despatch.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 9, 1903.

Annex.

Draft of Despatch to Mr. Cave.

(No. .)
Sir,
Foreign Office, January , 1903.

THE Marquess of Lansdowne has had under his consideration your despatch No. 86 of the 17th October last, inquiring whether the subjects of Treaty Powers should be tried in the Courts of His Highness the Sultan or by their respective Consular Courts for offences against Regulations such as, in the present instance, the Zanzibar Liquor Regulations, drawn up in accordance with the stipulations contained in the Brussels Act of the 2nd July, 1890.

I am to inform you that, in his Lordship's opinion, persons guilty of a breach of the Zanzibar Liquor Regulations must be tried in the Sultan's Court and not in the extra-territorial Court of the particular State of which they are subjects or citizens, since the general Brussels Act overrides special and earlier Treaty rights in the case of offences committed against its provisions by persons whose Governments were Signatories of the Act. It would otherwise be practically impossible for the Government of His Highness the Sultan to enforce conditions for which he made himself responsible by becoming a Signatory to the Brussels Act.

Offences against the Liquor Regulations would be tried in the Court of Delegated Jurisdiction in which Mr. Piggott sits as a Judge.

It appears to Lord Lansdowne that the Notification published by Sir R. Rodd on the 27th September, 1893 (to which you refer in your despatch under reply), must have been issued under a misapprehension, as it seems to have been thought that the Liquor Regulations published by the Sultan would not apply to British subjects unless this Notification had been issued, although this is clearly not the case

I am, &c.

No. 33.

[June 27, 1903.]

Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received June 27.)

My Lord,
Royal Courts of Justice, June 27, 1903.

Zanzibar Import Duties: Increase to 10 per cent.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified to us by Mr. Villiers in his letter of the 26th March last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers respecting a proposal which had been put forward to increase from 5 to 10 per cent. the duties leviable on imports into the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, and to request that we would take them into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the Government of Zanzibar was entitled, so far as its Treaty obligations were concerned, to levy ad valorem import duties not exceeding 10 per cent, and further, that we would furnish your Lordship with any observations which would, in our opinion, be of assistance in dealing with the case.

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, have the honour to

Report—

That, in our opinion, the Government of Zanzibar is entitled to levy ad valorem import duties not exceeding 10 per cent. We do not think it is open to any of the Powers who were parties to the Declaration appended to the general Act of the

1903

Brussels Conference now to raise the point that the Sultan was not entitled to sign the Declaration.

We have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

List of Papers.

(A.) British Treaty with Zanzibar (Treaty Library No. 782) ..	April 30, 1886.
(B.) Treaty between France and Muscat (Conf. 7555) ..	November 17, 1844.
(C.) „ „ Germany and Zanzibar (Conf. 5370, p. 69)	December 20, 1885.
(D.) General Act of the Berlin Conference (Treaty Library No. 757)	February 26, 1885.
(E.) „ „ „ Brussels Conference (Treaty Library No. 889)	July 2, 1890.
(F.) Agreement between Great Britain, Germany, and Italy, respecting the Tariff of the eastern zone of the Conventional basin of the Congo (Map of Africa by Treaty, p. 90)	December 22, 1890.
(G.) Circular to Powers parties to Berlin Act	June 22, 1892.
(H.) Memorandum. Mr. Farnall	December 27, 1901.
(I.) Act of adhesion of Zanzibar to Berlin Act (Parliamentary 3123)	November 8, 1886.
(J.) Lord Dufferin .. .. (No. 232. Africa)	August 29, 1892.
(K.) To Lord Dufferin .. .. (No. 265. Africa)	October 31, 1892.
(L.) Sir E. Malet .. .. (No. 42. Africa)	June 7, 1892.
(M.) To Lord Pauncefote .. (No. 9. Africa)	April 14, 1902.
(N.) Treaty between United States and Zanzibar (State Papers, vol. lxxviii, p. 777)	July 3, 1886.
(O.) Declarations exchanged between Great Britain and France (Treaty Library No. 856)	August 5, 1890.

No. 34.

[November 18, 1903.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Draft Zanzibar Order in Council, as Second Assistant Judge.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 5, 1903.

WITH reference to your letter of the 19th December last relating to a new Zanzibar Order in Council, supplementary to the Zanzibar Order in Council of 1897, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the accompanying copy of the draft Order, as revised by Mr. Gray, in accordance with the suggestions contained in your Report.

The letter to Mr. Gray and his reply, together with previous correspondence on the subject, are inclosed for convenience of reference.

I have the honour to request that you will take these papers into your consideration and favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether "The Draft Zanzibar Order in Council, 1902," may properly be submitted in its amended form for the approval of His Majesty.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

"Zanzibar Order in Council, 1897." (Confidential 6934*).
"East Africa Order in Council, 1902." (Confidential 7759*).

To Law Officers	December 13, 1902.
Law Officers	December 19, „
Solicitor-General	June 19, 1903.
To Mr. Gray	August 12, „
Mr. Gray	August 27, „

Draft Order in Council (two copies).

Report.

As altered by us in red ink* and initialled, we approve of the draft Order in Council herewith.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
November 18, 1903.

Annex.

Draft of "Zanzibar Order in Council, 1903."

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, His Majesty the King has power and jurisdiction within the dominions of His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers on this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in His Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1903."

2. This Order shall be construed as one with "The Zanzibar Order in Council, 1897," hereinafter called the "Principal Order."

3.—(1.) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Principal Order, a Second Assistant Judge may be appointed for the Court for Zanzibar.

(2.) The Second Assistant Judge shall be appointed in like manner and upon the same conditions as, and shall possess the like qualifications as are required for, the Assistant Judge.

(3.) The Second Assistant Judge shall have the same powers as the Assistant Judge.

(4.) In case of the illness or temporary absence of the Second Assistant Judge, or of his temporary appointment as Judge or Assistant Judge, the Consul-General may appoint either a person qualified to be appointed Second Assistant Judge, or a person appointed to hold a subordinate Court under the Principal Order, or a commissioned Consular officer to act as Second Assistant Judge.

4. The Assistant Judge and the Second Assistant Judge shall respectively undertake such part of the duties prescribed in the Principal Order for the Assistant Judge and such other duties of a judicial, magisterial, or legal nature as the Judge, with the approval of the Secretary of State, shall direct.

5. In the event of the death, incapacity, removal, or absence from Zanzibar of the Consul-General for the time being, all and every the powers and authorities by the Principal Order granted to him shall, until His Majesty's further pleasure is signified through the Secretary of State, be vested in the senior Consular officer in His Majesty's service for the time being in Zanzibar.

6. The production of a grant of probate or of letters of administration shall, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary contained in any Indian Act or Law in force in Zanzibar or in the Principal Order, be necessary to establish the right to recover or receive any part of the estate or effects of any deceased person situate in Zanzibar.

7. The powers of the Secretary of State with respect to the application to Zanzibar of enactments and Acts of the Governor-General of India in Council or of the Governor of Bombay in Council under Article 11 of the Principal Order, and of laws and ordinances for the time being in force in African possessions of His Majesty, under Article 13 of that Order shall, on the commencement of this Order, be transferred to the Consul-General; but those powers shall be exercised by him only by means of Regulations made under and subject in all respects to the provisions of Article 47 of the Principal Order.

8. The Consul-General may by ~~such~~ Regulations made under and subject in all respects to the provisions of Article 47 of the Principal Order repeal or amend with respect to Zanzibar any enactments, Acts, laws, or ordinances which are made applicable or have been brought into operation in Zanzibar by or under any of the provisions of Articles 11 and 13 of the Principal Order.

9. In Article 9 of the Principal Order the word "Judge" shall be substituted for the word "Consul-General."

10. The following provisions of the Principal Order are hereby repealed:—

Article 3 (iii). The words from "including" to "Consul-General."

Article 9. The word "Consul-General."

Article 11 (e) (iii). The words "relating to civil or criminal procedure or to procedure in bankruptcy."

Article 31 (2) and Article 32. The words "in Zanzibar."

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Lansdowne, K.G., one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

R. B. F.
E. C.

o

---

* Printed in italics.

1904

[This Document is the Property of His Britannic Majesty's Government.]

Printed for the use of the Foreign Office. September 1905.

CONFIDENTIAL.

(8498.)

REPORTS

BY THE

LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN, &c.

1904.

1904

LIST OF REPORTS.

(Arranged according to Countries.)

Note.—The Reports not addressed to the Foreign Office are marked 3A, &c.

AFRICA.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
1	Law Officers	April 27, 1904	Draft Divorce Ordinance for the East Africa, Uganda, and British Central Africa Protectorates. Approving as altered. As to jurisdiction of Protectorate Courts in matter of divorces	1
2	Law Officers	May 30,	Draft Somaliland Order in Council. 1904, drawn up owing to withdrawal of Consular attributes from Protectorate officials. Approving	9
3	Law Officers	July 6,	R. Chamberlain and A. S. Flemmer. Lease of land to in East Africa Protectorate. Consider His Majesty's Commissioner acted ultra vires in giving option of purchase. Any action for specific performance should be resisted if they refuse reasonable compromise	11
3A	Law Officers to Colonial Office	Aug. 15,	Mr. van Diggelen, a burgher of late South African Republic. His children, who were not living in the country, are British subjects if they became burghers of that State	13

CHINA.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
4	Law Officers	April 6, 1904	Flour (i.e., contraband) conveyed to Newchwang on behalf of a British firm by Chinese Government Railway, presumably for Russian forces, is not a breach of neutrality, but preference must be given to neither belligerent	14
5	Law Officers	April 15 & 27	Russo-Japanese War. Chinese Maritime Customs ordered to prohibit shipment to either belligerents, either in Chinese or foreign vessels, of articles declared by Russia to be contraband. Treaty Rights are subject to right of China to enforce neutrality, but Chinese Edict is too stringent. Protest should be made	15
6	Law Officers	June 15,	China and Corea Consular and Marriage Fees Order in Council. Approving draft of	17
7	Law Officers	June 22,	China and Corea Shipping and Registry Order in Council. Approving draft of as altered	23
8	Law Officers	Aug. 15,	China Order in Council consolidating existing Orders. Approving draft of as altered	27
9	Law Officers	Oct. 15,	Russo-Japanese War. Crew of Russian torpedo-boat "Burni" interned at Hong Kong. Procedure is correct. They took refuge in neutral territory from the enemy, and not owing to bad weather	29

CUBA.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
10	Law Officers	Feb. 4, 1904	Claims of British subjects on Cuban Government for losses arising out of acts during revolt from Spanish rule, and during Spanish-American War. Extent to which satisfaction of should be demanded	30

EGYPT.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
11	Attorney-General	Nov. 16 & 17, 1904	Russo-Japanese War. Coaling of Russian war-ships in Suez Canal. Question as to whether Aden or Jibuti is nearest accessible port for obtaining further coal. Approving telegram to Lord Cromer. A casus fœderis under our Treaty with Japan would not arise if French gave too much coal	33

FRANCE.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
11A	Law Officers to Colonial Office	Nov. 9, 1904	Merchant seamen deserters. Nothing in Australian Immigration Act deprives French Government of Treaty Rights as regards apprehension of	36

GENERAL.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
12	Attorney-General	Jan. 2, 1904	Supply of coal to belligerent vessels at Port Saïd. Approving, with omissions, telegram to Lord Cromer as to conditions	37
13	Attorney-General	Jan. 12,	Coaling of Russian or Japanese belligerent vessels. Suez Canal should be treated as apart from other Egyptian ports. Rules should conform to Article IV of Suez Canal Convention	39
14	Law Officers	Jan. 18,	Censorship of telegrams in plain language during war. Approving draft notifications respecting stoppage, &c., and conditions on which they will be sent in the future	42
15	Law Officers	Feb. 25,	Russo-Japanese War. Coaling of belligerent vessels at Zanzibar by people under British jurisdiction. No necessity to legislate in their case. Regulations apply to Government and also private coal	44
16	Law Officers	Feb. 25 & 29,	Russo-Japanese War. Suggesting alterations in Rules adopted by Egypt to enforce neutrality. Criticism of French text	51
17	Law Officers	Mar. 7,	Russo-Japanese War. As Suez Canal should not be made a base of operations, the three-months rule as to coaling should be made applicable to its ports—subject to special cases	53
17A	Law Officers to Colonial Office	Mar. 19,	Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870. Mode of extending operation to Colonies acquired since passing of	56
17B	Law Officers to Home Office	Mar. 23,	Russo-Japanese War. Torpedo boat bought from Palmer's Company, by M. Fontaine. Licence for dispatch of should not be granted unless it is made clear it is for neither belligerent	58
18	Law Officers	Aug. 15,	Draft Foreign Jurisdiction Neutrality Order in Council. Approving as altered. (Extends Foreign Jurisdiction Act —with modifications—to Protectorates and to exterritorial countries)	59
19	Attorney-General	Aug. 22, 23,	Russo-Japanese War. "Askold" effecting repairs in British dock at Shanghae. Responsibility for breach of neutrality is Chinese. Bearing of question of Exterritorial Jurisdiction. Foreign Enlistment Act not yet in force in China	60
20	Attorney-General	Aug. 26,	Seizure of Russian "Reshitelni" by Japanese torpedo-boats at Chefoo is justifiable, as China was unable to enforce neutrality	62
21	Attorney-General	Sept. 22,	Russian regulations as to contraband during war with Japan. Supplementary instructions respecting treatment of foodstuffs is satisfactory. In case of confiscation, captors must prove they were for the enemy's forces. Remarks as to horses being absolutely contraband	63

1904

GENERAL—continued.

No.		Date.	SUBJECT.	Page
21A	Law Officers to Customs	Oct. 4, 1904	Sugar-sweetened products may be forfeited on importation into the United Kingdom if the sugar therein is declared to be bounty-fed. Importation of bounty-fed sugar products cannot be directly prohibited by Order in Council	67
22	Law Officers	Oct. 25,	Destruction of enemy's and protection of British submarine cables. Commenting on draft instructions to His Majesty's Fleet	70
23	Law Officers	Nov. 9,	Examination of vessels for contraband of war where papers are incomplete. Approving, with alterations, draft letter to Admiralty as to rights of belligerents	76

GREECE.

No.		Date.	SUBJECT.	Page
23A	Law Officers to Colonial Office	Mar. 31, 1904	Right of Greece to coasting trade in Australia. Legislation in Commonwealth cannot override Treaty rights. Commonwealth cannot denounce Treaty separately as it is concluded with His Majesty	77

JAPAN.

No.		Date.	SUBJECT.	Page
24	Attorney-General	Jan. 18, 1904	Russo-Japanese War. Cruisers bought by Japan of Argentine Government and flying commercial flag. Their status should war break out. British subjects may serve on unless they become vessels of war. Such people could not be removed when in British ports. The precedent of "Tatsuta" should be followed. Bearing of Foreign Enlistment Act	78
25	Law Officers	Feb. 16,	Prohibition of lighter traffic by foreigners between Yokohama and Yeddo. Adhere to opinion as to construction of Article III of Treaty of 1894. His Majesty's Government should reserve their rights. Does it constitute coasting trade?	82
26	Law Officers	May 11,	Taxation of property held under perpetual lease in Foreign Settlements in Japan. Counter-Case for the arbitration appears to be very well drawn	84
27	Law Officers	Oct. 15,	Taxation of property held under perpetual lease in Foreign Settlements in Japan. His Majesty's Government could not object to appointment of Baron Renault as Counsel for Japan unless France and Germany concur. (Question whether a prominent member of the Hague Tribunal can act as Counsel)	86

RUSSIA.

No.		Date.	SUBJECT.	Page
28	Law Officers	Feb. 19, 1904	Vessels of Russian Volunteer Fleet should be treated as war ships (under rules as to neutrality) if used for warlike purposes. (Question as to "Smolensk" coaling at Port Saïd)	88
29	Law Officers	Mar. 11,	War with Japan. Coal should not be refused to Russians in British ports on grounds that Russia regards that commodity as absolutely contraband, unless it is determined to retaliate	90
30	Law Officers	Mar. 25,	War with Japan. His Majesty's Government should protest against decision of Russia to regard coal, telegraphs, &c., as absolute contraband. Importance of maintaining that food-stuffs are of dual use	91
31	Law Officers	May 31,	Status of Russian Volunteer Fleet. Have nothing to add to previous opinion	94

RUSSIA—continued.

No.		Date.	SUBJECT.	Page
32	Law Officers	June 3, 1904	"Times" vessel "Haimun" with wireless telegraph on board. Russian notification to treat as lawful prize of war if carrying people on board who communicate news to the enemy cannot be objected to. Japanese officer should not be retained on board. Existence of wireless telegraph station at Wei-hai Wei not of itself a breach of neutrality	95
33	Law Officers	June 6,	Russo-Japanese War. British rules as to supply of coal to belligerents in British ports; discusses. Russian declaration making coal unconditionally contraband does not affect the law. Meaning and scope of "nearer named neutral destination" in British rules. No distinction between coaling of single vessels and of a fleet. Destination of vessel very material. Vessels accompanied by colliers, &c.	99
34	Law Officers	June 13,	Sale of White Star liner "Teutonic" to Count Strogonov for use (probably) during war between Russia and Japan is not a breach of neutrality, but is in violation of Foreign Enlistment Act. If Board of Trade refuses permission for sale Admiralty not bound to purchase under terms of the Agreements with the American "combine"	104
35	Law Officers	June 18,	Russian regulations respecting naval prizes. Points on which protest should be made. Prizes may be brought into British ports if supplies are wanted. No objection to Prize Court at Sevastopol taken by itself	106
36	Law Officers	July 2,	Detention and subsequent release of "Frankby" by Russian squadron. Separate opinions as to claims of MacVicar, Marshall, and Co	108
37	Law Officers	Aug. 11,	German steamer chartered by Samuel, Samuel, and Co., and sunk by Russians. Owner cannot hold charterer responsible. German Government should take action	110
38	Law Officers	Aug. 15,	Russo-Japanese War. Instructions that should be issued to Fanning Island should Russian Fleet desire to send cypher messages over the Pacific cable	111
39	Attorney-General	Aug. 25,	Russo-Japanese War. Instructions to Governor of Straits Settlements respecting treatment of Russian Volunteer Fleet. Approving draft despatch	112
40	Law Officers Attorney-General	July 1, Aug. 28 and 29,	Russo-Japanese War. Procedure should Russian Fleet take refuge at Wei-hai Wei on fall of fortress. Precedents. Question of internment of crew, &c.	116
41	Attorney-General	Sept. 2,	Russian vessels supplied with coal at Zanzibar by French merchants, &c. Right of trading subject to preservation of neutrality. Does not think Sultan should issue coaling rules. Zanzibar should not be made a base of operations. Colliers should not supply coal within territorial waters	124
42	Attorney-General	Sept. 9,	Russian vessels of Volunteer Fleet passing Dardanelles and flying merchant flag to act as colliers to "Teretz" are not fighting vessels but should be treated as belligerents as regards coaling facilities	127
43	Attorney-General	Sept. 23,	Russian definition of contraband. Protest should be made against coal being treated as absolutely contraband. Admission that food-stuffs are of dual use is a point gained	128
44	Attorney-General	Sept. 30,	Colliers attending on Russian Fleet making use of British ports would be a breach of Foreign Enlistment Act. Agrees with Law Officers' opinion of 25th July, 1870 (Prussia)	129
45	Attorney-General	Oct. 5,	"Smolensk" and "Petersburg" of Volunteer fleet issuing from Black Sea and their subsequent conversion into war-vessels. How far such a proceeding is proper (see also No. 47)	130

1904

RUSSIA—continued.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
46	Attorney-General	Oct. ~~29~~ 28, 1904	Russo-Japanese War. Messrs. Woods, Tyler and Brown should be told they cannot charter their boats as colliers to Russian Fleet. No reason for proceedings under Foreign Enlistment Act. Port authorities should watch suspicious cases	133
47	Law Officers	Oct. ~~19~~ 29,	"Smolensk" and "Petersburg": their emergence from Black Sea and subsequent conversion into war-vessels. Should they be recognized as such? Cannot return to Black Sea. They were really always war-vessels. Commissioning of vessel not, per se, enough to make her a war-ship. Turkish Government should stop passage of any similar Volunteer Fleet vessels	137
48	Law Officers	Nov. 10,	Further respecting proposed sale of "Teutonic" to foreign flag. Subvention Agreement with Admiralty should be read as precluding sale to a foreign Company or person direct. Circumstances in which subvention might be forfeited	140
48A	Law Officers	Nov. 17,	Sir Donald Currie's question as to attitude should Russian war-ships endeavour to stop the mail-packets of their Line. Approving draft answer. Suggest similar answer to that in House of Commons respecting the "Osiris"	142
49	Law Officers	Nov. 25,	"Roddam" attending on Russian fleet as a collier. Do not recommend prosecution under Foreign Enlistment Act. An abortive prosecution to be deprecated	143
50	Law Officers	Dec. 21,	Continuous liability of vessel to seizure for carrying contraband on a previous voyage. Refers to case of "Allanton." Approving reply to questions of North of England Association. Foreign Office should not express views	145
51	Attorney-General	Dec. 26,	Coaling of Baltic Fleet at Zanzibar. Sultan might be advised to refuse permission for. Not like case of an individual ship. As to right of foreigners enjoying exterritorial jurisdiction to sell coal	146

SIAM.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
52	Law Officers	July 19, 1904	Conviction of A. F. G. Tilleke and Mong Ong before His Majesty's Consular Court at Bangkok, and quashing of sentence by Supreme Court at Singapore. Do not recommend appeal to Privy Council, there being no exceptional circumstances	149

TURKEY.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
53	Law Officers	Aug. 18, 1904	Status of persons of British descent permanently living in Turkey. They are entitled to British protection under the Capitulations. Bearing of Acts of 1730 and 1773. Consider they are British subjects at Common Law, but point should be definitely settled by a clause in a General Act. In the meanwhile Registration might be continued in accordance with practice	152

UNITED STATES.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
54	Law Officers	Oct. 27, 1904	Supplementary Extradition Convention with the United States of America to include bribery and bankruptcy offences. Approving draft as altered	155
55	Law Officers	Nov. 16,	Supplementary Extradition Convention with the United States of America. American Ambassador's views as to wording of Article providing for date of coming into force. Suggestions. Cannot come into force until necessary Act is passed	157

VENEZUELA.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
56	Law Officers	Jan. 21, 1904	Illtreatment of British subjects on United States' vessel "Alemania," seized by Venezuelan gun-boat during revolution. Protest should be lodged against Decree condemning her for breach of Customs regulations in respect of a port in hands of insurgents where the Venezuelan Government had no control. Compensation should be demanded	159

ZANZIBAR.

No.		Date.	Subject.	Page
57	Law Officers	Received April 27, 1904	Cesser of French extraterritorial jurisdiction in Zanzibar. As to amending of Order in Council so as to bring French-protected persons within jurisdiction of British Court	162

1904

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

(NAMES AND SUBJECTS.)

1904.

[The figures refer to the numbers of the pages.]

A.

Act, Foreign Enlistment. As to extension to Protectorates, 48–50.
„ „ „ As to extension to new Colonies, 56, 57.
„ „ „ License under for sale of torpedo-boat, 58, 59.
„ „ „ As to extension of Neutrality Order in Council, 59, 60.
„ „ „ See also Exterritoriality; Neutrality.
„ „ „ Prosecution under not obligatory, 144.
„ „ „ Treatment under of British crews of Japanese cruisers flying merchant flag. See Vessels.
„ „ „ See Coal; Coaling; Colliers (for belligerents).
„ „ „ Sale of "Teutonic" to Russia amounts to breach of, 105, 140–142.
„ Foreign Jurisdiction. See Exterritoriality.
Africa, East. Leases of land in, 11–13.
„ „ Commissioner exceeds his powers in regard to, 11–13.
„ South. See Boer.
Agreement with shipping Companies. Bearing of proposed sale of "Teutonic" to a foreigner on, 104, 105, 140–142.
"Alemania." British sailors ill-treated. Alleged breach of blockade, 159–162.
"Allanton." Continuous liability to seizure for contraband, 145, 146.
American combine and White Star Line:
  Agreements with His Majesty's Government, 104–106, 140–142.
  Sale of vessels under and option of purchase, 105–106.
  (Same not compulsory), 140–142.
  Necessary to replace vessels sold by, 142.
Appeals to Privy Council. See Consular Courts.
Arbitration. Taxation of property in foreign settlements in Japan, 84–86.
„ Objection to member of Hague Tribunal acting as Counsel, 86, 87.
Arismendi, M., 161.
Army. See War.
"Askold." Belligerent taking refuge in neutral port 60–62.

"Askold." Rules governing disarmament, repairs, &c., 60, 61.
"Aurania." Suspected sale to Russians during war, 141.
Australian Immigration Act. Effect of, on Treaty with France, 36, 37.
„ „ „ Rights of Greece to coasting trade, 77, 78.

B.

Baldon, Julio, 159, 161.
Bell, Mr. Moberly, 95–98.
Belligerent vessels in neutral ports. See Fleet; Port; Coaling; Wei-hai Wei.
Bills of lading (incomplete). Effect of on right of search, 76, 77.
Black Sea. See Dardanelles (vessels emerging from).
„ See Vessels; Volunteer Fleet.
Blockade necessary to prevent vessels trading with insurgent ports, 159–162.
Boer now a British subject. Nationality of children, 13, 14.
Bosphorus. See Dardanelles (vessels emerging from).
Bounties. See Sugar.
Bourbaki, General, 116.
Bowker, Mr., 13.
"Burni." Crew of, seeking refuge from enemy, interned at Hong Kong, 29, 30.

C.

Cables. British regulations for destruction of enemy's, 70–75.
„ Protection of British during war, 70–75.
„ Rights during war under International Convention, 70, 71.
„ See Cypher telegrams, sending by belligerents.
Capitulations. How they affect British nationality in Turkey, 152–155.
Chamberlain, R., 11, 12.
China. Government railway of carries contraband to (Russian) belligerent, 14, 15.
„ Customs. Prohibition of to carry contraband to belligerents, 15–17.
„ Bearing of exterritoriality in this respect, 16.
„ and Russo-Japan war. See Contraband; Neutrality: Trade, &c.
„ See Order in Council.

1904

CHI—CON.

China. Responsible for observance of neutrality by British, 60–62.
„ "Reshitelni" seized by Japs in Chefoo, 62, 63.
„ Japs refuse to restore it,
„ unable to enforce; capture was good, 63.
Claims arising out of Cuban revolution. Conflicting views, 30–32.
„ Cubans admit liability from their recognition as belligerents, 30–32.
„ during Russo-Japanese war. See Vessels.
„ Ill-treatment of British sailors on "Alemania," 159–162.
Coal. French giving Russians too much, not casus fæderis under Treaty with Japan, 35.
„ Supply of to belligerents at Port Saïd, 37–39.
„ Precedent of Spanish-American war, 38.
„ in Suez Canal. As to adhesion to Convention rules, 39.
„ Canal should be treated apart as regards, 40–41, 54–55.
„ at Port Saïd for Russian fleet. Rules as to, 37–39.
„ at Zanzibar for belligerent vessels. Position of the Protectorate, 44–51, 124–126, 146–149.
„ As to Russia treating as absolutely contraband, 63–67, 91–93, 128, 129.
„ Inconsistent with her declaration of 1884 91, 100.
„ Review of British rules as to supplying belligerent vessels with, 38A, 99–104.
„ Question of altering British rules, 99–104.
„ Distinction between supplying a single ship and a fleet, 100, 103, 104.
„ Supply to fleet accompanied by tenders, 101, 104.
„ See also Colliers; Zanzibar.
Coaling of Russian belligerent vessels in Suez Canal. Extent of, 33–36, 39–42.
„ Question as to nearest port for supplies, 33–36, 37–39.
„ rules. See Neutrality.
„ of belligerent vessels from neutral Government yards, 46.
„ by British subjects of belligerents. Nature of legislation required to prevent, 46–51.
„ in Suez Canal. Application of three months' rule, 54, 55.
„ in Suez Canal of vessels of Volunteer fleet, 53–55, 88–90, 94, 95.
„ of Russian vessels. How affected by Russian doctrine of contraband, 91–93, 99–104.
„ Neutrality Order in Council. Extension to Zanzibar, 147.
Coasting trade of Australia. Rights of Greece, 77, 78.
„ „ See Lighter traffic in Japan.
Colliers issuing from Black Sea to attend on war vessels. Position of, 127, 128.
„ in British port attending on Russian war vessel, 129, 130.
„ loading for use of Russian fleet, 133–137, 143–149.
„ Case of "Roddam" at Vigo, 143–145.
„ As to prosecution under Foreign Enlistment Act, 144–145.
Colonies. See Act, Foreign Enlistment; Treaty (with His Majesty's Government).
Companies. See American combine; "Teutonic."
Compensation. See Claims.
Consuls. Abolition in Somaliland; performance of duties, 9–11.
Consular fees (China and Corea). Order in Council, 17–23.
„ Courts. Appeals from in criminal cases, 149–151.
Contraband of war (Russo-Japanese war). Carriage by (Chinese) Government railway, 14, 15.
„ „ See also Vessels; Coal.
„ „ China prohibits export of, 15–17.

CON—FEE.

Contraband of war. Effect of Chinese rules on exterritorial rights, 15–17.
„ „ Russian rules, objections to, 63–67, 91–93, 128, 129.
„ „ Russia admits dual use in certain cases, 63–67.
„ „ British attitude as to right to export, 92
„ „ Distinction between food for enemy's forces and enemy country, 92, 93.
„ „ Wireless telegraphy as, 95–99.
„ „ See Prizes; Prize Law.
„ „ Search of mail packets for. Donald Currie's question, 142, 143.
„ „ Continuous liability to seizure of vessels with, 145, 146.
Court. See Hague Tribunal; Consular Court.
Criminal trials. Appeals from Consular Courts, 149–151.
Cuban revolt. Claims for losses arising out of acts of insurgents, &c., 30–32.
„ Views of Cuban Government as to responsibility, 30–32.
Cummins, Walter, 159, 161.
Currie and Co., Donald, 142, 143.
Customs regulations of port in hands of insurgents. Seizure of vessel for breach of, 159–162.
Cypher telegrams. Transmission of, by belligerents over neutral cables, 111, 112.

D.

Dardanelles. Russian belligerent collier issuing from to attend on war vessel, 127, 128.
„ Vessels issuing from and becoming men-of-war. See Vessels; Colliers.
Deschamps, Baron, 86, 87.
Deserters. Seamen. Conflict of Australian legislation with French Treaty, 36, 37.
Dicey, K.C., Professor, 152.
Diggelen, Mr. van, 13, 14.
Divorce Ordinance for the African Protectorates, 1–8.

E.

Egypt. See Coaling of belligerent vessels in Suez Canal, &c.
„ Rules of neutrality (Russo-Japanese war), 51–53.
„ See also Neutrality.
Enemy country and enemies' forces in relation to contraband of war, 92, 93. See also Contraband of war.
Enlistment. See Act.
Exterritorial countries. Nationality in. Proposed Bill, 153.
Exterritoriality in relation to alleged breach of neutrality by British firm at Shanghae, 60–62.
„ in relation to Chinese rules of neutrality, 15–17.
„ See also Coaling (of belligerent vessels); Zanzibar; Jurisdiction.
Extradition. Supplementary Convention with United States, 155–158.
„ Wording of Article as to date of enforcement, 157, 158.

F.

"Fanning Island." Instructions to, as to belligerents using cable at, 111, 112.
Fees (Consular and Marriage). China and Corea, 17–23.

FLA—JUR.

Flag. Russian vessels leave Black Sea and change from commercial to naval. See "Smolensk" and "Petersburg."
„ Transfer of British vessel to foreign. See "Teutonic."
„ Bearing of Shipping Agreement. See "Teutonic."
„ War vessels bought by Japan flying commercial; their status; position of British crews; rights in neutral harbour, &c., 78–82.
Fleet (Russian) escaping from enemy to neutral harbour, 116–124.
„ See also Coaling; Colliers.
Flemmer, A. S., 11, 12.
Fontaine, M., 58.
Foodstuffs as absolute contraband of war, 63-67, 92, 93.
Foreign Enlistment Act. As to extension to Protectorates. See Act.
„ „ „ See Coaling of belligerents.
"Frankby" seized by Russian war vessels in Egyptian waters, 108–110.
"Fürst Bismarck." Purchase for war purposes, 104.

G.

Greece. Right to coasting trade in Australia, 77, 78.
Green, George, 159, 161.

H.

Hague Tribunal. See Arbitration (Japanese leases).
"Haimun." "Times" vessel using wireless telegraphy at seat of war, 95-99.
„ Russian threat to seize as a prize of war, 95–99.
„ Japanese officer should not be on board, 99.
Horses as absolute contraband of war, 64, 65.
Hot pursuit. Russian vessel taking refuge from, at Shanghae, 60.

I.

Immigration Act (Australian) in relation to French seamen deserters, 36, 37.
International law. Violation of.
„ „ See Neutrality.
Internment of vessels (Russo-Japanese war).
„ of crew of "Burni" at Hong Kong, 29, 30.
„ Hague Convention silent on the subject, 29.
„ of "Askold," taking refuge from Japanese, 60–62.
„ of Russian fleet at Weihaiwei. Contemplated case, 116–124.
„ of crews. Analogy with internment of army, 121.
„ of vessels seeking refuge from gale, 30, 123, 124.
„ See also Vessels.

J.

Japan (war with Russia). See Vessels; Contraband; Neutrality, &c.
„ Right to lighter traffic in: effect of Treaty of 1894, 82, 83.
„ Taxation of property in foreign Settlements. See Arbitration.
Jurisdiction. See Order in Council.
„ Exterritorial at Zanzibar. Cesser of French, 162, 163.
„ Draft Order in Council. Jurisdiction over French citizens, 162, 163.

KNI—NEU.

K.

"Knight Commander" and "Thea" cases (vessels sunk by Russians). Similarity, 110.

L.

Land leased in East Africa. Option given of purchase ultra vires, 11–13.
Law. See Neutrality; Coaling; Act.
„ Colonial cannot abrogate rights under Imperial Treaty, 78.
„ Court. See Consular Court.
Leases of land in East Africa. Option of purchase given ultra vires, 11–13.
„ Legal proceedings should be resisted, 11-13.
„ Perpetual, in Japan, 84-86.
Legal proceedings. See Consular Courts.
Legislation. See Act; Treaties; Nationality.
Lighter traffic in Japan. Effect of Treaty of 1894, 82–84.

M.

MacVicar, Marshall, and Co., 108–110.
Mail-packets. Procedure in case of attempted search for contraband, 142, 143. See also Vessels.
"Majestic." Suspected sale to Russians during war, 141.
Manifests. Vessels with incomplete. Right of search during war, 76, 77.
Marriage Fees (China and Corea) Order in Council, 17–23.
Mong Cng, 149–151.

N.

Nationality in exterritorial countries. Proposed legislation, 153.
„ of children living abroad of ex-burgher now a British subject, 13, 14.
„ of people of British descent in Turkey. Mode of confirming, 152–155.
Navy (Russian). See Vessels; Volunteer Fleet; Prize Law; Prizes; Fleet.
Neutrality. Russo-Japanese war. State Railway may carry contraband of war without infringing, 15.
„ Chinese rules for observance of, are too stringent, 17.
„ Too interfering with trade by foreigners, 17.
„ British rules. As to application to Protectorates, 46, 47.
„ See also Coaling (of belligerent vessels by neutrals).
„ Proposed legislation to enforce on British subjects in Protectorates, Colonies, &c., 47–51, 124–126.
„ Egyptian rules, 51–53.
„ Supplying in and from a place. Difference between, 51.
„ See Vessel (sale of to a belligerent).
„ See Order in Council.
„ Repairs to Russian war vessel. Responsibility of England in China, 61.
„ In exterritorial countries. Who should enforce? 60–62.
„ See also China.
„ Seizure of "Reshitelni" in neutral harbour, 62, 63.
„ China too weak to enforce, 62, 63.
„ and cutting of cables during war, 71.
„ British, as regards British crews of Japanese cruisers. See Vessels.
„ Use of wireless telegraph might cause breach of, 99.

1904

NEU—RIG.

Neutrality. Question of strengthening British rules for enforcement of, 100.
,, Use of neutral cables by belligerents, 111, 112.
,, His Majesty's Government not justified in sanctioning breach of, at Wei-hai Wei (Russo-Japanese war), 120, 121.
,, See also Ports (use of by belligerents).
,, See Vessels (Belligerent).
,, Russian fleet taking refuge in British port, 116–124.
,, See Colliers (for Russian fleet).
North of England Protecting and Indemnity Association, 145, 146.

O.

Ong, Mong, 149–151.
Order in Council. See Zanzibar.
,, ,, Somaliland (on withdrawal of Consuls). 9–11.
,, ,, See Neutrality.
,, ,, (China, &c.) Consular and marriage fees, 17–23.
,, ,, (China and Corea.) Shipping Registry, 23–27.
,, ,, China (Consolating Order), 27–28.
,, ,, Foreign jurisdiction, neutrality, 59, 60; application of, in Russo-Japanese war, 147.
Ordinance. Divorce in (African) Protectorates, 1–8.
"Osiris" (Russo-Japanese war.) Mail packet overhauled, 142, 143.

P.

Palmer's Shipbuilding Yard. Suspicious purchase of torpedo-boat at, 58, 59.
Pears, Mr., 152.
"Petersbourg" changing her character during war, 113, 114, 130, 131.
Port. Question of nearest accessible, for giving coal during war. See Coal supply to belligerents.
Ports. Neutral, forbidden to belligerents, 116-124.
,, ,, Fitting out hostile expeditions from, 103, 129. See also "Roddam."
,, Practice as to receiving belligerent vessels in neutral, 102.
Privy Council. Appeal from Consular Courts in criminal cases, 149–151.
Prize Courts (Russian) to define contraband of war, 64. See Contraband of War; also Prizes (Russian) Rules.
Prizes (Naval) in neutral waters, 107, 108.
,, ,, Russian regulations as to, 92.
,, ,, Vessels using wireless telegraphy as, 95-99.
,, ,, Court in Black Sea, 108.
Prize law (Russian). Discussion of, 106–108.
Protected persons in Zanzibar (French). Jurisdiction over, 162, 163. See also Zanzibar, Neutrality at, and Coaling of Belligerents.
Protectorates. Divorce Ordinance for, 1–8.
,, Powers of Courts, 3.
,, See Coaling (of belligerents); Neutrality; Zanzibar Act; Foreign Jurisdiction.
,, Bill respecting nationality in, 153.

R.

Railway (Government) conveying contraband of war to a belligerent not a breach of neutrality, 14, 15.
Renault, Mr., 31.
"Reshitelni." Cutting out of, in neutral (Chinese) harbour, 62, 63.
Rice as contraband. See Foodstuffs.
Right of search. See Vessels; Contraband, &c.

ROD—TRE.

"Roddam" attending on Russian fleet as a collier, 136, 143–145.
,, Prosecution for breach of neutrality deprecated, 144.
Russia (war with Japan.) See Vessels; Fleet; Volunteer Fleet; Coaling; Neutrality, &c.

S.

Samuel, Samuel, and Co., Messrs., 110, 111.
Seamen deserters. Position of, under Australian Immigration Act, 36, 37.
Search for contraband. See Contraband; Vessels.
Settlements (Japan.) Taxation of, in foreign. Arbitration, 84–86.
Shipping Registry (China, &c.). Order in Council, 23–27.
,, agreements with American combine. See Vessels and "Teutonic."
"Smolensk" of Volunteer fleet. Status of, 88–90, 94, 113, 114.
,, coaling in Suez Canal during war, 88–90.
,, changing her character during war, 88–90, 94, 113. 114, 130, 131, 137–140.
Somaliland. Abolition of Consuls. New Order in Council, 9–11.
Suez Canal. Coaling of Russian belligerent vessels. Rules of, 33–36. See also Coal.
,, ,, Use of, as base of naval operations, 55.
Sugar-sweetened products. Importation of, into United Kingdom when bounty-fed, 67–69.

T.

"Tatsuta" precedent as to treatment of vessels purchased for belligerents, 78–82.
Telegraph Convention. International effect of, in war time, 42–44.
,, ,, See also Cables.
Telegraphy (Wireless) during war, at Wei-hai Wei and on "Haimun." Russian objections to, 95–99.
Telegrams during war. Stoppage, &c., by censor, 42–44.
,, As to reimbursement of charges, 42–44.
,, Draft notifications for future wars, 44. See Cypher Telegrams.
"Teutonic." Sale to Russia (in war time), 104–106, 140–142. See also American combine.
"Thea" sunk by Russians. Owners hold charterers responsible, 110. 111.
Tilleke, A. F. G., 149–151.
"Times" vessel using wireless telegraphy. See "Haimun."
Torpedo-boat. See Vessel.
Trading rights in China are subject to observance of neutrality, 15–17.
,, ,, of Zanzibar. See Zanzibar and Coaling (of belligerent vessels).
Translation of neutrality rules. Criticism of, 51.
Transvaal. See Boer.
Treaty with Japan (Alliance). Effect of, on supply of too much coal to Russia by French, 35.
,, ,, France. Seamen deserters. Effect of Australian Act on, 36, 37.
,, (Suez Canal Convention.) See Coaling of belligerent vessels.
,, See Telegraph Convention, International.
,, See Sugar Products; Cables.
,, with His Majesty's Government. Australia cannot annul by legislation, 78.
,, rights in Japan re lighter traffic, 82–84.
,, Claim that Treaty of 1894 annuls previous Agreements with Japan, 82–84.
,, See Agreement, His Majesty's Government and Shipping Companies.
,, See Extradition.
,, Date of enforcement where legislation is necessary, 157, 158.

TRI—VES.

Trials in Consular Courts. Appeals from, to Privy Council, 149–151.
Turkey. Nationality of people of British descent in, 152–155.

V.

Vessels with incomplete papers. Right of search for contraband, 76, 77.
,, Cruisers bought from neutral Government on outbreak of war, 78–82.
,, Position of British crews previous to war, 78–82; after its outbreak, 78–82.
,, Power to remove British crews if flying merchant flag, 79.
,, Manning of, should they touch a British port, 81, 82.
,, Precedent of "Tatsuta," 79–82.
,, Should be treated by neutrals as vessels of war, 81.
,, British, using wireless telegraph. See "Haimun." Russian threat to regard as prize of war, 95-99.
,, Japanese officer should not be on board, 99.
,, Russo-Japanese war. "Burni" (Russian), men of, interned at Hong Kong, 29, 30.
,, Difference between taking refuge from storm and from enemy, 29, 30, 116–124.
,, belligerent, taking refuge in neutral ports, 60–62.
,, ,, repairs to, in neutral harbour, 60.
,, in British-owned dock, 61.
,, See Coal; Internment (during war). See also Ports.
,, "Smolensk," of Volunteer Fleet. Coaling rules applicable to, 53–55.
,, Russian belligerent using Suez Canal, 55. See also Coal.
,, bought during Russo-Japanese war. Suspicious circumstances, 58, 59.
,, Augmentation of equipment by neutrals. See Coal; Act (Foreign Enlistment), &c.
,, "Reshitelni" seized in neutral harbour, 62, 63.
,, (Indirect sale to belligerents) See "Teutonic."
,, As to obligation of His Majesty's Government to buy, under Shipping Agreements, 104-106, 140–142.
,, detained by Russians in neutral waters. See "Frankby."
,, sunk by Russian squadron. Responsibility of charterers to owners, 110, 111.
,, Claim for loss of cargo, 111.
,, Distinct from that for sinking of vessel, 111.
,, changing their status during war. See Volunteer Fleet.
,, Russian belligerent, accompanied by collier. See "Teretz."
,, Russian collier emerges from Black Sea as a merchantman, 127, 128.
,, Is not a war vessel under Treaty, 128.
,, Should be treated as such as regards grant of supplies, 128.
,, making ports a base of supplies. See Neutrality; Coaling; Colliers.
,, commissioning in neutral waters, 133.
,, Russian, leave Black Sea and then become men-of-war, 130–133, 137–140. See also Volunteer Fleet.
,, See Prize law.

VES—ZAN.

Vessels. How far this can be recognized, 115, 130–133, 137–140.
,, Coaling facilities in such a case. See Coaling.
,, As to Turkish Government stopping, 140.
,, Search for contraband. See Mail Packets.
,, captured in neutral waters. Circumstances where justified, 119, 120.
,, carrying contraband. Continuous liability to seizure, 145, 146.
,, (United States'.) Ill-treatment of British subjects on, by Venezuelans, 159–162; Claims for compensation, 159–162.
,, Case of "Alemania" similar to that of "Virginia," 161.
"Virginia." Seizure for trading with insurgent port, 161.
Volunteer fleet. Vessels of changing their character during war, 112–115. See also "Smolensk" and "Petersbourg." See also Vessels.
,, ,, (Russo-Japanese war). Coaling in Suez Canal, 53–55.
,, ,, Status of vessels of, 53–55, 88–90, 94, 95.
,, ,, Treatment of in Straits Settlements, 112–115.
"Voronej," 94, 95.
,, See also Zanzibar; Coaling.
,, used as collier. See Colliers.

W.

Walford, Mr. A. B., 82, 83, 85.
Walpole, Sir Spencer, 111, 112.
War (Russo-Japanese). See Neutrality; Contraband; Coal, Railway, Vessels; Act (Foreign Enlistment), &c.
,, ,, Stoppage of telegrams during, 42–44.
Wei-hai Wei. Procedure should Russian fleet take refuge at, 116–124.
,, treated as a British port, 119–121.
,, Wireless telegraphy station at. Complaint as to its neutrality, 99.
White Star Line. See American combine.
Wireless telegraphy. See Telegraphy.
Woods, Tyler, Brown, and Co., 136, 137.

Y.

Yeddo and Yokohama. See "Yokohama."
Yokohama and Yeddo. Right to lighter traffic between, 82–84.

Z.

Zanzibar. Position of, as regards maintenance of neutrality, 44-51, 125, 126, 146–149.
,, Position of British subjects and foreigners respecting neutrality, 44–51, 146–149.
,, As to Sultan's issuing Proclamation of neutrality, 45.
,, Coaling of belligerents at. See Coaling.
,, Order in Council. Jurisdiction over French citizens, &c., 162, 163.
,, Cesser of French exterritorial jurisdiction, 162, 163.

1904

Printed for the use of the Foreign Office. September 1905.

CONFIDENTIAL.

REPORTS BY THE LAW OFFICERS OF THE CROWN, &c.: 1904.

AFRICA.

No. 1.

[April 27, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, February 27, 1904.

Gentlemen,

Draft Divorce Ordinance for the Protectorates.

WITH reference to my letter of the 19th August, 1902, on the subject of the draft Marriage Ordinance to be promulgated in the four African Protectorates administered by this Department, in which you were informed that divorce legislation in those Protectorates would form the subject of a separate communication to you, I have the honour to transmit herewith, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, a draft Divorce Ordinance which it is proposed to issue in the East Africa, Uganda, and British Central Africa Protectorates.

The draft has been prepared in this Department, and is based on "The Indian Divorce Act, 1869" (Act IV of 1869), with such slight modifications as are required by local circumstances, and by such statutory modifications of the English Divorce Law, upon which the Indian Act is based, as have taken place since the date of its enactment.

A copy of the Indian Divorce Act is inclosed herewith, and on the last page of the draft will be found a Table showing how the various sections of that Act are dealt with in the proposed Ordinance.

The draft has been submitted to the Commissioners of the various Protectorates, and to the British South Africa Company (who administer the government of North-Eastern Rhodesia), for their observations. The recommendations from the Commissioners have in most cases been adopted and embodied in the Ordinance; but his Lordship desires to draw your attention to the following points:—

As the recommendations from the various Protectorates in regard to the definition of minor children are not identical, Lord Lansdowne considers that the best method of dealing with the various suggestions will be to insert a special definition in each draft Ordinance when prepared for promulgation in the respective Protectorates.

The Commissioner for Uganda, in his despatch No. 264 of the 9th September, 1903, advises, with regard to clause 4 (jurisdiction), that the necessary powers to hear and decide cases of divorce should be given to the Courts of the Sub-Commissioners of the various provinces and Collectors of districts, as he considers that otherwise the poorer classes of natives would not be able to avail themselves of the relief afforded by the Ordinance. His Lordship is, however, of opinion that jurisdiction in divorce should only be conferred on Courts presided over by trained lawyers, and he considers that it would be most unwise to confer such jurisdiction on Courts of Sub-Commissioners and Collectors, especially when the power to grant divorces is being introduced for the first time into the Protectorate. As regards the question of jurisdiction in the Kingdom of Uganda, and in Toro and Ankole, which is also referred to in the same despatch, his Lordship proposes at a later stage to make such local arrangements as may be considered necessary.

1904

The Acting Commissioner for British Central Africa suggests in his despatch No. 137 of the 27th June, 1903, with regard to clause 5 (2) that the words "has changed his profession of Christianity for the profession of some other religion and gone through a form of marriage with another woman," should be omitted; but his Lordship holds that where a native woman convert marries under the Christian system of marriage a male native convert, and the latter lapses into paganism and polygamy, the woman should be entitled to a divorce, and not compulsorily be dragged back into savagery with her husband.

The draft Ordinance was referred to the British South Africa Company for the observations of the local authorities in North-Eastern Rhodesia, and a copy of Judge Beaufort's remarks is inclosed in the letter from the British South Africa Company of the 21st October last.

Judge Beaufort considers that under Article 21 of "The North-Eastern Rhodesia Order in Council, 1900," the North-Eastern Rhodesia High Court has already jurisdiction to grant divorces, since it is given under this Article "full jurisdiction, civil and criminal, over all persons and over all matters within North-Eastern Rhodesia;" and further, that as the North-Eastern Rhodesia Order in Council directs that English law is to prevail in the Protectorate, questions might arise whether this Ordinance was not ultra vires in so far as it departs from the English divorce law.

The first point appears to Lord Lansdowne to be one of considerable magnitude, because if the words he refers to in the Order in Council do confer jurisdiction to grant divorces, the High Courts of British Central Africa, East Africa, and Uganda have already the powers this Ordinance purports to confer under the corresponding words in the Orders in Council referring to those Protectorates.

Lord Lansdowne is advised that neither the Court of North-Eastern Rhodesia nor the High Courts of East Africa, Uganda, or British Central Africa at present possess jurisdiction to grant a divorce.

It is open to grave doubt whether the expression "criminal or civil jurisdiction" includes jurisdiction in matters of divorce, which was ecclesiastical in origin, and the East Africa and corresponding Orders in Council of 1902, in Article 16, specifically confer Admiralty jurisdiction on the Courts, which shows, at any rate, that that jurisdiction was not regarded as conferred by the words "full jurisdiction, civil and criminal," in Article 15.

Assuming that the views stated above are in your opinion correct on this point, the further question arises whether such jurisdiction can be conferred by an Ordinance.

In the three Protectorates for which new Orders in Council were passed in 1902 it appears to his Lordship that the power to confer divorce jurisdiction on the High Court of the Protectorate by an Ordinance is indirectly given by Article 12 (8), for if the divorce law of India or England can be applied to the Protectorate, the highest Court in the Protectorate must be empowered to administer it; and even should this not be the case, it seems probable that the power was conferred by the general right of the Commissioner under Article 12 (1) of the Order in Council to make Ordinances for the administration of justice.

It may be, however, that the general words giving the High Court jurisdiction (Article 21 in "The North-Eastern Rhodesia Order in Council, 1900," Article 15 in "The East Africa Order in Council, 1902," &c.) do not themselves enable the Court to act, but only enable it to carry out the powers given to it by the various laws and Acts applied to the Protectorate.

This view, however, would, were it adopted, cause great difficulty in North-Eastern Rhodesia, for the Order in Council applying to that Protectorate does not contain any Article equivalent to Article 12 (8) of the East Africa Order, 1902, and his Lordship does not think that it can prevail.

With regard to the further point raised by Judge Beaufort (i.e., whether such an Ordinance as this would be valid in so far as it departs from English law in any particular) there appears to be no difficulty, because Article 21 (2) of "The North-Eastern Rhodesia Order in Council, 1900," says that the jurisdiction is to be exercised in conformity with English law, "except so far as such law may be modified by any Order in Council, Regulation, or Queen's Regulation."

I am to transmit for your information the papers referred to in this letter, together with others, as marked in the accompanying list, and to request that you will take them into your consideration, and favour his Lordship with your opinion:—

(1.) Whether you consider the draft Divorce Ordinance is one that may properly be sanctioned for issue in the Protectorates;

(2.) Whether the High Courts of the Protectorates are entitled to grant divorces under the "full jurisdiction, civil and criminal," conferred upon them;

(3.) Whether, if not already in possession of it, such jurisdiction can properly be conferred by Ordinances in the Protectorates of British Central Africa, Uganda, and East Africa, and by King's Regulations in North-Eastern Rhodesia.

His Lordship would also be glad to receive at the same time any observations of a more general character that you may have to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CLEMENT Ll. HILL.

List of Papers.

1.	Draft Divorce Ordinance.
2.	Colonel H. Sadler	(No. 303)	November 6, 1902.
3.	Sir C. Eliot	(No. 36)	February 7, 1903.
4.	To ditto	(No. 140)	April 6, "
5.	To British South Africa Company		April 6, "
6.	To Colonel H. Sadler (No. 125), Major Pearce (No. 95), and Mr. Cordeaux (No. 97)		April 6, "
7.	Mr. Cordeaux	(No. 46)	April 28, "
8.	Sir C. Eliot	(No. 239)	May 25, "
9.	Major Pearce	(No. 137)	June 27, "
10.	Colonel H. Sadler	(No. 264)	September 9, "
11.	British South Africa Company (inclosing Memorandum by Judge Beaufort)..		October 21, "
12.	Memorandum by Mr. Hurst		December 3, "
13.	"The East Africa Order in Council, 1902" (Confidential 7759*), "The Uganda Order in Council, 1902" (Confidential 7760*), "The British Central Africa Order in Council, 1902" (Confidential 7761*). "The North-Eastern Rhodesia Order in Council, 1900" (Confidential 7236*), and "The Somaliland Order in Council, 1899" (Confidential 7202*).
14.	"The Indian Divorce Act, 1869" (Act IV of 1869).

Report.

(1.) We think the draft Ordinance, subject to certain alterations we have made in the copy marked (A) and initialled by us, may properly be sanctioned;

(2.) We answer in the negative; and

(3.) In the affirmative.

Generally.—We have nothing to add.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Law Officers' Department,
April 27, 1904.

(A.)

Draft Divorce Ordinance.

1. THIS Ordinance may be cited as "The Divorce Ordinance, 1904." Short title.

2. Nothing hereinafter contained shall authorize— Limitations of this Ordinance.

(1.) The grant of any relief under this Ordinance unless the petitioner resides in the Protectorate at the time of presenting the Petition; and

(a.) Either professes the Christian religion; or

1904

(b.) Has been married under the provisions of the Marriage Ordinances in force in the Protectorates of East Africa, Uganda, or British Central Africa.

(2.) Or the making of any decree of dissolution of marriage except in the following cases:—

(a.) Where the marriage shall have been solemnized in Africa; or

(b.) Where the adultery, rape, or unnatural crime complained of shall have been committed in Africa; or

(c.) Where the husband has since the marriage adopted some form of religion other than Christianity.

Definitions.

(3.) Or the making of any decree of nullity of marriage, except in cases where the marriage has been solemnized in Africa.

3. In this Ordinance—

"Africa" means the British Protectorates of Zanzibar, East Africa, British Central Africa, Somaliland, Uganda, and the German, Italian, and Portuguese territories on the East Coast of Africa.

"~~Minor children~~" ~~means, in the case of natives and British Indians, boys who have not attained the age of 15 years, and girls who have not attained the age of 13 years~~.

Jurisdiction of the High Court.

Principles of law to be applied.

4. Jurisdiction under this Ordinance shall only be exercised by the High Court (hereinafter called the Court), and such jurisdiction shall, subject to the provisions of this Ordinance, be exercised in accordance with the law applied in matrimonial proceedings in the High Court of Justice in England.

Dissolution of Marriage.

Grounds for divorce.

5.—(1.) A husband may apply by Petition to the Court for the dissolution of his marriage on the ground that since the solemnization thereof his wife has been guilty of adultery.

(2.) A wife may apply by Petition to the Court for the dissolution of her marriage on the ground that since the solemnization thereof her husband has changed his profession of Christianity for the profession of some other religion, and gone through a form of marriage with another woman, or has been guilty of incestuous adultery; or

Of bigamy with adultery; or

Of marriage with another woman with adultery; or

Of rape, sodomy, or bestiality; or

Of adultery coupled with cruelty; or

Of adultery coupled with desertion, without reasonable excuse, for two years or upwards.

Co-respondent.

6. Where the husband is the petitioner, he shall make the alleged adulterer a co-respondent to the Petition unless he is excused by the Court from so doing on one of the following grounds:—

(1.) That the respondent is leading the life of a prostitute, and that he knows of no person with whom the adultery has been committed.

(2.) That he does not know the name of the alleged adulterer, although he has made due efforts to discover it.

(3.) That the alleged adulterer is dead.

Scope of inquiry by the Court.

7. The Court shall satisfy itself, so far as it reasonably can, as to the facts alleged, and also whether or not the petitioner has been in any manner accessory to, or conniving at, the going through of the said form of marriage or the adultery complained of, or has condoned the same, and shall also inquire into any counter-charge which may be made against the petitioner.

When Petition shall be dismissed.

8. The Petition shall be dismissed if the Court is satisfied that the petitioner's case has not been proved, or is not satisfied that the alleged adultery has been committed, or finds that during the marriage the petitioner has been accessory to, or conniving at, the going through of the said form of marriage or the adultery, or has condoned the same, or finds that the Petition is presented or prosecuted in collusion with either the respondent or co-respondent.

When Petition shall be granted.

9. If the Court is satisfied that the petitioner's case has been proved, and does not find that the petitioner has been accessory to, or has connived at, the going through of the said form of marriage or the adultery, or has condoned the same, or that the Petition is presented or prosecuted in collusion, the Court shall pronounce a decree nisi for the dissolution of the marriage:

Provided that the Court shall not be bound to pronounce such decree if it finds that the petitioner has during the marriage been guilty of adultery, or been guilty of unreasonable delay in presenting or prosecuting the Petition, or of cruelty to the respondent, or of having deserted or wilfully separated himself or herself from the respondent before the adultery complained of, and without reasonable excuse, or of such wilful neglect of or misconduct towards the respondent, as has conduced to the adultery.

Condonation of adultery.

10. Adultery shall not be deemed to have been condoned unless conjugal cohabitation has been continued or subsequently resumed.

Grant of relief to the respondent.

11. If the respondent opposes the relief sought on the ground, where the petitioner is the husband, of his adultery, cruelty, or desertion without reasonable excuse, or, where the petitioner is the wife, on the ground of her adultery, the Court may give the respondent, on his or her application, the same relief to which he or she would have been entitled if a Petition had been presented seeking such relief, and the respondent may give evidence of or relating to such adultery, cruelty, or desertion.

Nullity of Marriage.

Petitions for nullity of marriage.

12. A husband or a wife may present a Petition to the Court praying that his or her marriage may be declared null and void.

Grounds for decree of nullity.

13. The following are grounds on which a decree of nullity of marriage may be made:—

(a.) That the respondent was permanently impotent at the time of the marriage;

(b.) That the parties are within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity (whether natural or legal) or affinity;

(c.) That either party was a lunatic or idiot at the time of the marriage:

(d.) That the former husband or wife of either party was living at the time of the marriage, and the marriage with such previous husband or wife was then in force;

(e.) That the consent of either party to the marriage was obtained by force or fraud in any case in which the marriage might be annulled on this ground by the law of England.

(2.) If the Court finds that the petitioner's case has been proved it shall pronounce a decree nisi declaring the marriage to be null and void.

Children of annulled marriage.

14. Where a marriage is annulled on the ground that a former husband or wife was living, and it is found that the subsequent marriage was contracted in good faith and with the full belief of the parties that the former husband or wife was dead, or where a marriage is annulled on the ground of insanity, children begotten before the decree nisi is made shall be specified in the decree, and shall be entitled to succeed in the same manner as legitimate children to the estate of the parent who at the time of the marriage was competent to contract.

Judicial Separation and Protection Orders.

Grounds for judicial separation.

15. A husband or a wife may apply by Petition to the Court for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty, or adultery, or desertion without reasonable excuse for two years or upwards, and the Court, on being satisfied that the allegations of the Petition are true, and that there is no legal ground why the application should not be granted, may decree judicial separation accordingly.

Property of wife after judicial separation.

16. Where judicial separation has been decreed under this Ordinance, the wife shall, from the date of the decree, and whilst the separation continues, be considered as unmarried with respect to property of every description which she may acquire, or which may come to or devolve upon her, and such property may be disposed of by her in all respects as if she were an unmarried woman, and on her decease, if she die intestate, shall go as it would have gone if her husband had then been dead:

Provided that if she again cohabit with her husband, all property to which she may be entitled when such cohabitation takes place shall be held to her separate use, subject, however, to any Agreement in writing made between herself and her husband while separate.

Contracts, &c., of wife after judicial separation.

17. Where a judicial separation has been decreed under this Ordinance, the wife shall, whilst the separation continues, be considered as an unmarried woman for the purposes of contracts, wrongs, and injuries, and of suing and being sued in any civil proceedings, and her husband shall not be liable in respect of any contract, act, or costs entered into, done, omitted, or incurred by her during the separation:

Provided that where alimony has been decreed or ordered to be paid to the wife upon such judicial separation, and the same is not duly paid, the husband shall be liable for necessaries supplied for her use:

Provided also that nothing in this Ordinance shall prevent the wife from joining at any time during the separation in the exercise of a joint power given to herself and her husband.

18. A husband or wife upon the application of whose wife or husband, as the case may be, a decree of judicial separation has been pronounced, may at any time thereafter present a Petition praying for the reversal of such decree on the ground that it was obtained in his or her absence, and that where desertion was the ground of such decree there was reasonable excuse for the desertion alleged.

The Court may, on being satisfied of the truth of the allegations of the Petition, reverse the decree accordingly.

Protection orders.

19.—(1.) Any wife, in whose property the husband has acquired an interest by virtue of the marriage, may, if deserted by him, apply by Petition to the Court for an order to protect any property which she may have obtained, or may obtain after the desertion, against him and his creditors and any person claiming under him.

(2.) The Court may, if satisfied that the desertion was without reasonable excuse, and that the wife is maintaining herself, make such order.

(3.) The order shall state the time at which the desertion commenced, and shall, as regards all persons dealing with the wife in reliance thereon, be conclusive as to such time.

Position of wife.

(4.) While any such order is in force, the wife shall be, and be deemed to have been from the date of the desertion, in the like position in all respects with regard to property and contracts and suing and being sued, as she would be if she had obtained a decree of judicial separation under this Ordinance.

Discharge and variance

(5.) The husband, or any creditor or person claiming under him, may apply to the Court for the discharge or variation of the order, and the Court may, if the desertion has ceased, or if for any other cause it thinks fit so to do, discharge or vary the order accordingly.

1904

Action for seizing wife's property.

(6.) If the husband, or any creditor or person claiming under him, seizes or continues to hold any property of the wife after notice of any such order, the wife may, by action, recover such property, and also a sum equal to double its value.

Reversal or discharge of judicial separation or protection order, effect of.

20.—(1.) The reversal, discharge, or variation of a decree of judicial separation, or of a protection order, shall not affect any rights or remedies which a person would otherwise have had in respect of any contracts or acts of the wife entered into or done between the dates of the decree or order and of the reversal, discharge, or variation thereof.

(2.) Any person who, in reliance on any such decree or order, makes any payment to or permits any transfer or act to be made or done by the wife shall, notwithstanding such decree or order may then have been reversed, discharged, or varied, or the separation of the wife from her husband may have ceased, or at some time since the making of the decree or order been discontinued, be protected and indemnified as if at the time of such payment, transfer, or act such decree or order were valid and still subsisting without variation, and the separation had not ceased or been discontinued, unless at the time of the payment, transfer, or other act such person had notice of the reversal, discharge, or variation of the decree or order or of the cessation or discontinuance of the separation.

Restitution of Conjugal Rights.

Restitution of conjugal rights.

21—(1.) If a husband or wife has without reasonable excuse withdrawn from the society of the other, the wife or husband may apply by Petition to the Court for restitution of conjugal rights.

(2.) The Court, on being satisfied that the allegations of the Petition are true, and that there is no legal ground why the application should not be granted, may decree restitution of conjugal rights accordingly.

(3.) Nothing shall be pleaded in answer to a Petition for restitution of conjugal rights which would not be ground for a suit for judicial separation or for a decree of nullity of marriage.

General.

Husband may claim damages for adultery.

22.—(1.) A husband may, by Petition, claim damages from any person on the ground of his having committed adultery with the wife of the petitioner.

(2.) Such claim may be made either in a Petition for dissolution of marriage or for judicial separation, or by Petition for that purpose only.

(3.) The Court shall ascertain the amount of damages whether the respondents appear or not, and may in every case direct in what manner the damages shall be paid or applied, and may direct that the whole or any part thereof shall be settled for the benefit of the children (if any) of the marriage, or as a provision for the maintenance of the wife.

Costs against a co-respondent.

23. A co-respondent may be ordered to pay the whole or any part of the costs of the proceedings if adultery with the wife of the petitioner has been established against him:

Provided that he shall not be ordered to pay the costs of the petitioner—

(1.) If at the time of the adultery he had no reason to believe the respondent to be a married woman.

(2.) If the respondent was at the time of the adultery living apart from her husband and leading the life of a prostitute.

Alimony pendente lite.

24. In any suit under this Ordinance the wife, whether or not she has obtained a protection order, may apply to the Court for alimony pending the suit, and the Court may thereupon make such order as it may deem just, provided that alimony pending the suit shall in no case exceed one-fifth of the husband's average net income for the three years next preceding the date of the order, and shall continue in the case of a decree nisi of dissolution or nullity of marriage until the decree is made absolute.

Permanent alimony.

25.—(1.) On a decree absolute declaring a marriage to be dissolved, or on a decree of judicial separation obtained by a wife, the Court may order the husband to secure to the wife such sum of money as, having regard to her fortune (if any), to the ability of the husband, and the conduct of the parties, it thinks reasonable.

(2.) The Court may direct the alimony to be paid either in a lump sum or in yearly, monthly, or weekly payments for any period not exceeding the life of the wife, and for that purpose may cause a proper instrument to be executed by all necessary parties.

(3.) The Court may direct the alimony to be paid either to the wife herself or to a trustee to be approved on her behalf by the Court, and may impose such terms and restrictions, and may direct the execution of such trust deeds as it may think fit, and may from time to time appoint a new trustee.

Discharge or alteration of order for alimony.

26. Where an order has been made for the payment of alimony, and the husband from any cause subsequently becomes unable to make such payments, the Court may discharge or modify, or suspend the order in whole or in part, and may again revive the order in whole or in part.

Settlement of the wife's property.

27. When a decree of dissolution of marriage or of judicial separation is pronounced on account of adultery by the wife, and the wife is entitled to any property the Court may, notwithstanding the existence of the disability of coverture, order the whole or any part of such property to be settled for the benefit of the husband, or of the children of the marriage, or of both.

Power to vary settlements.

28. After a decree absolute of dissolution or of nullity of marriage, the Court may inquire into the existence of ante-nuptial or post-nuptial settlements made on the parties whose marriage is the subject of the decree, and may make such orders with reference to the application of the whole or part of the settled property, whether for the benefit of the husband or wife or of the children (if any) or of both children and parents, as seems fit:

Provided that no order for the benefit of the parents, or either of them, shall be made at the expense of the children.

Powers of the Court as to settlements.

29. Where the Court has power to direct any property to be settled, or to vary the terms of an existing settlement, it may appoint trustees, and may order the necessary instruments to be prepared, containing such provisions as it may think fit, and may order all necessary parties to execute the same, and may from time to time appoint new trustees, and may do all such other acts as it may deem necessary for carrying such directions into effect.

Custody of children.

30. In suits for dissolution of marriage, or for nullity of marriage, or for judicial separation, the Court may at any stage of the proceedings, or after a decree absolute has been pronounced, make such orders as it thinks fit, and may from time to time vary or discharge the said orders, with respect to the custody, maintenance, and education of the minor children of the marriage, or for placing them under the protection of the Court.

Procedure.

31. Subject to the provisions herein contained, all proceedings under this Ordinance shall be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure.

[In B.C.A. only—

Procedure followed in matrimonial proceedings in the High Court of Justice in England.]

Petitions.

32.—(1.) Every Petition shall state, as distinctly as the nature of the case permits, the facts on which the claim is based, and shall be verified as if it were a plaint, and may at the hearing be referred to as evidence.

(2.) Petitions for dissolution of marriage, or for nullity of marriage, or for judicial separation, shall state that there is not any collusion or connivance between the petitioner and the respondent.

Service of Petition.

33. Every Petition under this Ordinance shall be served on the party to be affected thereby, either within or without the Protectorate, in such manner as the Court may, by general or special order, from time to time direct:

Provided that the Court may dispense with such service in case it seems necessary or expedient so to do.

Examination of witnesses.

34. The witnesses in all proceedings shall be examined orally:

Provided that the parties may verify their respective cases by affidavit, but so that the deponent may be orally cross-examined and re-examined, either on the application of the other party or by direction of the Court.

Husband and wife compellable witnesses.

35. On any Petition presented by a wife for the dissolution of her marriage on the ground of adultery coupled with cruelty or desertion without reasonable excuse, the husband and wife respectively shall be competent and compellable to give evidence relating to such cruelty or desertion.

Sittings in camerâ.

36. The Court may hear the whole or any part of the proceedings under this Ordinance with closed doors.

Adjournment.

37. The Court may adjourn the hearing of any Petition under this Ordinance, and may require further evidence thereon.

Making decrees nisi decrees absolute.

38.—(1.) No decree nisi of dissolution or nullity of marriage shall be made absolute till after the expiration of six months from the date thereof, or such longer period as the High Court may by rule prescribe.

(2.) During that period any person may show cause why the said decree should not be made absolute by reason of the same having been obtained by collusion, or by reason of material facts not being brought before the Court.

(3.) On cause being so shown, the Court shall make the decree absolute, or reverse the decree nisi, or require further inquiry, or otherwise deal with the case as justice may demand.

(4.) The Court may order the costs arising from such cause being shown to be paid by the parties, or such one or more of them, including a wife, if she have a separate property, as it thinks fit.

(5.) Where a petitioner fails to move within a reasonable time that the decree nisi be made absolute, the Court may dismiss the suit.

Enforcement of orders. Appeals.

39. All decrees and orders made by the Court in proceedings under this Ordinance shall be enforced, and may be appealed from, as if they were decrees or orders made by the Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction:

Provided that in suits for dissolution or nullity of marriage no respondent or co-respondent not appearing and defending the suit on the occasion of the decree nisi being made shall appeal against the decree being made absolute unless the Court gives leave to appeal at the time of the decree being made absolute:

And provided that no appeal from an order absolute for dissolution or nullity of marriage shall lie in favour of any party who, having had time and opportunity to appeal from the decree nisi, shall not have appealed therefrom:

And provided that no appeal in any proceedings under this Ordinance shall lie from the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa to His Majesty in Council, except where an appeal would lie in England from a similar decision of the Court of Appeal to the House of Lords.

Re-marriage of the parties.

40. When the time limited for appealing against a decree of dissolution or nullity of marriage shall have expired, and no appeal has been presented, or when in the result of any such appeal any marriage shall be declared to be dissolved or annulled, but not sooner, it shall be lawful for the parties thereto to marry again as if the prior marriage had been dissolved by death.

1904

Clergyman not bound to marry a divorced guilty party.

41. No clergyman in holy orders of the Church of England shall be compelled to solemnize the marriage of any person whose former marriage has been dissolved on the ground of his or her adultery, or shall be liable to any suit, penalty, or censure for solemnizing or refusing to solemnize such marriage.

But must permit another clergyman.

42. When a clergyman in holy orders, or other minister of religion in charge of any church or chapel, refuses to perform such marriage service between persons who would, but for such refusal, be entitled to be married in such church or chapel, he shall permit any other clergyman in holy orders of the said Church to perform the service in such church or chapel.

Rules of Court.

43. The Court may make Rules of Court with respect to all matters of procedure under this Ordinance, and may also prescribe the forms to be used and the fees to be paid in proceedings taken hereunder.

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

Divorce Ordinance.

TABLE showing how the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act are dealt with.

Indian Act. Act IV of 1869.	Draft Corresponding Provision.
1	1	The first paragraph of the Indian Act is irrelevant, but most of the Indian definitions appear unnecessary, and those in the draft are new.
2	2
3	3
4, 5, 6	Omitted	Unnecessary.
7	4
8, 9,	Omitted	Not applicable.
10	5
Last paragraph	32 (1)
11	6
12	7
13	8
Last paragraph	Omitted	Not applicable.
14	9
Last paragraph	10
15	11
16	38
17	Omitted	Not applicable.
18	12
19	13
20	Omitted	Not applicable.
21	14
22, 23	15
24	16
25	17
26	18
Last paragraph	Omitted	Covered by 60, 3rd paragraph = 20 (1).
27, 28, 29, 30, 31	19	Abbreviated.
32, 33	21
34	22
35	23	Last paragraph omitted.
36	24
37	25, 26	Except 2nd paragraph, omitted.
38	25 (3)
39	27
Last paragraph	22 (3)
40	28	Except 2nd paragraph, omitted.
41, 42, 43, 44	30	Abbreviated.
45	31
46	Omitted	Forms to be prescribed by rule.
47	32
48, 49	Omitted	Covered by the Indian Civil Code, § 440.
50	33
51	34
52	35
53	36
54	37
55	39
56	39	Last proviso covers this.
57	40
58	41
59	42
60	20
First paragraph	Omitted	Unnecessary.
61	Omitted	Unnecessary.
62	43

No. 2.

[May 30, 1904.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, May 14, 1904.

Gentlemen,

Draft Somaliland Order in Council, 1904.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you herewith the draft of an Order in Council for the Somaliland Protectorate, to be intituled "The Somaliland Order in Council, 1904."

It has been considered advisable to prepare this draft Order in connection with the withdrawal of Consular attributes from the officers of the Protectorate who are dealt with in the Order in Council of 1903, a copy of which is inclosed, and also in order to provide for the substitution of the title "Commissioner" for that of "Consul-General."

The opportunity has been taken to introduce certain other clauses, framed upon the model of similar provisions, which are at present embodied in the East Africa and Zanzibar Orders in Council, copies of which are inclosed herewith.

The clauses in the above Orders in Council to which those in the draft Order in Council correspond are:—

Clause		Article
2	in Somaliland Order in Council corresponds to	2	in East Africa Order in Council, 1902.*
3	" " "	4	" "
5	" " "	5	" "
6	" " "	6	" "
7	" " "	7	" "
8	" " "	10	" "
9	" " "	7	in Zanzibar Order in Council, 1903.†
10	" " "	8	" "
11	" " "	9	of the East Africa Order in Council, 1899 (now repealed).‡
12	" " "	20	in East Africa Order in Council, 1902.*
13	" " "	6	in Zanzibar Order in Council, 1903.†

I have the honour to request you to take this draft Order into your consideration, and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether it can properly be submitted for the approval of His Majesty in Council.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CLEMENT Ll. HILL.

List of Papers.

Draft Order in Council, 1904.
Somaliland Order in Council, 1903 (Confidential No. 7883*).
East Africa Order in Council, 1902 (Confidential No. 7759*).
Zanzibar Order in Council, 1903 (Confidential No. 8048*).

Report.

In our opinion this draft Order in Council may properly be submitted for the approval of His Majesty in Council.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
May 30, 1904.

---

* See Confidential No. 7759*. † See Confidential No. 8048*. ‡ See Confidential No. 7189*.

1904

Annex.

Draft Somaliland Order in Council, 1904.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, His Majesty the King has power and jurisdiction within the Somaliland Protectorate:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers on this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in His Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as "The Somaliland Order in Council, 1904," and shall be construed as one with the Somaliland Order in Council, 1899.

2. In this Order—

"Crown Lands" means all public lands in the Protectorate which are subject to the control of His Majesty by virtue of any Treaty, Convention, or Agreement, or of His Majesty's Protectorate, and all lands which shall have been acquired by His Majesty for the public service or otherwise howsoever;

"The principal Order" means the Somaliland Order in Council, 1899.

3.—(1.) His Majesty may by Commission under His Sign Manual and Signet appoint a fit person to administer the Government of the Protectorate under the designation of Commissioner or such other designation as His Majesty thinks fit, and the person so appointed is hereinafter referred to as the Commissioner.

(2.) In the event of the death, incapacity, removal, or absence from the Protectorate of the Commissioner for the time being, all and every the powers and authorities by this Order granted to him shall, until His Majesty's further pleasure is signified through the Secretary of State, be vested in the Deputy Commissioner or other principal officer of the Protectorate Government for the time being in the Protectorate.

(3.) The Commissioner shall administer the Government of the Protectorate in the name and on behalf of His Majesty, and shall do and execute in due manner all things that shall belong to his said command and to the trust thereby reposed in him, according to the several powers and authorities granted or appointed to him by virtue of this Order and of his Commission, and according to such instructions as may from time to time be given to him under His Majesty's Sign Manual and Signet, or by Order of His Majesty in Council, or by His Majesty through a Secretary of State, and according to such laws as are or shall hereafter be in force in the Protectorate.

4. All references to the Consul-General in the Principal Order or in the Somaliland Order in Council, 1903, or in any King's Regulations, Proclamations, Notices, Rules of Court or other documents issued or made under the Principal Order shall be deemed to be references to the Commissioner, and construed accordingly.

5. The Commissioner shall have an official seal, bearing the style of his office, and such device as a Secretary of State from time to time approves, and such seal shall be deemed the public seal of the Protectorate, and may be kept and used by the Commissioner for the sealing of all things whatsoever that shall pass the public seal. And, until a public seal shall be provided, the seal of the Commissioner may be used as the public seal.

6.—(1.) The Commissioner may, with the approval of the Secretary of State, by Proclamation define any boundaries of the territories for the time being within the limits of this Order, and divide those territories into provinces or districts in such manner and with such sub-divisions as may be convenient for purposes of administration, describing the boundaries thereof and assigning names thereto.

(2.) If a question arises whether any place is or is not within the Protectorate, or within any province or district, and such question does not appear to be determined by any such Proclamation, or other evidence, it shall be referred to the Commissioner, and a certificate under his hand and seal shall be conclusive on the question, and judicial notice shall be taken thereof.

7.—(1.) All rights of His Majesty in or in relation to any Crown lands shall vest in and may be exercised by the Commissioner for the time being in trust for His Majesty, or, if the Secretary of State at any time with respect to all or any such lands by order under his hand so directs, in such other trustee or trustees for His Majesty as the Secretary of State may appoint.

(2.) The Secretary of State may, when he thinks fit, by a like order remove any trustee so appointed, and may appoint any new or additional trustee or trustees.

(3.) The Commissioner, or such other trustee or trustees, may make grants or leases of any Crown lands, or may permit them to be temporarily occupied, on such terms and conditions as he or they may think fit, subject to the provisions of any King's Regulations.

(4.) All mines and minerals being in, under, or upon any lands in the occupation of any native tribe, or any members thereof, or of any person not possessed of the right to work such mines and minerals, shall vest in the Commissioner, or such trustee or trustees, in like manner as the mines and minerals being in, under, or upon any Crown lands.

8.—(1.) A Secretary of State, or the Commissioner, subject to the directions of a Secretary of State, may, on behalf of His Majesty, appoint, or authorize the appointment of, such public officers for the administration of the Protectorate, under such designations as he may think fit, and may prescribe their duties.

(2.) The Commissioner may, upon sufficient cause to him appearing, suspend from the exercise of his office in the Protectorate any such public officer, which suspension shall continue and have effect only until His Majesty's pleasure therein shall be made known and signified to the Commissioner.

(3.) Subject to the provisions of any King's Regulations, the Commissioner may appoint, or may authorize Heads of Departments to appoint, such clerks and other subordinate officers as may be required; and unless other provision is made all subordinate officers shall be removable by the respective officers by whom they were appointed.

9. The powers of the Secretary of State with respect to the application to the Protectorate of enactments and Acts of the Governor-General of India in Council or of the Governor of Bombay in Council under Article 7 of the Principal Order, and of laws and ordinances for the time being in force in any British possession under Article 9 of that order shall, on the commencement of this Order, be transferred to the Commissioner, but those powers shall be exercised by him only by means of Regulations made under and subject in all respects to the provisions of Article 32 of the Principal Order.

10. The Commissioner may by such Regulations repeal or amend with respect to the Protectorate any enactments, Acts, laws, or ordinances which are made applicable or have been brought into operation in the Protectorate by or under any of the provisions of Articles 7 and 9 of the Principal Order.

11. All King's Regulations made or to be made under Articles 32 or 33 of the Principal Order, or under Article 3 of the Somaliland Order in Council, 1903, shall, unless a contrary intention appears, extend to natives, and may in relation to natives comprise such special provisions, modifications, and penalties as the Commissioner may think fit.

12. In all cases, civil and criminal, to which natives are parties, every Court (a) shall be guided by native law, so far as it is applicable and is not repugnant to justice and morality, or inconsistent with any Order in Council or King's Regulations, or any regulation or rule made under any Order in Council or King's Regulations; and (b) shall decide all such cases according to substantial justice, without excessive regard to technicalities of procedure and without undue delay.

13. The production of a grant of probate or of letters of administration shall, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary contained in any Indian Act or Law in force in the Protectorate or in the Principal Order, be necessary to establish the right to recover or receive any part of the estate or effects of any deceased person situate in the Protectorate.

14.—(1.) Article 3 (iii) of the Principal Order and the words "in the Protectorate" in Article 25 (a) of the Principal Order are hereby repealed.

(2.) In Article 26 of the Principal Order the words "in the Protectorate" shall follow the word "property," and shall not appear after the word "dies."

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Lansdowne, K.G., one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein.

R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 3.

[July 6, 1904.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, June 27, 1904.

Gentlemen,

Chamberlain and Flemmer. Leases of land in East Africa.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit herewith a copy of a despatch from Sir C. Eliot, late His Majesty's Commissioner for the East Africa Protectorate, containing copies of correspondence which passed between Messrs. R. Chamberlain and A. S. Flemmer and himself with regard to the leases of certain areas in the East Africa Protectorate.

I am also to inclose a Memorandum on this correspondence by the Assistant Legal Adviser to this Department, in which he states his opinion that (1) there is a binding Agreement for the breach of which Messrs. Chamberlain and Flemmer could recover damages, should an action be brought in the matter; (2) that the provisions in the Agreements for the conversion of the leaseholds into freeholds are invalid; and (3) that an action against the Commissioner for specific performance of the Agreement would probably fail.

I am to state, for your information, that it was the entering into these arrangements with Messrs. Chamberlain and Flemmer that originally led to Sir C. Eliot's tendering his resignation of his post of Commissioner. The Secretary of State had issued instructions that no further large grants of land were to be made. The land referred to in these Agreements is, moreover, situated within an area which his Lordship, as at present advised, considers it desirable should be reserved for the Masai. These points are fully dealt with in despatches addressed by the Secretary of State to Sir C. Eliot on the 3rd March and 8th March last, of which copies are attached to this letter.

1904

Whether it may be possible eventually to sanction the leases of these particular areas must depend on reports which will be made by the new Commissioner on arrival at his post, but, in view of the attention that may be aroused by the incident, and of the probability that Messrs. Chamberlain and Flemmer may institute legal proceedings in the High Court at Mombasa, Lord Lansdowne is anxious that the legal position should be clearly ascertained, and would therefore be glad to learn whether you concur in the conclusions come to by Mr. Hurst in his Memorandum.

His Lordship would, at the same time, be glad to receive any observations of a more general character that you may desire to offer.

Copies of the East Africa Crown Lands Ordinance No. 21 of 1902, "The East Africa Order in Council, 1902," and the Indian Code of Civil Procedure are inclosed for convenience of reference.

I am to add that Sir D. Stewart, who has been selected to succeed Sir C. Eliot, leaves for his post early in July, and Lord Lansdowne would therefore be glad to receive your Report at as early a date as may be convenient.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CLEMENT Ll. HILL.

List of Papers.

(A.)	To Sir C. Eliot	(No. 127 A.)	March 3, 1904.
(B.)	Ditto	(No. 137.)	„ 8, „
(C.)	Sir C. Eliot	(No. 359)	May 22, „
(D.)	Memorandum, Mr. Hurst		June 22, „
(E.)	East Africa Crown Lands Ordinance, 1902 [Confidential 7786]		Sept. 27, 1902.
(F.)	East Africa Order in Council, 1902 [7759*]		August 11, „
(G.)	Anglo-Indian Codes, vol. ii. Edited by Mr. Whitley Stokes, 1888.

Report.

In our opinion there is a good defence to any proceedings upon this Agreement.

Having regard to the covenant for the expenditure of 5,000*l.*, we think that the clause giving an option of purchase is an essential part of the Agreement, and we think that the consent of the Secretary of State is not, in the true construction of the clause, a condition of the option to purchase.

This construction is fortified by the correspondence, in which Messrs. Chamberlain and Flemmer treat the right to purchase as of the essence of the transaction.

The Commissioner had no authority to enter into any Agreement of sale except up to 1,000 acres, and as the Agreement is one for a lease, with an option of purchase of 10,000 acres, we think that any proceedings upon it may be successfully resisted upon the ground that his action was ultra vires.

The case is one which should, if possible, be settled, as the difficulty is due to the action of the Commissioner. If Messrs. Chamberlain and Flemmer refuse reasonable terms any proceedings by them should be resisted, as advised in Mr. Hurst's Minute.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 6, 1904.

Annex.

Minute by Mr. Hurst on Sir C. Eliot's No. 359 of May 22, 1904.

I THINK the letter No. 9 of the 6th January, 1904, from the land officer, inclosing a draft Agreement, with the request that it may be signed and returned, coupled with the letter No. 12 of the 2nd February, from Flemmer, and similar letters to and from Chamberlain, constitute Agreements binding on the Protectorate Administration to lease the lands therein referred to.

The subsequent suggestions by these gentlemen (see No. 12), that the terms of the leases themselves should differ in certain respects from the Agreements, appear to me only to mean that, though content with the leases stipulated for in the Agreements, if they can get nothing better, yet they would prefer certain variations; the suggestions do not seem to me to be conditions on which their acceptance of the leases was based.

The clause providing for the conversion into freehold appears to me to be invalid: it is in its essence an Agreement for the sale of more than 1,000 acres; such a sale requires the approval of the Secretary of State, and without such approval an Agreement for sale is not complete. The concluding words of section 4 of "The Crown Lands Ordinance, 1902," "nothing herein shall invalidate any sale," refer in my opinion to completed sales, and do not affect mere Agreements to sell, the object being to prevent the title to lands, which were originally Crown lands, being disquieted by the necessity of proving the assent of the Secretary of State to the original sale. This does not, however, affect the validity of the Agreement to lease the land for ninety-nine years.

Then comes the question of enforcing the Agreement. I think each of these gentlemen is entitled to bring an action in the High Court at Mombasa.

If they sue for damages, I think they would obtain them. What the measure of damages would be I cannot say at present, as it is possible that on the faith of the Agreements these gentlemen may have taken steps in South Africa which would increase the amount recoverable, but I do not think it is very likely that the damages would be heavy.

The more important question is whether they would be entitled to Decrees for specific performance of the contracts to grant the leases. On the whole, I think actions for this purpose would fail; various defences might be raised by the Crown, and I think they would prevail. A Decree for specific performance would have to direct the Commissioner to execute a lease, and the Court cannot exercise jurisdiction over the Commissioner (see Article 23 (1) of "The East African Order in Council, 1902"), as such a Decree can only be enforced by the imprisonment or attachment of the property of the defaulting party (see section 260 of the India Code of Criminal Procedure). It is not usual for Courts to make Decrees for specific performance which they cannot enforce. Section 261 of the Code does not apply, as leases are not conveyances, see section 3 of the Indian Stamp Act.

Furthermore, these gentlemen have insisted so strongly that the right to convert into freehold is an essential part of their applications (see paragraph 2 of letter 24 in Print) that I do not think they would consider a lease pure and simple, excluding the conversion provisions, worth having.

As to what action should be taken, I think the position of Chamberlain and Flemmer is strong enough to make it worth while to lay the facts fully before them, viz.: That the Agreements were made by the ex-Commissioner in direct contravention of the Secretary of State's instructions, and against the advice of the experienced officials; that the ground of the Secretary of State's action is that this land cannot be disposed of without the risk of a rising of the Masai, and that its reservation is as much in the interests of the white settlers as of the natives; and then to offer them each 32,000 acres of land elsewhere, at a spot to be agreed on with the new Commissioner. It is desirable to dispose once and for all of the Bowker delusion (see Print, p. 14). If the offer is declined, then I should recommend that the parties be left to their legal remedies; if a decision against the Crown is given at Mombasa, there should be an appeal to Zanzibar, and, if necessary, to the Privy Council. If the case is fought at all, it should be fought hard. If an offer of land elsewhere is made, it should be done in a way that will not amount to an admission of liability in the present case.

C. J. B. H.

June 22, 1904.

No. 3A. [Colonial Office.]

[August 15, 1904.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, August 15, 1904.

Sir,

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. F. Graham's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by you to transmit to us a letter received by your Department from the Home Office (with its Inclosure), relating to a request made on behalf of a Mr. van Diggelen that his children might be considered British subjects. Nationality of children of Transvaal burgher, now a British subject.

That it was presumed that, on the annexation of the Transvaal, Mr. van Diggelen, who was a burgher of the late South African Republic, became a British subject, and that Mr. Graham was to refer us in that connection to our Report of the 17th May, 1900.

That Mr. van Diggelen's children, however, were apparently not with their father at the time of the annexation of the Transvaal, and were not then inhabitants of the conquered country, and that Mr. Graham was, therefore, to request us to take the matter into our consideration, and to report whether the children of Mr. van Diggelen were to be considered as British subjects.

1904

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

That if, as is stated in Messrs. Waterlow's letter of the 12th ultimo, the children of Mr. van Diggelen became burghers of the South African Republic, we are of opinion that, under the circumstances stated, they are now British subjects.

We are, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

CHINA.

No. 4.

[April 6, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Russo-Japanese War.
—
Carriage of flour to Newchwang by Chinese Government Railway.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, March 29, 1904.

WITH reference to my letter of the 17th instant, relating to the shipment of contraband from China in Chinese or British vessels, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit, for your consideration, a telegram* which his Lordship has received from His Majesty's Minister at Peking, inquiring whether the transport to Newchwang of 190 tons of flour on behalf of a British firm by a Chinese Government railway would be a breach of neutrality on the part of the Chinese Government, assuming that the flour was intended for the consumption of the Russian naval or military forces.

The question thus raised would appear to be one not decided by authority or precedent, but Lord Lansdowne inclines to the view that the Chinese Government would incur no responsibility if the railway were owned by a commercial Company of the ordinary character, and that, even assuming the circumstances attending the sale by the consigners and the carriage by the Company of the flour to constitute trade in contraband, the transaction would, nevertheless, be legitimate commercially although undertaken by the consigners and by the Company respectively at the risk of seizure of the flour and of the rolling-stock which was conveying it by the Japanese forces, if the latter should be able to intercept the contraband goods in transit.

The generally accepted rules with regard to contraband do not apply directly to trade by land, since the belligerent Power can only interfere with such trade either (a) in the actual theatre of war, or (b) within its own territories, and in either case it can, should it so desire, prohibit trading altogether. Lord Lansdowne, however, presumes that he is right in thinking that, as an admitted principle of international law, a neutral State must not itself, during the continuance of hostilities between two Powers, sell or supply contraband articles to one of the belligerents.

The point that arises in this case is, whether conveyance of such articles by a Government railway would be contrary to international law.

Questions of an analogous nature are likely to occur at some future time on the continent of Europe, where many of the railways are already State-owned, and where the tendency is for them to become so more and more. For example, in the event of hostilities breaking out between Russia and Germany, the case might occur of the transport of contraband over two lines of railway between Paris and Berlin, (a) owned by the State, and (b) by a private Company. It seems to his Lordship that if the principle of international law above referred to be carried to its logical conclusion, it would be the duty of the French Government to prohibit the transport of contraband over (a), while, as regards (b), its transport would continue unchecked.

On the other hand, it may be argued that, if a State descends into the commercial arena for the purpose of conducting a commercial business, it does not thereby divest itself of its ordinary obligations and duties to other States, and that it must so conduct its commercial enterprise as not to give cause for offence on the part of a State with which it is at peace.

It may further be urged that the State carries on the business of a Railway Company cum privilegio et cum onere, and that it cannot, merely because it is carrying on such business, commit, or be party or privy to, acts which, under the general rules of neutrality, would be considered as offences against a friendly State; nor would such fact be likely to afford satisfactory explanation or excuse.

I am to request that you will take the matter into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether the neutrality of the Chinese Government may be considered to be involved by its permitting the the transport of flour over a Chinese State railway (assuming that such flour is intended for the consumption of the Russian naval or military forces), i.e., whether the share of the Chinese Government in the transaction—the forwarding of the goods—is sufficient to warrant the accusation that China, as a State, is assisting in the supply of provisions to the Russian Army.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CHARLES HARDINGE.

Report.

We answer this question in the negative. It is, in our opinion, no infraction of the duty of neutrality if, in the ordinary course of traffic, goods are conveyed by a State railway, although these goods are intended for the forces of a belligerent. It is clear that there would be no infraction of neutrality if the railway belonged to a Company, and when a State works a railway it does not cease to act as a neutral by permitting the use of the railway in the ordinary course. No preference must be given to one belligerent over the other, and special facilities out of the ordinary course would raise different considerations.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
April 6, 1904.

No. 5.

[April 15 and 27, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Russo-Japanese War.
—
Chinese Customs prohibition of export of contraband to belligerents.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, March 17, 1904.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit, for your consideration, the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to an official notification made by the Chinese Government to His Majesty's Minister at Peking to the effect that the Chinese Imperial Maritime Customs have been instructed to refuse permission to ship to either belligerent country during the continuance of the present hostilities between Russia and Japan, whether in Chinese or foreign vessels, articles declared contraband by the Russian Government.

It will be seen from the telegram from Sir E. Satow (Paper A), that the order only applies in terms to shipments by sea; but Lord Lansdowne apprehends that it may be meant to be applied also to export over the land frontier, which has, his Lordship understands, also been carried on to a considerable extent.

---

* Sir E. Satow, No. 55, Telegraphic, February 20, 1904 (and Minutes thereon).

1904

The right of the Chinese Government to impose her own views of neutrality upon British subjects and British vessels in China, where they carry on trade under extra-territorial privileges, appears to his Lordship to raise a somewhat novel question, on which little or no authority exists.

The then Law Officers of the Crown, in two Reports dated respectively the 5th November, 1884, and the 17th August, 1885 (Papers B and C), expressed the view (a) that Great Britain, as a belligerent Power, could not utilize her Treaty rights in Japan in such a way as to compromise the latter's neutrality, and (b) that Great Britain, as a neutral Power, must submit to and enforce on her own subjects prohibitions issued by China as a belligerent with regard to the sale of contraband to her opponent.

In the present case, however, both Great Britain and China are neutral Powers, and, consequently, the case must apparently be decided on first principles.

"Few rules of international law," says Wheaton (p. 653, 3rd English edition (Boyd), 1889), "are so certain as that a neutral Government cannot be made responsible as for a breach of neutrality because its subjects carry on a contraband trade," and similar language is held by other recognized authorities on the subject.

Applying this rule, it would accordingly seem clear, therefore, that neither Great Britain nor China can be involved in international difficulties through the export of contraband from China by British subjects. As between Great Britain and China the extra-territorial privileges enjoyed by British subjects in China owe their origin and existence to a delegation of sovereignty by China to Great Britain; and it cannot be that China's responsibility for the proceedings of British subjects within her territory is greater than is her responsibility for the acts of her own subjects.

However much the Treaty rights of Great Britain in China must be held to be impliedly limited by the rights and duties of China as a belligerent or as a neutral, they cannot be affected by a matter which does not involve China's duty as a neutral at all.

The Treaty stipulations between this country and China and between other Powers and China are summarized in the annexed Memorandum (Paper D). It will be observed that Article XI of the Treaty of Tien-tsin of the 26th June, 1858, after enumerating a list of Treaty ports, goes on to say:—

"They" (British subjects) "are permitted to carry on trade with whomsoever they please, and to proceed to and fro at pleasure with their vessels and merchandize."

Again, in the Rules of Trade of the 8th November, 1858, drawn up under Article XXVI of the above Treaty, Rule 3 (which is headed "Contraband of War"), provides for a prohibition of a trade in munitions and implements of war, and salt, and Rule 5 (3) prohibits the export of grain to a foreign port.

The position, therefore, would appear to be that China has granted freedom of trade; but that, by agreement between the two Powers, the import or export of certain particular articles is prohibited. The latter arrangement would, however, seem to have no relation to a state of war, and would, therefore, not be affected by the present hostilities between Russia and Japan. Moreover, such hostilities do not seem to afford any justification for the order of the Chinese Government, in so far as the result of that order is to restrict the trading facilities of British subjects.

I have the honour to request that, in taking these papers into your consideration, you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion (1) whether, in view of the foregoing arguments and considerations, His Majesty's Government would be justified in protesting against the terms of this notification on the ground that it goes beyond the ordinarily accepted and recognized doctrines on the point, and constitutes an unreasonable limitation on the freedom of trade and commerce guaranteed to British subjects under the Treaties or on any other, and, if so, what, grounds, and (2) if so, as to the terms in which such a protest may most advantageously be framed.

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may be good enough to offer on the papers submitted to you herewith.

I have, &c.
(Signed) CHARLES HARDINGE.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Sir E. Satow .. .. (And Minutes.)	(No. 80. Telegraphic.)	March	10, 1904.
(B.)	Law Officers' Report (France)		November	5, 1884.
(C.)	Ditto (Russia)		August	17, 1885.
(D.)	Memorandum by Mr. Oakes		March	12, 1904.
(E.)	(Annex) Sir H. Parkes	(No. 96)	March	10, 1885.
(F.)	Sir E. Satow	(No. 20)	January	20, 1904.
(G.)	Ditto	(Telegraphic)	April	7, ,,
(H.)	Ditto	(No. 84)	March	10, ,,

Report.

That in our opinion the rights by Treaty of British traders in China are subject to the right of China to enforce neutrality in case of war between other Powers. No complaint can be made of any interference with trade, so far as such interference is reasonably necessary to secure the observance of neutrality in China.

But the Edict in the present case seems to go far beyond anything that is required for this purpose by the law of nations. There is no general obligation on the part of a neutral Power to prevent the export of contraband of war: it may be exported subject to the risk of capture and condemnation.

The instructions to the Maritime Customs in forbidding entirely the export of all articles which Russia has declared to be contraband appear to us unnecessarily to interfere with the carrying on of trade and to go beyond what China is bound to do as a neutral, according to the principles above stated.

We would suggest that representations may be properly made to the Chinese Government, based on the considerations mentioned above, and that an attempt should be made to procure a modification of the Edict.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
April 15, 1904.

Report.

We have taken this telegram* into our consideration, and do not think it necessitates any addition to our Report of the 15th instant, to which we beg to refer your Lordship.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
April 27, 1904.

No. 6.

[June 15, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, May 6, 1904.

China and Corea Consular and Marriage Fees Order in Council

WITH reference to the letter from this Office of the 18th August, 1903, I have the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the accompanying draft of the new China and Corea (Shipping Registry) Order in Council, which has been amended by the conversion of the fees from dollar currency to sterling.†

---

* Sir E. Satow, No. 96, Telegraphic, April 7, 1904.

† See Law Officers' Report of June 22, 1904.

1904

I am also to submit a draft of the new China and Corea (Consular and Marriage Fees) Order in Council, and I am to state that Lord Lansdowne will be obliged if you will take these draft Orders into your consideration and will favour him with your opinion as to whether their terms are fit and proper for submission to the King in Council for His Majesty's approval.

It is particularly desired that the Consular and Marriage Fees Order in Council should come into force in China and Corea on the 1st October next, and, in these circumstances, Lord Lansdowne would be greatly obliged if you could furnish him with your Report at as early a date as possible.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

Report.

This draft Order in Council as initialled by us may, in our opinion, properly be submitted for the approval of His Majesty in Council.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 15, 1904.

Annex.

Draft China and Corea (Consular and Marriage Fees) Order in Council, 1904.

WHEREAS by "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891," His Majesty the King is authorized by Order in Council to fix the fees to be taken in respect of any matter or thing done by a Consular officer in the execution of his office, and to vary such fees by way of increase or decrease, and to abolish fees and to create new fees;

And whereas by "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," and by "The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892," made in pursuance of that Act, it is provided that certain things may or shall be done on payment of the proper fee, and that Act further provides that the proper fee shall be such fee as may for the time being be fixed under the first recited Act, and that the fee so fixed, as respects a Consul, shall be the fee which shall be taken by any marriage officer;

And whereas under "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," His Majesty in Council has power to make Orders in Council, and also to revoke or vary Orders in Council made, or deemed to have been made, in pursuance of that Act;

And whereas it is expedient that the Table of fees fixed by "The China and Corea (Consular and Marriage Fees) Order in Council, 1900," should, in certain respects, be amended, and that the whole of the fees to be taken by Consular officers and marriage officers in China and Corea should be fixed in British currency by an Order in Council made under the provisions of "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891."

Now, therefore, in pursuance of the before-mentioned Acts, it is hereby ordered by His Majesty, by and with the advice of His Privy Council, as follows:—

1. This Order may be cited as "The China and Corea (Consular and Marriage Fees) Order in Council, 1904."
2. The several fees set forth in the Tables annexed to this Order are hereby established, and the said Tables and notes thereto shall be construed as part of this Order.
3. This Order shall come into operation on the 1st day of October, 1904, or at such later date as, in the case of any particular Consular jurisdiction or part thereof, a Secretary of State, by any general or particular instructions, may from time to time direct.
4. On and after the day when this Order comes into operation in any place to which this Order applies, "The China and Corea (Consular and Marriage Fees) Order in Council, 1900," shall be repealed as to that place without prejudice to any right or liability existing at the commencement of this Order in that place.
5. In this Order the expression "Consular jurisdiction" means the district, place or places for which a Consular officer acts.
6. This Order shall extend to all places in China and Corea.

And the Most Honourable the Marquess of Lansdowne, K.G., one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein accordingly.

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

SCHEDULE.

TABLES OF CONSULAR AND MARRIAGE FEES.

To be taken in China and Corea, in pursuance of "The Consular Salaries and Fees Act, 1891," "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," "The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892," "The China and Corea (Consular and Marriage Fees) Order in Council, 1904," and "The China and Corea (Shipping Registry) Order in Council, 1904."

PART I.

Fees to be taken in respect of Matters in which the Interposition of a Consular Officer is required by Law.

MATTER IN RESPECT OF WHICH THE FEE IS TO BE TAKEN.

Merchant Shipping.

	£	s.	d.
1. For every declaration taken or recorded under the Merchant Shipping Acts, with a view to the registry, transfer, and transmission of ships, interests in ships, or mortgages on ships	0	5	0
2. For indorsing a Memorandum of change of master upon the certificate of registry, and initialling his signature on agreement with crew, if required	0	4	0
3. For granting a provisional certificate of registry (this fee to be exclusive of fees on declarations) ...	1	0	0
4. For recording a mortgage of a ship, or shares in a ship, made under a certificate of mortgage ...	1	0	0
5. For recording the transfer of a mortgage of a ship, or shares in a ship, made under a certificate of mortgage...	1	0	0
6. For recording the discharge of a mortgage of a ship, or shares in a ship, made under a certificate of mortgage...	1	0	0
7. For every sale of a ship, or shares in a ship, made before a Consular officer under a certificate of sale	1	0	0
8. For inspection of the register book of transactions in ships, kept in pursuance of the Merchant Shipping Acts	0	1	0
9. For certified copy of extract from register book of transactions in ships	0	2	6
9 A. Certificate of registry	1	10	0
9 B. Certificate of sale or mortgage	0	4	0
9 C. Indorsing ownership on certificate of registry	0	4	0
9 D. Transfer of registry to another port...	0	4	0
9 E. Pass for ship	0	10	0
9 F. Alteration in register of name, rig, or tonnage	0	4	0
9 G. For measurement of tonnage as under:—
For ships of 15 tons, and under 500 tons, gross tonnage	1	10	0
,, 500 ,, 1,000 ,, ...	2	5	0
,, 1,000 ,, 2,000 ,, ...	2	14	0
,, 2,000 ,, 3,000 ,, ...	3	3	0
,, 3,000 ,, 4,000 ,, ...	3	12	0
,, 4,000 ,, 5,000 ,, ...	4	0	0
,, 5,000 ,, and upwards ,, ...	4	10	0
9 H. For the inspection of the berthing or sleeping accommodation of the crew:—
For each visit to the ship...	0	10	0
Provided as follows:—
(a.) The aggregate amount of the fees for any such inspection shall not exceed 1*l.* whatever be the number of separate visits.
(b.) When the accommodation is inspected at the same time with the measurement of the tonnage, no separate fee shall be charged for the inspection.
For the inspection of light and fog signals:—
For each visit made to the ship on the application of the owner, and for each visit made where the lights or fittings are found defective	0	10	0
Provided that the aggregate amount of fees for any such inspection shall not exceed 1*l.* whatever be the number of separate visits.
For the inspection of the marking of a ship:—
For each visit made to the ship on the application of the owner, and for each visit made where the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Acts with respect thereto have not been complied with	0	5	0
Provided as follows:—
(a.) The aggregate amount of the fees for any such inspection shall not exceed 10s. whatever be the number of separate visits.
(b.) When the marking of a ship is inspected at the same time with the inspection of light and fog signals, no separate fee shall be charged for the inspection.

[N.B.—Fees 1 to 9 H are to be taken under the provisions of "The China and Corea (Shipping Registry) Order in Council, 1904."]

1904

		£	s.	d.
10.	For every seaman engaged before a Consular officer	0	2	0
11.	For every alteration in agreements with seamen made before a Consular officer	0	2	0
12.	For every seaman discharged or left behind with the sanction of the Consular officer	0	2	0
13.	For every desertion certified by a Consular officer	0	2	0
14.	For attesting a seaman's will (see No. 100)	0	2	0
15.	For examination of provisions or water, to be paid by the party who proves to be in default, in addition to cost of survey	0	10	0
16.	For every salvage bond made in pursuance of section 560 (1) of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," to be paid by the master or owner of the property salved	2	0	0
17.	For making indorsement on ship's papers, as required by section 257 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894" ... ... (To include the fee for inspection of ship's papers. See No. 43.)	0	2	6

[N.B.—A payment of 5*l*. shall free the ship from the payment of Fees Nos. 17 and 37 at every port in China during the following three months.]

Marriage Fees to be taken by Marriage Officers acting under "The Foreign Marriage Act, 1892," and "The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892."

		£	s.	d.
18.	For receiving notice of an intended marriage	0	10	0
19.	For receiving notice of a caveat	1	0	0
20.	For every marriage solemnized by or in the presence of a Marriage officer, and registered by him ...	0	10	0
21.	For certificate by Marriage officer of notice having been given and posted up (Article 6 of "The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892")	0	5	0
22.	For attendance by Consular officer at a marriage solemnized in accordance with the local law, and his registration of the marriage (see Article 8 of "The Foreign Marriages Order in Council, 1892")	1	0	0

PART II.

Fees to be taken in respect of Matters in which the Interposition of a Consular Officer is to be given when required by the Parties interested.

MATTER IN RESPECT OF WHICH THE FEE IS TO BE TAKEN.

		£	s.	d.
23.	For noting a marine protest and furnishing one certified copy if required	0	7	6
24.	For filing a request for survey and issuing order of survey	0	10	0
25.	For receiving report of survey, filing original in archives, if not exceeding 200 words, and furnishing, if required, one certified copy of request, order, and report of survey	1	0	0
26.	For extending marine protest, if not exceeding 200 words, filing original, and furnishing one certified copy if required. This to be exclusive of fee for oaths or declarations (see No. 48), or for drawing, if required, the body of the protest (see No. 94)	1	0	0
27.	For any other protest, if not exceeding 200 words, filing original, and furnishing one certified copy if required. This to be exclusive of fee for drawing, if required, the body of the protest (see No. 94)	1	0	0
28.	If the protest or report of survey exceed 200 words, for every additional 100 words or fraction thereof	0	2	6
29.	For attesting average, bottomry, or arbitration bond, each copy (see No. 93)	0	5	0
30.	For preparing a fresh agreement with the crew of a British vessel on new Articles of Agreement being opened at a foreign port, and for furnishing the copy which the Merchant Shipping Acts require should be made accessible to the crew	0	10	0
31.	Bill of health	0	10	0
32.	Certifying to a foreign bill of health	0	10	0
33.	Certificate of origin of goods and filing copy	0	10	0
34.	Certificate of due landing of goods exported from a British port	0	10	0
35.	For application addressed to local authorities for arrest or imprisonment of a seaman, if granted pursuant to the request of the master	0	5	0
36.	Ditto, for release of a seaman	0	5	0
37.	For each certificate granted as to the number of the crew of a vessel, or as to any other matter required by local authorities for the clearance inwards and outwards of a vessel (see Nos. 17 and 38)	0	5	0

N.B.—A payment of 5*l*. shall free the ship from the payment of Fees Nos. 17 and 37 at every port in China during the following three months.

		£	s.	d.
38.	For drawing up, in form and language required by local authorities, a muster-roll, or detailed list, giving the names, &c., of each member of the crew of a vessel (to be charged in addition to No. 37)	0	2	6
39.	For affixing Consular signature, and seal if required, to a ship's manifest	0	10	0
40.	For affixing Consular seal or signature to any entry in the official log-book of a British vessel, if not required by the Merchant Shipping Acts	0	5	0
41.	For attesting the execution of a bill of sale of a ship, or shares in a ship	0	5	0
42.	For any document required from a Consular officer by foreign authorities as a preliminary to the engagement of a British seaman in a foreign vessel, including official seal and signature ...	0	1	0
43.	For inspecting ship's papers when their production is required to enable a Consular officer to perform any specific service on the ship's behalf	0	2	6

N.B.—This fee is not to be charged when Fee No. 17 is leviable or commuted.

		£	s.	d.
44.	For granting any certificate not otherwise provided for, if not exceeding 100 words	0	5	0
45.	If exceeding 100 words, for every additional 100 words, or fraction thereof	0	5	0
46.	For noting a bill of exchange	0	5	0
47.	For protest of a bill of exchange and copy	1	0	0
48.	For administering an oath, or receiving a declaration or affirmation without attestation of signature.	0	2	6
49.	For administering an oath, or receiving a declaration or affirmation with attestation of signature ...	0	5	0
50.	For each Consular signature attached to an exhibit referred to in an affidavit or declaration ...	0	2	6
51.	For each alteration or interlineation initialled by a Consular officer in any document not prepared by him	0	0	6
52.	For each signature to a transfer of shares or stock attested by a Consular officer	0	2	0
53.	For each signature to a transfer of shares or stock attested by a Consular officer when executed in the presence of one or more witnesses besides the Consular officer	0	5	0
54.	For each execution of a power of attorney attested by a Consular officer (see No. 102)	0	5	0

N.B.—When more than four persons execute a power at the same time, a fee of 1*l*. only is to be charged.

		£	s.	d.
55.	For attesting the execution of a will of any person not being a British seaman (see Nos. 14 and 100).	0	10	0
56.	For each execution of a deed, bond, or conveyance under seal, attested by a Consular officer ... N.B.—When more than four persons execute an instrument at the same time, a fee of 1*l*. 10*s*. only is to be charged.	0	7	6
57.	For each signature to an application for a patent attested by a Consular officer	0	5	0
58.	For attaching Consular signature, and seal if required, to quarterly or monthly declarations for Government pay, half-pay, or pension	0	1	0
59.	For attaching Consular signature to any other declaration of existence	0	2	6
60.	Ditto, if drawn up by a Consular officer	0	5	0
61.	For certificate of a person's identity	0	10	0
62.	For attesting the signature of a foreign authority	0	5	0
63.	For each signature attested by a Consular officer in any document not otherwise provided for ...	0	5	0

N.B.—No fee is to be charged for attesting a signature to any document required for the deposit or withdrawal of money in or from the Post Office Savings Bank.

		£	s.	d.
64.	For registration of a birth or death (except the death of a seaman)	0	2	6
65.	For any registration not otherwise provided for	0	2	6
66.	For issue of certificate of British registration when such registration is not compulsory under Order in Council	0	2	6
67.	For each search in the register books of births, marriages, or deaths kept at the Consulate ...	0	1	0
68.	For furnishing a certified copy of an entry in register books of births, marriages, or deaths (see No. 67)	0	2	6
69.	For certifying to a copy of any document, or part of a document, if not exceeding 100 words ...	0	5	0
70.	If exceeding 100 words, for every additional 100 words, or fraction thereof	0	1	0

N.B.—An additional fee is to be charged when the copy is made by the Consular officer (see No. 97)

		£	s.	d.
71.	Passport	0	5	0
72.	Visa of a passport	0	2	0
73.	For issue of certificate of nationality	0	2	6
74.	Request to local authorities for a passport, pass, or visa	0	2	0
75.	For transit pass	0	3	0
76.	Opening the will of a British subject, not being a seaman, including Consular signature to minute of proceedings	1	0	0
77.	For the administration and distribution, or for either administration, or distribution, of the property situate in the country of the Consular officer's residence, of a British subject, not being a seaman, dying intestate, or if not intestate, when undertaken in the absence of legally competent representatives of the deceased	2½ per cent. on gross value.
78.	For uniting documents and attaching Consular seal to the fastening	0	2	6
79.	For directing search for, or obtaining from Public Record Office or elsewhere, extracts from local registers, or copies of wills, deeds, or other matters, in addition to expenses incurred and any fees for attestation	0	5	0
80.	For affixing Consular signature, and seal if required, to any document not otherwise provided for by this Table	0	5	0

N.B.—No charge is to be made for an order or letter sending a seaman to hospital.

		£	s.	d.
81.	For each Consular seal affixed to a document, packet, or article, when no signature is required ...	0	2	6
81 A.	For new title-deeds of land, including registration, ½ per cent. on value of the property, with a minimum fee of 1*l*. 10*s*. and a maximum of 10*l*.
81 B.	For notifying authorities loss of owner's copy of title-deed, and requesting issue of copy to replace it	1	0	0
81 C.	For transfer of land, ¼ per cent. on value of the property, with a minimum fee of 1*l*. 10*s*. and a maximum of 10*l*.
81 D.	For cancelment of title-deeds	1	0	0
81 E.	For registration of title-deeds issued by local authorities	1	0	0
81 F.	For registration or discharge of mortgage	1	0	0
81 G.	For registration of foreclosure of mortgage	2	0	0
81 H.	For any entry, not otherwise provided for, made in land register at the request of the parties interested	0	6	0
81 I.	For reference to land, mortgage, or other registers (except those under Nos. 8 and 67)	0	6	0

1904

PART III.

Fees to be taken for certain Attendances, in addition to any other Fee chargeable under the present Table, and to Travelling and other Expenses (see Notes 3 and 4).

ATTENDANCE IN RESPECT OF WHICH THE FEE IS TO BE TAKEN.

		£	s.	d.
82.	At a shipwreck, or for the purpose of assisting a ship in distress, per day	2	0	0
83.	At a shipwreck, at request of parties interested, to assist or advise as to salvage, per day ...	3	0	0
84.	At request of parties interested, or of local authorities, at the affixing or removing of seals on property of deceased persons, if absent less than two hours	1	0	0
85.	Ditto, ditto, for each additional hour, or fraction thereof, 10s., with a maximum per day of ...	4	0	0
86.	At request of parties interested, or of local authorities, at a valuation, if absent less than two hours	1	0	0
87.	Ditto, ditto, for each additional hour, or fraction thereof, 10s., with a maximum per day of ...	4	0	0
88.	At request of parties interested, or of local authorities, at a sale, if absent less than two hours ...	2	0	0
89.	Ditto, ditto, for each additional hour, or fraction thereof, 10s., with a maximum per day of ...	4	0	0
90.	At request of parties interested, or of local authorities, for the transaction elsewhere than at the Consular Office of any of the duties for which a fee is provided in the Table of Consular Fees, for each hour, or fraction thereof, 10s., with a maximum per day of	4	0	0
90 A.	At request of parties interested, or of local authorities, at a measurement of land, for each hour, or fraction thereof, 10s., with a minimum of	1	0	0
91.	At the request of parties interested for the transaction of any duty for which a fee is leviable under this Order, whether at the Consular Office or at the Consular officer's residence, in addition to such fee, for each half-hour, or fraction thereof, if in the day-time, that is to say, between the hours of 6 A.M. and 9 P.M., but not during the customary business hours of the place	0	5	0

PART IV.

Fees to be taken in respect of certain other Services which may be rendered by a Consular Officer, at his discretion, at the request of Parties interested.

SERVICE IN RESPECT OF WHICH THE FEE IS TO BE TAKEN.

		£	s.	d.
92.	For the transaction of any duty for which a fee is leviable under this Order, whether at the Consular Office or at the Consular officer's residence, in addition to such fee, for each half-hour, or fraction thereof, if in the night-time, that is to say, between the hours of 9 P.M. and 6 A.M. ...	0	10	0
93.	For preparing average, bottomry, or arbitration bond (see No. 29)	1	0	0
94.	For drawing a declaration or other document, or the body of a protest, or for taking down in writing verbal declarations or depositions of persons made before a Consular officer, or for reducing into writing agreements made before him by contracting parties, exclusive of fees for attestation, &c. (see Part II), if not exceeding 100 words	0	5	0
95.	If exceeding that number, for each subsequent 100 words, or fraction thereof	0	2	6
96.	For assisting in drawing up petitions, applications, or other documents not specified, each ...	0	5	0
97.	For making a copy of a document, if not exceeding 100 words, exclusive of fee for certificate (see No. 69)	0	1	6
98.	If exceeding that number, for every subsequent 100 words, or fraction thereof	0	1	0

N.B.—If the copy is in any foreign language, double the above fees are to be charged.

		£	s.	d.
99.	For making or verifying a translation of a document in any European language, for every 100 words, or fraction thereof, exclusive of fee for certificate (see No. 44)	0	5	0
99 A.	For making or verifying a translation of a document in the Chinese, Corean, or other Oriental language, for first 100 characters...	2	10	0
99 B.	For making or verifying a translation of a document in the Chinese, Corean, or other Oriental language, for every subsequent 100 characters, or fraction thereof	0	15	0
100.	For drawing a will, if not exceeding 200 words (see Nos. 14 and 55)	1	0	0
101.	If exceeding that number, for every subsequent 100 words, or fraction thereof	0	5	0
102.	For drawing a power of attorney (see No. 54)	0	10	0
103.	In cases where one or more attesting witnesses, besides a Consular officer, are required, for each witness supplied by him at the request of the parties interested	0	2	6
104.	Attendance out of Consular Office, at the request, and on behalf, of private persons, for the transaction of business which a Consular officer is permitted, but is not bound, to undertake under the Consular Regulations, for each hour, or fraction thereof, 10s., with a maximum per day of (see Notes 3 and 4 and Form A)	4	0	0
105.	In cases where a Consular officer acts as Arbitrator, provided the parties interested declare in writing in the reference to arbitration that they are aware of the nature and rate of the fee chargeable for such service, and agree to pay the same, a commission on the value of the property or amount in dispute of 2½ per cent., with a minimum of	2	0	0

N.B.—The value of the property or amount in dispute must be ascertained and agreed by the parties to the arbitration, and stated in the reference to arbitration.

NOTES.

1. If a Consular officer should be named Commissioner to examine witnesses under a Commission issued by a British Court of Justice he is allowed to act as such, charging and retaining the customary fees for so doing. A Consular officer should, however, before undertaking the office, come to an arrangement with the parties at whose instance the Commission is being issued as to the exact scale of fees to be charged. (See Foreign Office Circular of the 1st February, 1894.)

2. No fee is to be charged for drafting or receiving depositions, &c., taken ex officio under the Merchant Shipping Acts, except in cases specially provided for.

3. In cases of attendances (Parts III and IV), the fee per day is to cover a period not exceeding twelve hours.

4. In cases of attendances (Parts III and IV), if the Consular officer finds it necessary to be accompanied by a clerk, the fee will be increased by one-half, or, if a clerk only is sent, half the fees are to be charged.

5. The above fees, if not paid in British gold, are to be paid in China in Mexican dollars at the rate of exchange fixed periodically by the Treasury; in Corea, in Japanese currency, at the rate of 10 yen to the £ sterling.

FORM (A).

This is to certify that in consideration of having undertaken, at my request and on my behalf, to transact certain business which a Consular officer is permitted, but is not bound, to undertake under the Consular Regulations, I have agreed to pay him, on behalf of His Majesty's Government, therefor the fee in such case provided by "The China and Corea (Consular and Marriage Fees) Order in Council, 1904," section 104 of Table (viz., for each hour, or fraction thereof, of attendance, 10s., with a maximum per day of 4*l*.), in addition to any other fee properly chargeable under that Order in Council, and to travelling and other expenses.

Dated at , the day of , 19 .

No. 7.

[June 22, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

China and Corea Shipping Registry Order in Council.

Foreign Office, August 18, 1903.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the accompanying draft of the new China and Corea (Shipping Registry) Order in Council (which has been prepared by Mr. A. Gray) to repeal and re-enact the existing Orders, as the latter extend to Japan, where His Majesty no longer exercises jurisdiction under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act.

The provisions contained in this Order were not dealt with in the general Order because they are concerned with a distinct subject.

I have the honour to request that you will take this draft into your consideration, and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether its terms are fit and proper for submission to the King in Council for His Majesty's approval, or whether it requires any, and if so what, additions or amendments.

His Lordship would be glad to be furnished at the same time with any general observations which you may be good enough to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.

(Signed) CHARLES HARDINGE.

Report.

In our opinion the inclosed draft Order in Council, as altered and initialled by us, may properly be submitted to the King for His Majesty's approval.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 22, 1904.

1904

Annex.

China and Corea (Shipping Registry).

Draft Order in Council: 1904.

WHEREAS by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, and other lawful means, His Majesty the King has jurisdiction within the dominions of the Emperor of China and of the Emperor of Corea;

And whereas by section 88 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," it is enacted that where, in accordance with the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, His Majesty exercises jurisdiction within any port out of His Majesty's dominions, it shall be lawful for His Majesty by Order in Council to declare such port a port of registry, and by the same or any subsequent Order in Council, to declare the description of persons who shall be the Registrars of British ships at such foreign port of registry, and to make Regulations with respect to the registry of British ships thereat:

Now, therefore, His Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in this behalf by "The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890," or otherwise in His Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of his Privy Council to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

Shanghae to be a port of registry. 1. The port of Shanghae shall be a port of registry under the said Act, and the provisions of this Order shall have effect accordingly.

Registrar. 2. The Registrar at the said port shall be such one of the Consular officers at Shanghae as the Secretary of State appoints in writing.

Deputy Registrar. 3. His Majesty's Minister in China may from time to time, in case of the absence or intended absence from Shanghae, or in case of the illness of the Registrar, appoint by writing under his hand a fit person to be the deputy of the Registrar for the time therein mentioned; but every such appointment shall be revocable at pleasure by the Minister by writing under his hand.

The person so appointed shall, during the continuance of his appointment, have all the power and authority of the Registrar.

Seal. 4. The Registrar shall have and use a seal bearing such style and device as the Secretary of State shall from time to time direct.

Proof of signature. 5. Every signature or seal affixed to any instrument purporting to be the signature or the seal, as the case may be, of the Registrar, shall, for all purposes under this Order, without any proof thereof, be presumed to be genuine, and shall be taken as genuine until the contrary is proved.

Powers of Registrar. 6. The Registrar of shipping at Shanghae shall have the same powers as any Registrar of shipping appointed under "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894;" and for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of the said Act and of this Order, the said Registrar shall have the same powers as by the said Act are conferred for the purposes of registration and measurement on any officer of Customs or on any officer of the Board of Trade.

Certificate of mortgage or sale. 7. A certificate of mortgage or sale, granted in pursuance of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," by the Registrar at Shanghae, may contain powers to be exercised at any place situate beyond the port at Shanghae within the limits of this Order.

Transfer of ship between British subjects. 8. On the transfer of a ship from one British subject to another under a certificate of sale, at any port in Corea, or at any port in China other than Shanghae, the Consular officer of such port shall indorse an entry of the transfer on the certificates of registry and sale of the said ship, and should the purchaser be desirous of registering the said ship at Shanghae, the said Consular officer shall, if requested so to do by the purchaser or transferee or other duly authorized person, forward to the Registrar at Shanghae the bill of sale and the declaration of ownership, together with the aforesaid certificates and a certificate of any survey of the said ship that may be required for the purposes of registry anew under the Merchant Shipping Acts; and upon receiving the same, the said Registrar shall register the said ship anew, and shall either retain the new certificate of registry or forward the same to the Consular officer or to the Registrar of shipping at such port or place as such purchaser or transferee or authorized person shall require; and on such request the said certificate shall be forwarded by any Consular officer or Registrar, into whose hands the same may come, to any other Consular officer or Registrar, to be handed by him to the master of the said ship when the requirements of the Merchant Shipping Acts as to marking the said ship shall have been complied with.

Transfer to British subject by foreigner. 9. On the transfer of a foreign ship to a British subject at any port in Corea or at any port in China other than Shanghae, should the purchaser be desirous of registering the said ship at Shanghae, the said Consular officer of such port shall, if requested so to do by the purchaser or transferee or other duly authorized person, forward to the Registrar at Shanghae the bill of sale, the declaration of ownership, and a certificate of any survey of the said ship that may be required for the purposes of registry under the Merchant Shipping Acts; and upon receiving the same the said Registrar shall grant a certificate of registry for the said ship, and shall either retain the said certificate or forward the same to the Consular officer or to the Registrar of Shipping at such port or place as such purchaser or transferee or other authorized person shall require; and on such request the said certificate shall be forwarded by any Consular officer or Registrar, into whose hands the same may come, to any other Consular officer or Registrar, to be handed by him to the master of the said ship when the requirements of the Merchant Shipping Acts as to marking the said ship shall have been complied with.

Registry of ship provided with sailing letters. 10. Lorchas and other Chinese and Corean rigged ships, or other ships provided with sailing letters or documents of the nature of sailing letters granted by His Majesty's Ministers in China or Corea shall, on their first arrival at any port in Corea, or at any port in China other than Shanghae, where there is a surveyor, be surveyed, and the Consular officer of such port shall transmit to the Registrar at Shanghae the said sailing letter, and a certificate of any survey of the said ship that may be required for the purposes of registry under the Merchant Shipping Acts; and upon receiving the same the said Registrar shall grant a certificate of registry for the said ship, and shall either retain the said certificate or forward the same to the Consular officer or to the Registrar of Shipping at such port or place as the owner or other duly authorized person shall require; and on such request the said certificate shall be forwarded by any Consular officer or Registrar into whose hands the same may come to any other Consular officer or Registrar, to be handed to him by the master of the said ship, when the requirements of the Merchant Shipping Acts as to marking the said ship shall have been complied with.

Passes. 11. On any such transfers, whether from one British subject to another, or from a foreigner to a British subject, or on the first arrival of any ship provided with a sailing letter or other document as aforesaid, at any port in Corea, or at any port in China other than Shanghae, where there is a surveyor, the Consular officer of such port shall grant to the master of such ship, upon his application, a pass containing the particulars required by the First Schedule to this Order. The pass so granted shall, within the Chinese and Corean seas, including the waters of Hong Kong and of Wei-hai-Wei, possess the same force as a certificate of registry, until the expiration of four months, or until such earlier time as the new certificate of registry shall be delivered to the master of the said ship by a Consular or other duly authorized officer, or until notice of the cancellation of such pass has been given to the master of the said ship by the Registrar at Shanghae, but upon the expiration of such period, or upon such delivery, or upon receipt of such notice of cancellation, shall be void to all intents and purposes; and the said pass on becoming so void shall be at once delivered by the master of the said ship to a Consular or other duly authorized officer, and in default of delivery the said master shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 50*l.*, recoverable in any of His Majesty's Consular Courts in China or Corea.

Powers of Minister. 12. His Majesty's Minister in China shall, with regard to the performance of any act or thing relating to the registry of a ship registered at Shanghae, or of any interest therein, be considered in all respects as occupying the place of the Board of Trade and the Commissioners of Customs.

Appointment of surveyors. 13. His Majesty's Ministers in China and Corea respectively shall, at any port or place in China or Corea, as the case may be, have the same power to appoint fit and proper persons to be surveyors under the Merchant Shipping Acts as are possessed by the Board of Trade in the United Kingdom, and the persons appointed shall have the same powers as are conferred on the surveyors appointed as aforesaid by the Board of Trade.

Pass to unregistered ship to Shanghae. 14. In cases where it appears to the Commissioners of Customs, or to the Governor or other person administering the Government of any British possession, that, by reason of special circumstances it would be desirable that permission should be granted to any British ship to pass without being previously registered from any port or place in His Majesty's dominions to the port of Shanghae, it shall be lawful for such Commissioners or Governor or other person to grant a pass accordingly, and such pass shall for the time and within the limits therein mentioned have the same effect as a certificate of registry.

Pass to unregistered ship to British port. 15. In cases where it appears to His Majesty's Minister in China that, by reason of special circumstances, it would be desirable that permission should be granted to any British ship to pass without being previously registered from the port of Shanghae to any port or place within His Majesty's dominions, it shall be lawful for such Minister to grant a pass accordingly, and such pass shall, for the time and within the limits therein mentioned, have the same effect as a certificate of registry.

Exemption of lorchas. 16. Lorchas and other Chinese and Corean rigged ships registered at Shanghae shall be exempted from the provisions of the Merchants Shipping Acts which relate to the shipment and discharge of seamen, so far as applies to the employment of natives of China and Corea on board these ships.

Instructions and scale of fees. 17.—(1) His Majesty's Minister in China may, with the approval of the Secretary of State, issue any instructions with reference to the performance of any act or thing relating to the registry of a ship registered at Shanghae, or of any interest therein, that may seem to him necessary or advisable.

(2.) The fees which shall be paid and taken in respect of matters arising under this Order are provided in the Table of Fees annexed to "The China and Corea (Consular and Marriage Fees) Order in Council, 1904," and are set forth in the Second Schedule to this Order.

Repeal. 18. "The China and Japan Maritime Order in Council, 1874," and "The Shanghae Shipping Registry Order in Council, 1883," are hereby repealed, without prejudice to anything done under those Orders respectively.

Interpretation. 19. In this Order the expression "Merchant Shipping Acts" means "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894," and any Acts amending that Act.

Expressions defined in "The China and Corea Order in Council, 1904," and used in this Order have the same respective meanings as in that Order.

The Rules of construction contained in Article 4 of "The China and Corea Order in Council, 1904," shall apply to the construction of this Order.

Short title. 20. This Order may be cited as "The China and Corea (Shipping Registry) Order in Council, 1904."

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

1904

FIRST SCHEDULE.

STEAMER.

Pass granted only for Ships to be registered at Shanghae.

Name of Ship.	British or Foreign Built, and when Built.	How propelled.

Number of decks	... ...	Build	... ...
Number of masts	... ...	Galleries	... ...
Rigged	... ...	Head	... ...
Stern	... ...	Framework	... ...

MEASUREMENT.	Feet.	Tenths.
Length from the fore part of stem under the bowsprit to the aft side of the head of the sternpost
Main breadth to outside plank
Depth in hold from tonnage deck to ceiling at midships

TONNAGE.	No. of Tons.
Tonnage under tonnage deck
Closed-in spaces above the tonnage deck, if any, viz.:—
Space or spaces between decks
Poop
Round-house
Other inclosed spaces, if any, naming them..
Gross tonnage
Reduction for space required for propelling power
Tonnage

	Feet.	Tenths.
Length of engine-room
Number of engines
Combined power (estimated horse-power) } Number of horses-power

Name and address of engine maker..

....

I, the undersigned.., His Britannic Majesty's Consul at the Port of... hereby certify that—

1. The ship, the description of which is prefixed to this my Pass, has been duly surveyed, and that the above description is true.

2. That...................................., of...................................., is the master of the said ship.

3. That the said ship was built at....................................on the..............day of.........................., 19......, and her foreign name is*.......................................

Dated at..., the..............day of.................................., one thousand nine hundred and...

....

His Britannic Majesty's Consul.

* These words to be added if the ship is foreign.

Note.—This Pass continues in force only until the..............day of............................, 19......, or until she completes her voyage from...................................to Shanghae, or until such earlier time as the new certificate of registry shall be delivered to the master of the said ship by a Consular or other duly authorized officer, or until notice of the cancellation of such Pass has been given to the master of the said ship by the Registrar at Shanghae; but upon the expiration of such period, or upon such delivery, or upon receipt of such notice of cancellation, shall be void to all intents.

Note.—Registrars of shipping are informed that this ship is in process of registration at Shanghae, and that registry must not be granted elsewhere.

SECOND SCHEDULE.

Fees.

Note.—See Fees 1 to 9 H inclusive annexed to "The China and Corea Order in Council (Consular and Marriage Fees), 1904."]

No. 8.

[August 15, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, July 12, 1904.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers noted in the accompanying list with regard to the draft Order in Council consolidating and amending the China Orders in Council of 1865 and subsequent years.

Draft China Order in Council consolidating existing Orders.

The draft has been prepared by Mr. A. Gray, and has been the subject of careful consideration by Sir H. Wilkinson, the Chief Justice, and Mr. Bourne, the Acting Chief Justice, at Shanghae, and the Legal Advisers to this Department.

The greater portion of the draft Order re-enacts in a modern form the provisions of the Orders it is proposed to repeal, and does not therefore call for particular comment.

You will observe (Papers, bundle B) that on account of the number of British subjects in Yünnan, and the great distance of that province from Hong Kong, it has been found necessary to provide for sending offenders for trial to Burmah as well as Hong Kong, and Article 50 has been drafted accordingly.

Article 103 deals with real property in China belonging to deceased British subjects, and is identical with Article 93 of "The Siam Order in Council, 1903," which received your sanction on the 3rd December, 1902. The papers on this subject are accordingly not again submitted to you.

An Article (154) has been added enabling the Court to make garnishee orders in aid of the judgments of the Courts of foreign Powers giving reciprocal advantages. It is, however, not considered advisable to extend the provisions of this Article to the Provincial Courts. The papers dealing with this subject will be found in bundle (C).

The question of regulating the importation of arms and munitions of war into China has already been referred to you, and the recommendations contained in your Report of the 17th January, 1901 (Paper D), are provided for in Article 155 (1) (c).

A provision has also been inserted which will enable the judicial work at the larger ports to be discharged by a Consular officer specially deputed for the purpose, as Mr. Bourne, when Acting Chief Justice, had occasion to call in question the right of the Vice-Consul at Tien-tsin to perform judicial work (bundle E).

In view of the constant fluctuations in the value of the Mexican dollar, it has been decided to revise the Judicial Fee Table on a sterling basis. All fines and penalties have therefore been stated in sterling at 2*s.* to the dollar, and in Articles 92, 93, 112, 113, and 115 the limitations of value for purposes of trials, appeals, &c., have also been stated in sterling. The fee for registration will, however, continue to be stated in local currency, i.e., the maximum fixed by Article 162 (8) will be 2 dollars for China and 2 yen for Corea.

As all payments, where not made in British gold, are to be made in local currency at certain rates, it has been found necessary to make a provision to this effect, and Article 164 has therefore been inserted.

A note has also been added to the Judicial Fee Table providing for the valuation of estates for probate purposes according to the daily rate of exchange.

I have the honour to request that you will take this draft into your consideration, and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether its terms are fit and proper for submission to the King in Council for His Majesty's approval, or whether it requires any, and if so, what, additions or amendments.

1904

His Lordship would be glad to be furnished at the same time with any general observations which you may be good enough to offer on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A.)—(a.)	To Mr. A. Gray		June	5, 1900.
(b.)	Mr. A. Gray		May	27, 1901.
(c.)	To Mr. A. Gray		July	4, ,,
(d.)	Mr. A. Gray		August	26, ,,
(e.)	To. Mr. H. S. Wilkinson		October	7, ,,
(f.)	To Sir E. Satow	(No. 71)	October	7, ,,
(g.)	Sir E. Satow	(No. 82)	December	9, ,,
(h.)	Mr. A. Gray		December	19, ,,
(i.)	Mr. Wilkinson		February	10, 1902.
(j.)	Ditto	(No. 8)	April	5, ,,
(k.)	Ditto	(No. 9)	April	5, ,,
(l.)	To Mr. A. Gray		May	24, ,,
(m.)	Mr. A. Gray		May	31, ,,
(n.)	To Mr. Wilkinson		June	10, ,,
(o.)	Mr. Wilkinson		June	12, ,,
(p.)	To Mr A. Gray		June	14, ,,
(q.)	Mr. Gray		June	17, ,,
(r.)	Mr. Wilkinson		June	18, ,,
(s.)	Mr. A. Gray		August	5, ,,
(t.)	Acting Chief Justice Bourne	(No. 25)	October	4, ,,
(u.)	Mr. Wilkinson		November	18, ,,
(v.)	To Mr. A. Gray		November	20, ,,
(w.)	Mr. Wilkinson		November	29, ,,
(x.)	Ditto		December	2, ,,
(y.)	Mr. Gray		March	14, 1903.
(z.)	Ditto		April	4, ,,
(a^1.)	Ditto		May	26, ,,
(b^1.)	To Mr. Wilkinson		June	18, ,,
(c^1.)	To Mr. Gray		June	18, ,,
(d^1.)	Mr. A. Gray		July	3, ,,
(B.)—(a.)	Acting Chief Justice Bourne	(No. 23)	September	25, 1902.
(b.)	To Mr. Wilkinson		November	25, ,,
(c.)	Mr. Wilkinson		December	13, ,,
(d.)	To Mr. A. Gray		December	24, ,,
(C.)—(a.)	Mr. Bourne	(No. 14)	June	12, ,,
(b.)	To Mr. Wilkinson		July	28, ,,
(c.)	Mr. Wilkinson		August	1, ,,
(d.)	To Mr. Wilkinson		August	12, ,,
(e.)	Mr. Wilkinson		September	3, ,,
(f.)	To Mr. Gray		September	20, ,,
(D.)—	Law Officers		January	17, 1901.
(E.)—(a.)	Acting Chief Justice Bourne	(No. 21)	July	23, 1903.
(b.)	To Mr. A. Gray		September	7, ,,
(c.)	Mr. A. Gray		September	11, ,,
(F.)—	Draft Order.

Report.

This draft Order in Council, as altered and initialled by us, may, in our opinion, properly be submitted to the King for the approval of His Majesty in Council.*

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
August 15, 1904.

---

* For text of Order as issued see "London Gazette" of the 28th October, 1904 [Confidential No. 8278*].

The following alteration was made by the Law Officers in the draft of the Order in Council as submitted to them:—

Article 79 (3). Instead of "A clerk or officer punished or acquitted," the words "A clerk or officer against whom an order has been made or who has been acquitted."

No. 9.

[October 15, 1904.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, September 17, 1904.

Gentlemen,

Crew of Russian torpedo-boat "Burni" interned at Hong Kong.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to bring to your notice the circumstances in which the officers and crew of the Russian torpedo-boat destroyer "Burni" are at present interned at Hong Kong. It appears—though the exact date of the event is not quite clear—that, subsequent to the sortie of the Russian fleet from Port Arthur and the naval engagement on the 10th August, the "Burni" ran on a rock on the promontory of Shantung. Lieutenant Tirkow, who was in command, thereupon destroyed the vessel, and he and the crew, having lost all their possessions, marched to Wei-hai Wei and placed themselves under British protection. They were at once interned on board one of His Majesty's ships by the Commander-in-chief, and were shortly afterwards removed to Hong Kong as being a more convenient place for internment, pending a decision as to their ultimate disposal.

The Japanese Government have made an earnest appeal to His Majesty's Government that the officers and crew may be interned until the end of the war. They state that they do not make this request as a matter of right, but they suggest, for the consideration of His Majesty's Government, that such treatment would be justified by the declaration made to the Russian and Japanese Governments in July last, that Wei-hai Wei would be closed to the ships of either belligerent attempting to take refuge at that port. They point out that the crew of the "Burni" were driven ashore as the result of battle, and not of the elements, the weather being fine and the sea perfectly calm.

You will observe that this statement is not in accordance with the account given by the Commander of the vessel on his arrival at Wei-hai Wei, who states that the ship ran aground in a fog at night.

The Russian Government have demanded, as a matter of principle, that the prisoners should be repatriated. They contend that the "Burni" was not seeking refuge at Wei-hai Wei from hostile pursuit, and therefore does not come within the scope of the Declaration of July; and that the precedents for interning belligerent troops forced over the frontier into neutral territory cannot be held to apply to the crew of the destroyer, who were merely seeking safety after shipwreck.

Lord Lansdowne is not aware of any previous occasion when this question has arisen, nor does the case appear to be covered by Conventions or Arrangements which are binding upon His Majesty's Government.

Article 57 of the Règlement attached to the Convention of The Hague concerning the laws and customs of war by land does not apply, because the crew of the "Burni" were not part of the Russian "land forces" or of the "belligerent armies."

The corresponding Convention of the same date, applying to maritime warfare the principles of the Geneva Convention, contains no provisions with regard to the disposal of the sailors of one belligerent in neutral territories, because Article X was excluded by all the Powers when the Convention was ratified; even if the Article had remained in the Convention, however, it seems to refer to sailors landed at a neutral port by one of the belligerents under Article IX after they had theoretically become prisoners of war.

When sailors have become permanently separated from their ship, as in this case, there does not appear to be any reason why they should not be treated upon the same footing as land forces, as the greater laxity of the rules with regard to naval forces are ascribed by writers on international law (e.g., see Hall, p. 626, 5th edition) to the practice of allowing belligerent vessels to visit neutral waters. Lord Lansdowne is not aware whether the case has even occurred of a body of belligerent troops losing their way and crossing the border into neutral territory by mistake, but under circumstances that rendered it impossible for them to return, but such an occurrence would appear to raise similar considerations to those presented by the present case.

The papers on the subject, as noted in the accompanying list, are transmitted for your information, and I am to request that you will be so good as to take them into your consideration and favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to the principle which should be applied in dealing with the officers and crew of the "Burni," and with any general observations which you may be good enough to offer on the issues involved.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A.)	To Sir C. Hardinge	(No. 263)	July	6, 1904.
(B.)	To Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 135)	July	11, „
(C.)	Ditto	(No. 103. Telegraphic)	July	15, „
(D.)	To Sir C. Hardinge	(No. 290)	July	30, „
(E.)	Admiralty		August	13, „
(F.)	To Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 109. Telegraphic)	August	16, „
(G.)	Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 221. Telegraphic)	August	16, „
(H.)	Count Benckendorff		August	22, „
(I.)	To Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 115. Telegraphic)	August	24, „
(J.)	Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 240. Telegraphic)	August	26, „
(K.)	To Count Benckendorff		August	30, „
(L.)	Sir C. Hardinge	(No. 115. Treaty. Telegraphic)	September	8, „
(M.)	Mr. Campbell (Memorandum)		September	8, „
(N.)	To Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 119. Telegraphic)	September	12, „
(O.)	Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 257. Telegraphic)	September	18, „
(P.)	International Convention (Treaty Series 1901. No. 10). Maritime Warfare. Library No. 1119		July	29, 1901.
(Q.)	Ditto (Treaty Series 1901. No. 11). War by Land. Library No. 1120		July	29, „

Report.

We are of opinion that, upon the facts stated, it is within the rights of His Majesty's Government to intern the officers and crew of the "Burni."

We think the true view of the facts is that the loss of the "Burni" was the consequence of the naval operations in progress between the belligerents, and the fact that the officer in command destroyed the vessel—apparently to prevent its falling into the hands of the Japanese—seems to support this view.

We do not think, therefore, that the contention of the Russian Government that the present is a case of a crew shipwrecked merely by perils of the seas and seeking hospitality can be maintained.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
October 15, 1904.

CUBA.

No. 10.

[February 4, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 2, 1903.

Claims by His Majesty's Government, &c., on Cuban Government for losses during Cuban revolt.

I HAD the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to address you on the 19th August, 1901, in regard to the claims of British subjects on account of their losses in Cuba arising out of the acts of the Spanish authorities during the insurrection in that island and the subsequent war between Spain and the United States.

Lord Lansdowne has now under his consideration the question of the steps to be taken in regard to the claims of British subjects for losses and damage to their property arising out of acts of the insurgents during that insurrection.

It was from the first proposed that these claims should eventually be presented to the Cuban Government. Pending, however, the establishment of a Constitutional Government in the islands, the existence of these claims was in 1900 called to the notice of the United States' Government, and endeavours have from time to time been made to ascertain what course the United States' Government were likely to pursue in regard to similar claims of their nationals.

His Majesty's late Ambassador at Washington reported at the beginning of this year, as the result of his inquiries, that no decision of any kind was likely to be arrived at for some time to come so far as could then be seen, and that there was little probability that the United States' Government would assume responsibility for the claims even of their own citizens on account of such losses.

After consultation with the French and German Governments, who have similar claims, it was considered desirable that the Representatives of Great Britain, France, and Germany, at Havana, should ascertain whether, and to what extent, the Cuban Government would accept the responsibility for the claims.

A note, copy of which forms the inclosure to Paper (A) in the list of papers accompanying this letter, was accordingly addressed by His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Havana to the Cuban authorities on the 16th July last, calling attention to the claims of British subjects, and expressing the satisfaction with which His Majesty's Government would regard action taken by the Cuban Government tending to lead to a settlement.

On the same date the French and German Representatives also addressed communications to the Cuban Secretary of State expressed in very similar terms.

The Cuban Government in a note, a translation of which is inclosed in Mr. Pearson's despatch No. 21 (Paper (B) in accompanying list), decline to accept responsibility for the losses in question on the ground that the claims are for acts of the insurgents at a time when they were not recognized as belligerents, and that the Cuban Republic was only subject to international rights and duties from the date of its Constitution as a sovereign State, i.e., from the 20th May, 1902.

The French Government have proposed that the three Powers should confer as to the answer to be returned to this contention.

They have communicated to His Majesty's Government the opinion of their Chargé d'Affaires at Havana upon it and also that of M. Renault, the legal adviser to the French Foreign Office (Papers (C) and (D)).

It will be observed that M. Renault refutes the contention of the Cuban Government.

The point at issue appears to him to be the connection existing between the present Government of Cuba and the insurgent forces, who, having fought for many years against Spain, finally triumphed, thanks to the intervention of the United States. This connection, M. Renault observes, is established by the first of the Transitory Rules of the Constitution of the Republic of Cuba of the 21st February, 1901, an extract of which is as follows:—

"The Republic of Cuba does not recognize any other debts and obligations than those legitimately contracted in behalf of the revolution by the Corps Commanders of the liberating army . . . . ;" referring further on to "such debts and obligations as the revolutionary Government may have contracted subsequently, either by itself or through its legitimate Representatives in foreign countries." The Article concludes with the following sentence (which, however, is not quoted by M. Renault): "Congress shall classify said debts and obligations, and decide as to the payment of those that may be legitimate."

The Republic of Cuba having to some extent, therefore, acknowledged the debts and engagements contracted by the Commanders of the liberating army or by the revolutionary Government, M. Renault sees no reason why the same responsibility should not rest with the new Republic on account of the acts of the same parties which were not contracts; and the present Government being in effect the insurgent party now installed in power, he considers that they are responsible for their previous acts, and that their responsibility should be insisted upon.

Mr. Carden, His Majesty's Minister in Cuba, has stated that though he considers that it is the fact that the present Government and the old insurgent party are one and the same, it would be difficult to establish the connexion in a way that would be of any service in an arbitration.

There are a certain number of individuals, such as the President of Cuba, who are now connected with the Government, and who formerly figured prominently in the insurgent party, but beyond this Lord Lansdowne is not able at present to point to any facts that could be adduced in proof of the identity between the existing Government and the former rebel party.

1904

I am to request that you will be good enough to take this matter into your consideration, and will inform Lord Lansdowne whether, in your opinion, His Majesty's Government can effectively and consistently take the line of argument suggested by M. Renault for insisting on the liability of the Cuban Government.

Lord Lansdowne will also be glad to be favoured with any observations which you may have to make on the general aspect of the question.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Despatch from Mr. Pearson (His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Havana)	(No. 20)	July 18, 1903.
(B.)	Ditto	(No. 21)	August 13, „
(C.)	Communiqué by M. Geoffray (French Minister in London) .		September 17, „
(D.)	Communiqué by M. Cambon (French Ambassador in London) ..		November 9, „

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, January 26, 1904.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit herewith a communication from the French Ambassador for consideration,* with the papers now before you, in regard to the claims of British subjects for losses arising out of the Cuban insurrection. I am to state that his Lordship will be much obliged for an answer at your early convenience to the letter of the 2nd ultimo, from this Office, on the subject.

I am, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

We think that the construction put by the Cuban Government on the First Transitory Clause of the Constitution is unduly narrow, and that it covers all obligations contracted on behalf of the Chiefs of the Insurrectionary Army, even though they were not attended with the formalities which the Cuban Government now desire to treat as indispensable.

As regards claims which cannot be brought within the scope of the First Transitory Clause, we are not aware of any authority in international law establishing the liability of the Cuban Government for requisitions made or damage done by the insurgents. We think, however, that in substance the Cuban Government represents the party who conducted the insurrection, and that there is a strong moral claim on this head.

This claim, however, would not extend to the case of damage done incidentally in the course of military operations. It would apply to requisitions or to damage done for the purpose of inforcing requisitions.

In the circumstances, we think that His Majesty's Government would be justified in endeavouring to obtain payment from the Cuban Government of the claims now in question, subject to the limitations above indicated. Whether these claims should be urged in concert with France and Germany or by Great Britain separately, and in what manner, is a question of policy.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 4, 1904.

---

* Memorandum by M. Cambon, January 20, 1904.

EGYPT.

No. 11.

[November 16 and 17, 1904.]

(1.)

The Earl of Cromer to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received November 14, 10 P.M.)

(No. 103.)
(Telegraphic.)

Cairo, November 14, 1904, 8·20 P.M.

War with Japan: Coaling of Russian Fleet in Suez Canal and at Aden.

Consul at Port Saïd informs me that Russians are likely to raise question as to whether, under the terms of clause 3 [of Suez Canal Rules], Aden can be considered the "nearest accessible port, &c." They would maintain that under British Rules no coal will be supplied at Aden, and that, therefore, they should be supplied with enough coal at Port Saïd to take them to nearest port where coal will be supplied. I do not know what that port would be.

We propose to adhere to Aden. Do you approve?

Minutes.

This raises a difficult—though possibly a hypothetical—question, which has already undergone some theoretical discussion in January last.

I don't myself see how Aden "comes into the picture." We know they won't get any coal at Aden at all, but under the Rules they are entitled to sufficient to reach the nearest accessible port at which they can obtain supplies necessary for the continuation of the voyage. (See Nos. 37, 40, 44, and 45 of print.)

Note especially what was said about naming any place (No. 45).

See also Memorandum left by Viscount Hayashi on the 4th November.

It might be well to consult Admiralty.

W. M.

Foreign Office, November 15, 1904.

It must be remembered that our Rules have undergone a drastic change since January, and that the considerations which then applied to Aden do not apply now. No doubt after Port Saïd they could coal at Jibuti, and I should say a supply to take them there would suffice. They might put Jibuti in their declaration.

W. M.

We cannot advise coal being given to Aden, knowing that no coal can be obtained there.

Lord Cromer proposed (No. 39 of print) to class Aden, Perim, and Jibuti as one group. If Jibuti be named, the French could argue, in reply to the Japanese protest, that we had given them coal for that place as a port where they could obtain a further supply. But I don't see how we can help this.

Mr. Davidson.

F. A. C

Foreign Office, November 15, 1904.

1904

Something seems to me to turn on whether coal is merely to be regarded as "supplies necessary for the continuance of the ship's voyage," or whether, for the purposes of the decision of His Majesty's Government as to its non-supply to Russian ships going to the seat of war, it can any longer be regarded as, in any circumstances, vis-à-vis of Russian ships proceeding to the Yellow Sea, coming within the expression "supplies."

But, on the other hand, although the decision taken by His Majesty's Government applies in terms only to coal, I think the principle on which the decision was based requires that logically that decision must be applied to the supply of any sort of thing which will assist a Russian ship in her endeavours to reach the Yellow Sea and the seat of war, whether coal, ship's biscuits, fresh water, or anything else, if supplied with the full knowledge that they were going to be used in the prosecution of such a voyage.

It seems, therefore, clear that no Russian ship on its way to the seat of war can be given coal, or anything else, at Aden which will assist it in the prosecution of its voyage to the seat of war, and this being so, it would, to my mind, be extremely unwise (to use no stronger term) to advise the Canal authorities to give vessels so proceeding eastwards coal for Aden.

They are bound to give coal to "the nearest accessible port at which the vessel can obtain the supplies necessary, &c.," and Aden clearly is not such a port, whatever other port may be.

The Canal authorities must satisfy themselves as to what is "the nearest accessible port," and this depends, in the case of ports other than Aden, on facts at present unknown to me.

For instance, whether Jibuti be the nearest accessible port or not depends on whether the French will give the Russian vessels at Jibuti the supplies necessary for the continuance of their voyage.

The Canal authorities might perhaps require to be satisfied on this point before giving coal at all, or might say that the coal was given to the Russian vessel at the Captain's own risk, and subject of course to the possibility that he might not obtain further supplies when he got to the named port. But with regard to a port like Aden, at which it is quite certain that the Russians cannot get supplies, and where the Canal authorities either have been or can be officially informed that supplies will not be given, I think they certainly ought to decline to give coal.

I do not like the idea that they should be advised to give coal unconditionally for Jibuti, but pending some definite pronouncement by the French Government on the subject, which it is very desirable for many reasons to obtain, I think they might give it with some such reservation or caution as I have indicated.

The situation is indirectly a very difficult one, and raises questions of great delicacy and of very high policy.

I have said what occurs to me off-hand about it, in order that no unnecessary waste of time in a matter which is urgent may occur, but I presume that Lord Lansdowne will wish the Attorney-General to be consulted at once upon the question, as it is a matter on which His Majesty's Government will certainly desire to have his opinion before arriving at a final decision.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, November 15, 1904.

In the meantime we might telegraph:—

"Your telegram No. 103 [of the 14th November: Coaling of Baltic fleet in Canal].

"It seems doubtful whether, having regard to our decision as to supply of coal in British ports, Aden could properly be named, but the question is a difficult one, and Law Officers must be consulted. We will reply as soon as possible." (Sent 16th November.)

F. A. C.

Telegraph as proposed, and send papers urgent to Attorney-General.

I should like to confer with him, and probably with the Prime Minister, before deciding.

L.

(2.)

Minute by Attorney-General.

November 16, 1904.

Lord Lansdowne,

I DO not think that Aden is a port at which the vessel "can obtain supplies necessary for the continuance of her voyage," in view of our Rules against coaling there.

It is for the Captain of the vessel to name the port for which he wants coal. If the Canal authorities know there is a nearer one which answers Rule 3 of the Suez Canal Rules they may refuse more than enough to take him there.

The vessel is not entitled to any coal if she has already enough on board to take her to the port in question. I understand that it is considered doubtful whether it is desirable as a matter of policy to contend that coal on the accompanying colliers must be taken into account for this purpose.

I have not the materials for determining what is the nearest port available for supplies. It may be that Jibuti or Acheen are available.

It does not appear to me that the question as between Japan and France depends on the construction of the French Rules, but on the question what Rules France ought to have and to enforce for securing the observance of neutrality in this matter. But even if France should fail to observe her obligations as we regard them in this matter, I do not think that this would constitute a casus fœderis under our Treaty with Japan. Of course, violations of neutrality may be of such a nature and on such a scale as to amount to taking part in the war, but I do not see that this could be said to be the case if no more was done than to supply coal to Russian vessels on their way to the seat of war.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

(3.)

Mr. Davidson to Attorney-General.

Foreign Office, November 17, 1904.

Dear Attorney-General,

WILL you look at the draft telegram to Lord Cromer which is marked herewith,[*] and say whether you approve of it as it stands?

I am a little uneasy as to the words [Aden or] in the last sentence, and they do not appear to me to be consistent with either your own Minute or other Minutes with which I gather that you are in accord.

Campbell also rather shares my view, but as Lord Lansdowne is at Windsor we can't get at him at once, and the telegram ought to go to-night.

Would you mind looking at the draft and giving your opinion on the point?

Ever yours,
(Signed) W. E. DAVIDSON.

(4.)

Attorney-General to Mr. Davidson.

November 17, 1904.

My dear Davidson,

I THINK the telegram should go as settled by the Prime Minister and Lord Lansdowne.

If the Russian asks for coal to get to Aden, the permission of supply by the Suez Canal authorities for this purpose can't amount to an undertaking by them that coal will be supplied at Aden any more than it would as regards Jibuti, if that were the port named by the Russian. I don't see that it is the duty of the Canal authorities to tell the Captain that he is wrong in his supposition either that coal is in fact at a particular port or that it will be supplied to him there. The Canal authorities would

---

[*] See (5.)

1904

properly intervene if they knew that coal could be got at a nearer port, as the Captain would be applying for more coal than he is entitled to. But it is hardly their duty to tell him he ought to apply for more; and Japan might, perhaps, not unreasonably object if they did. Worded as the paragraph is, I think it all right.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

(5.)

The Marquess of Lansdowne to the Earl of Cromer.

(No. 58. Treaty.)
(Telegraphic.) Foreign Office, November 17, 1904.

YOUR telegrams Nos. 103* and 108 [of 14th and 16th instant: Coaling of Russian fleet].

In view of Law Officers we could not, having regard to Rules now in force as to coaling at British ports, contend that Aden is a port at which the Russian ships can obtain supplies necessary for continuance of their voyage.

It is, however, for the Captain of the vessel to name the port for which he wants coal, and for the Egyptian authorities to refuse coal for that port if they know that a nearer one is available, regard being had to amount of coal already on board of vessel.

If Russians name Aden or Jibuti, it will be better not to raise any difficulties.

FRANCE.

[In Colonial Office letter of November 10, 1904.] No. 11A.

Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, November 9, 1904.

Australian Immigration Act: Query of French Government as to merchant seamen deserters under.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. H. Bertram Cox's letter of the 11th October last, stating that he was directed by you to inform us that the French Government had again raised the question which was dealt with in our Report of the 23rd July, 1902, viz., whether Treaties between Great Britain and foreign countries for the surrender of merchant seamen deserters exempted vessels of those countries from the provisions of "The Immigration Restriction Act, 1901," of the Commonwealth of Australia.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to inclose the correspondence which had passed on the subject with the French Ambassador, together with copies of the Australian Act and the Anglo-French Agreement of the 23rd June, 1854.

That he was to request that we would take the matter into our consideration, and report whether we saw any reason in the arguments urged by the French Government to modify the opinion given in our Report of the 23rd July, 1902.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

That we see nothing in the arguments urged by the French Ambassador in his note of the 16th May last to lead us to modify the opinion expressed in our previous Report of the 23rd July, 1902. There is nothing in "The Immigration Act, 1901," which deprives the French Government of the benefits of the Treaty of 1854, as there is, notwithstanding the Act, the same obligation upon the Government of the Commonwealth to assist in the apprehension and sending on board of deserters.

We have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

---

* See (1.)

List of Papers.

Anglo-French Agreement (Hertslet's "State Papers," vol. 48, p. 863)	June 23, 1854
Australian Immigration. &c., Acts, 1901.
Foreign Office to French Ambassador	March 26, 1903.
French Ambassador to Foreign Office	February 29, 1904.
Foreign Office to French Ambassador	April 14, ,,
French Ambassador to Foreign Office	May 16, ,,
Papers submitted to Law Officers in Colonial Office letter of the 14th July, 1902.

GENERAL.

No. 12.

[January 2, 1904.]

Draft of Telegram to the Earl of Cromer.

(Treaty.)
(Telegraphic.) Foreign Office, January , 1904.

. . . . Supply of coal to belligerent vessels at Port Saïd.

Russo-Japanese war: Supply of coal to belligerent vessels at Port Saïd.

In our opinion, no coal should be supplied at all, except on the undertaking of the Russian ship to proceed to the nearest available Russian port (Baltic), or to some C nearer named neutral destination, irrespective of whether this be to the eastward or to the westward.

A We cannot dictate to a belligerent vessel the direction in which she should go.

According to our Rules, a Russian ship having once coaled at a British port, cannot coal again at that or any other British port during next three months. B Thus a Russian vessel coaling at Port Saïd for Aden and again at Aden could not coal within the next three months at Aden, Colombo, or other British port.

Minute by Lord Lansdowne.

I think the Attorney-General should see this before it issues.

I am disposed, and so is Lord Selborne, to omit the passages struck out in red, and marked (A) and (B).

We are not convinced that (A) is correct, and (B) is probably redundant, and a little puzzling.

We are also inclined to leave out (C) (underlined in blue), unless this interpretation of the Rule has been always accepted by this country and acted on.

L.

We assume that Libau is held to be the nearest Russian port.

L

1904

Dear Lord Lansdowne, Blackmoor, Liss, December 29, 1903.

I asked Lord Walter to consult Foreign Office about the coaling of Russian ships in case of war at our coaling stations and in Suez Canal. Surely we cannot contemplate allowing these ships to take in enough coal for their nearest port (Baltic), and then calmly to proceed eastward, renewing the farce at each port till Port Arthur becomes the nearest port?

In respect of the Suez Canal, what is the objection to the Egyptian Government following the very useful precedent of their treatment of the Spanish ships in the Spanish-American war?

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) SELBORNE.

P.S.—What is being done about this?

L.

Minutes.

We sent to the Admiralty some days ago answers—drafted by Mr. Davidson—to Lord W. Kerr's questions. We said these answers were provisional, and that the Attorney-General was being consulted.

F. A. C.

The papers only came back this morning from the Attorney-General. I have sent them on. The points raised in Lord Selborne's letter are all dealt with in a Memorandum[*] which I finished writing this morning, after I received the papers back from the Attorney-General.

They are also dealt with in the Admiralty letter, though in a sense somewhat adverse to the view expressed in the first part of Lord Selborne's letter to Lord Lansdowne of yesterday's date.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, December 30, 1903.

The answer to Lord Selborne would seem to be:—

1. We sent answers to Lord W. Kerr's questions on the 23rd December (the day they were received).

2. We have since consulted the Attorney-General, who has answered to-day, and quite agrees, and has added some additional observations, which are being sent to the Admiralty.

3. The case mentioned by Lord Selborne could hardly arise in practice, as the Russian ship would be required to give an undertaking as to her destination; and our rule that if a ship has coaled at a British port she cannot coal again at that or any other British port within three months would also apply.

F. A. C.

Attorney-General to Mr. Davidson.

(Telegraphic.) Nairn, January 2, 1904.

Omit (A) and (B); include (C). Papers follow by this day's post.

---

[*] See p. 38 A.

I think that we ought to follow the Spanish-American War precedent (which is the latest precedent) as far as we can. The matter was probably then gone into more carefully and in more detail, and presented itself practically for decision in more various phases than on any former occasions—at any rate of late years—when Great Britain was a neutral.

Mr. Maycock's Memorandum is a very valuable survey of the particular question, and generally I agree with it, except the last six words of it, viz., "on the line of voyage thither." It might possibly be a good thing if these words could be read into the rule and treated as subaudita. But I am quite sure that at present we can quote no satisfactory authority in support of this gloss upon, or interpretation of, the general rule.

"Nearer destination" means of course "nearer neutral destination," and although this is pretty obvious without more specific expression, it might, I think, be a good thing to insert the word "neutral," as has been done already by the Colonial Office in some of their notices to Governors, Proclamations, &c. The object, as I believe, of inserting the alternative "or some nearer destination" was primarily, at any rate, to provide for the case of a belligerent public ship, which could not store enough coal on board to take her back to the nearest port of her own country, which might conceivably be right on the other side of the world. But, however this may be, I think that it is fairly clear—on the rule as it stands—that a ship may be allowed sufficient coal to take her to any neutral port which is at a less distance from the coaling port than is the nearest port of the ship's own flag; it is not a question of this direction or of that—the question is the distance of the port of destination, as compared with the distance of the nearest port of the ship's own flag from the coaling port.

With regard to the expression "theatre of war," as applied to naval warfare (if it be applicable at all), it must be borne in mind that the sea is the highway of nations, and that the high seas are communis juris. For the belligerents, the whole of the high seas are—or may at any moment become—the "theatre of war." On any part of the high seas—in other words, on any part of the seas outside the territorial limits of the various littorals of the neutral Powers—the belligerents may meet in conflict or exercise any other belligerent rights. On land, on the other hand, the "theatre of war" is a much more closely-defined area, and its extreme limits must be the territories of the belligerent States, outside of which any hostile engagement between the parties would obviously constitute an infraction of neutrality—or rather a violation of neutral territory. On the high seas there is no neutral territory—those seas belong to all alike, and with the limit of the territorial water ends the exclusive dominium of each neutral power, and begins the general condominium of all, whether neutral or belligerent. For instance, in the interval between the rupture of the Peace of Amiens and the Battle of Trafalgar, the theatre (naval) of war as regards France and Spain on the one side and England on the other, stretched from within the Mediterranean to the West Indian Archipelago—whither Nelson pursued the French fleet. The phrase "the command of the seas," which is so often used, implies a capacity on the part of the Power which possesses such command to assert her superiority anywhere upon the seas,—there is no such analogous "command of the land"—and cannot be unless and until some nation succeeds in imposing on all others a universal domination, when war would presumably cease.

It has been pointed out to me that in 1885 (Franco-Chinese War) a telegraphic instruction was sent by the Colonial Office to the Governor of Hong Kong, and was thence repeated to Ceylon and the Straits Settlements, to the effect that "public ships of either belligerent should not be allowed supplies such as would assist naval operations: therefore, no more coal should be furnished to any belligerent ships than would be necessary for moving to the nearest port where no naval operations are being carried on." These instructions were subsequently embodied in a Proclamation issued by the Governor at Hong Kong.

It seems to have been thought that this telegram carried out the meaning of a Law Officers' Report which was made to the Foreign Office on the 22nd December, 1884 (L.O.R., 1884, pp. 53, 54, No. 36, France); but I very much doubt if it did so, or if the Law Officers saw it before it was sent off. It might be well to make inquiry at the Colonial Office as to this. I venture to think that we ought to adhere to the general rule that a public ship may have enough coal to take her to "the nearest port of her own nation or to some nearer neutral destination," and not to attempt to introduce further limitations and conditions, such as "on the line of voyage thither," or "where no naval operations are being carried on." Such limitations cannot fail to prove very embarrassing in practice if it should become necessary to apply them in the concrete to actual facts. For instance, what is "a port where naval operations are being carried on"? Of course, it cannot be a neutral port, and therefore it must be a port of one of the belligerents. If it is a port of the belligerent vessel's flag, why should she not go there if it is the nearest port of her flag available? If it is a port of the other belligerent, presumably she will not want to go there; and if she asks for coal for the purpose of going there she will not be able to get it under the rule, since it will be neither "the nearest port of her own nation" nor "some nearer neutral destination." Moreover, how is it possible to prevent belligerent vessels from going to the scene, or accidentally finding themselves upon the scene, of naval operations, unless, whenever they put into a neutral port, they are interned until the end of the war? Supposing, for instance, France and Germany are at war, and their respective fleets are at sea in the North Sea. A German vessel puts into Hull without coal, and asks for enough coal to enable her to make the nearest German port. Is she not to be given coal because she may, on the way thither, either be attacked and use the coal for fighting by manœuvre with a French cruiser, or because she may fall in with her own fleet at sea and take part in a general naval engagement next day? These matters, which are properly describable, both in fact and in theory, as the "accidents" of the situation, cannot be provided against. Of course, if it were clear that the request of the German vessel were not bonâ fide—that she did not mean to go to her nearest port, but had come in from a fleet which was in the offing, with the deliberate intention of getting as much coal as she could by means of a trick and then rejoining the fleet—she would not be given the coal. But, in the absence of any reasonable ground to suspect her bona fides, it is impossible to take into account all the possibilities and contingencies of the future.

1904

The Law Officers' Opinion of the 22nd December, 1884, was meant to prevent breaches of section 10 of the Foreign Enlistment Act as to "equipping," and it seems to me that it has been interpreted in the Colonial Office Instruction, in a sense which was never intended, to the supply of coal by a neutral to a belligerent under the "nearest port" rule.

(6.) It seems to me that our telegram of the 24th December really did answer the questions which Lord Cromer further raises in his reply of the 26th December.

The answer to that reply of the 26th December is, however, in my opinion. that no coal is to be supplied at all unless on the undertaking of the Russian ship to proceed to the nearest available Russian port (Libau), or to some nearer named neutral destination, whether to the eastward or the westward.

It is no doubt the fact that in the Spanish case ships bound to the Philippine Islands (which are not the "nearest Spanish port or some nearer neutral destination") were not given coal, and were compelled to coal outside the 3-mile limit. But this is quite in accordance with the rules then laid down.

(2) and (3.) I think that the advice I gave in June 1898, when Lord Cromer raised the point as to whether, if the manifest intention of a Spanish fleet coming from Spain was to proceed to the Philippines, the Egyptian Government should refuse to supply them with coal, was sound then, and that, mutatis mutandis, it is sound now. It was concurred in by the Law Officers and acted on, and even assuming that Lord Salisbury was right in considering that my conclusion (a) did not follow from the statement (b), his Lordship agreed in, and acted in accordance with, the conclusion after it had been confirmed by the Law Officers.

I have never been able to see that (a) was as regards (b) a non sequitur, but as we acted in accordance with (a), which was accepted as correct by everybody concerned, the question whether the process of ratiocination by which I arrived at (a) was formally correct or not has now become, though still interesting to me, purely academic for all practical purposes.

A belligerent ship having obtained coal at a British port is not, under our rules, allowed to obtain coal again either at that port or at any other British port within the next three months.

Therefore, if a Russian vessel were to obtain coal for Aden at Port Saïd and were again to obtain coal at Aden, she could not obtain coal at any British port (i.e., Colombo, Singapore, Hong Kong, &c.) within the next three months after obtaining coal at Aden. I am not quite sure whether this rule was present to Lord Cromer's mind when he laid such stress upon not allowing Russian vessels to proceed to the eastward.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, December 30, 1903.

Lord Lansdowne,

The Attorney-General has telegraphed this morning approving the telegram to Lord Cromer, with the omission of (A) and (B).

If you approve, will you send me a telegram "Treaty telegram approved," and we will send it off at once? We have kept copy. There seems no time to lose now.

F. A. C.

Foreign Office, January 2, 1904.

Done. L.

January 2, 1904.

The Marquess of Lansdowne to Mr. Campbell.

Calne, January 2, 1904, 6·23 P.M.

(Telegraphic.)

Treaty telegram approved.

Note by Attorney-General.

I think that (C) should be retained. The question must be faced, and I think the view expressed upon this point in Mr. Davidson's Memorandum is correct.

(A) and (B) should, I think, be omitted. Indeed, the rule referred to in the paragraph of which (B) forms part does not seem directly to bear on the ports under Lord Cromer as to which he inquires.

Otherwise I agree with the draft.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

January 2, 1904.

No. 13.

[January 12, 1904.]

The Earl of Cromer to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received January 8.)

(Treaty.)
(Telegraphic.)

Cairo, January 8, 1904.

. . . . . . Supply of coal to belligerent vessels in Suez Canal.

I submit the following imaginary case:—

Russo-Japanese War: Supply of coal to belligerents in Suez Canal.

We should give a Russian or Japanese ship proceeding eastward enough coal to go to Perim, Aden, or Jibuti. The difference in amount between the three ports is not sufficient to be of any practical importance. But we should decline to give enough for the journey to any port further east—say, Colombo.

I am advised that this procedure would be the strict application of the Convention Rules, and I am inclined to think—more especially in view of the fact that in the course of recent negotiations we have told the French that we accept Convention—we had better adhere closely to those Rules.

I deprecate any attempt at applying purely British Rules which have no international sanction. If we are to do so the political aspects of the British occupation of Egypt would present themselves to foreign Powers in a different and less favourable light than at present.

The point which I now submit is one of much practical importance, for if a belligerent ship coaled at Aden I understand that, under the British Rules, she would not be able to coal at any more easterly British port for the period of three months.

Please note that what holds good for the Russians must, at all events in Egypt, hold equally good for the Japanese.

1904

Minutes.

The balance of argument appears to be in favour of adopting the Convention principles as defined by Lord Cromer. The only objection that I can think of is that Russia may say we have advised Egypt to adopt more stringent Regulations than our own. But a Russian ship would get a further supply at Aden if she wished (as Egyptian ports are not British ports), assuming she had not coaled at some other British port before.

W. M.

Foreign Office, January 8, 1904.

Lord Cromer's view appears to me sound, and I don't think we need be deterred from approving it by the objection referred to by Mr. Maycock.

What holds good for the Russians must, of course, hold good for the Japanese, as much here as in Egypt.

F. A. C.

Foreign Office, January 8, 1904.

I think these Rules might be adopted by Egypt; but I will see what Mr. Davidson has to say, and communicate to-morrow.

The post is just going.

F. A. C.

It is of great importance not to lose a moment.

I presume this telegram has gone to Mr. Balfour and that he has seen the other papers.

Unless Mr. Davidson decidedly disagrees, telegraph to the Prime Minister (using cypher for important parts of message) as below :—

"Cromer's No. 2.

* "I concur in his view, and propose to instruct him to act accordingly. Please telegraph reply as soon as possible."

And if Mr. Balfour's reply is favourable, then telegraph to Lord Cromer :—

"Your No. 2.

"I agree; act accordingly."

If Mr. Balfour has not already seen this telegram it will be necessary to telegraph substance to him as concisely as possible, going on as at*.

L.

Done.—F. A. C.

Foreign Office, January 9, 1904.

I rather agree with Lord Cromer's arguments in favour of treating the Canal and its accessories as a thing altogether apart, and as subject to separate treatment, the main object of which is to keep the Canal thoroughly neutral, and also to clear belligerent vessels out of it and its ports of access at the earliest possible moment consistent with their getting to some neutral port of safety, where they can further "ravitailler et s'approvisionner" (which are, I think, the words of the Protocol, though I have not got it by me for the moment).

It seems to me that, interpreting the duties of the Canal Commissioners by the language of Article IV of the Convention, as further explained by the Protocols (which is what I understand Lord Cromer is proposing to do), the right general rule would be that belligerent vessels coming through the Canal from the eastward should be allowed enough coal to take them to Alexandria, the nearest neutral port (excluding, of course, the Canal and its ports), while vessels approaching from the westward should be allowed enough coal to take them to the nearest neutral port east of Suez, which is certainly not Aden or any British port. If a Russian vessel asked at Port Saïd for coal to Suakim, or some neutral port nearer than Aden, I think that it would be very difficult to refuse it, because the real essence of the rule which Lord Cromer wants to have laid down is surely that the belligerent vessel should have coal enough, and coal only enough, to take her to the nearest neutral port outside of the Canal and its approaches, where she can obtain further coal.

For the purpose of this rule the Canal is a thing wholly secerned and apart. Egyptian ports proper are just as much neutral ports—quâ the Canal—as are British, French, or other ports not belonging to either of the two belligerents.

Of the ports mentioned by Lord Cromer, the Island of Perim is, of course, part of Aden—it is British, and is, for this purpose, the same thing as Aden.

Jibuti is outside of the Red Sea, after the Straits of Bab-el-Mandeb have been passed going eastward. It is under French protection.

But there are other neutral ports much nearer to the Canal than Aden, i.e., Suakim and Massowah; and it seems to me that, if a Russian ship asks for coal to go (for instance) to either Suakim or Massowah, she could not be refused the coal.

From either Suakim or Massowah she could coal again for Colombo, and so she could from Jibuti, though, as that port is further from the Canal than is Aden–Perim, I should have thought that, under the spirit of the rule, the ship could only be allowed coal at Port Saïd or Suez for Jibuti, in the event of her being unable to obtain the requisite supply at some nearer neutral port.

I think that Lord Cromer is anxious that the Russian ships should be allowed coal for Aden, because the result of this would be that they could not take coal from Aden for Colombo, since Colombo, being also a British port, they would be refused coal there until a period of three months had elapsed.

But probably the Russian would anticipate this manœuvre by asking for coal for Suakim or Massowah; and, if he did, I do not think he could be refused by the Canal authorities, on Lord Cromer's interpretation of the Convention, by the further light of the Protocols.

Subject to this observation, I agree generally with Lord Cromer's telegram.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, January 9, 1904.

As the Convention is to be regarded as in force, it is clearly right that Article IV should be acted on, as Lord Cromer proposes, irrespective of British rules.

It follows that, for this purpose, the Canal and its ports must be treated by themselves, and apart from other Egyptian ports, as well as ports in other countries.

The construction put upon Article IV by Lord Cromer in his telegram of the 8th January, subject to the qualification as to possible nearer ports suggested by Mr. Davidson in his minute on that telegram, appears to me to be correct. This view is strongly confirmed by the passage marked on pp. 9 and 10 of the Protocol No. 2 of the 4*th June*, 1885.

It follows that, as proposed by Lord Cromer, coal should be supplied in such quantity only as will take the vessel to the nearest port on her line of route where she can replenish her stores. For this purpose Suakim and Massowah should be taken into account, if there are facilities for coaling there.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Newton, Nairn, N.B.,
January 12, 1904.

Annex 1.*

International Convention respecting the Suez Canal, October 29, 1888.

ARTICLE IV.

Le Canal Maritime restant ouvert, en temps de guerre, comme passage libre, même aux navires de guerre des belligérants, aux termes de l'Article Ier du présent Traité, les Hautes Parties Contractantes conviennent qu'aucun droit de guerre, aucun acte d'hostilité ou aucun acte ayant pour but d'entraver la libre navigation du Canal ne pourra être exercé dans le Canal et ses ports d'accès, ainsi que dans un rayon de 3 milles marins de ces ports, alors même que l'Empire Ottoman serait l'une des Puissances belligérantes.

1904

Les bâtiments de guerre des belligérants ne pourront, dans le Canal et ses ports d'accès, se ravitailler ou s'approvisionner que dans la limite strictement nécessaire. Le transit des dits bâtiments par le Canal s'effectuera dans le plus bref délai d'après les Règlements en vigueur, et sans autre arrêt que celui qui résulterait des nécessités du service.

Leur séjour à Port-Saïd et dans la rade de Suez ne pourra dépasser vingt-quatre heures, sauf le cas de relâche forcée. En pareil cas, ils seront tenus de partir le plus tôt possible. Un intervalle de vingt-quatre heures devra toujours s'écouler entre la sortie d'un port d'accès d'un navire belligérant et le départ d'un navire appartenant à la Puissance ennemie.

Annex 2.[†]

Extract from Protocol No. 2, June 4, 1885, of Suez Canal International Commission.

M. Asser rappelle qu'au sein de la Sous-Commission il avait, lors de la deuxième lecture, critiqué comme trop absolue l'expression le port le plus voisin, qui se trouvait dans le texte primitif. D'accord avec Sir Julian Pauncefote, il avait proposé de stipuler que les bâtiments de guerre des belligérants ne pourraient, dans le Canal ou ses ports d'accès, se ravitailler ou s'approvisionner que dans la mesure nécessaire pour gagner le port le plus voisin qui leur soit accessible et où ils puissent pourvoir à leurs besoins.

Le Délégué des Pays-Bas persiste à croire qu'une disposition ayant pour but de préciser ce que l'on entend par la mesure nécessaire, présenterait de sérieux avantages. Toutefois, la majorité de ses collègues pensant que la rédaction adoptée par la Sous-Commission sera interprétée conformément à ses vues, il ne croit pas devoir présenter un amendement.

Sir Julian Pauncefote partage l'opinion de M. Asser, mais ne croit pas non plus devoir soulever de nouveau la question.

No. 14.

[January 18, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, August 26, 1903.

Reimbursement of charges on telegrams stopped by Military Censor.

I HAVE the honour, by the direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you a letter from the War Office (Paper A), inclosing copies of letters received from the Post Office, on the subject of the reimbursement of charges on telegrams expressed in plain language which were stopped by the military censors during the recent war in South Africa.

In this connection, I am to draw attention to your Report of the 11th June, 1901 (Paper B), in which the opinion is expressed that the action of His Majesty's Government in stopping telegrams of this class was justified under Article VIII of the International Telegraph Convention, and that the view taken by the Postmaster-General in the letter from that Department of the 11th May, 1901 (Paper C), as to the transmission of telegrams "at the sender's risk" is sound.

It will be observed from the letter of the 30th August, 1901 (Inclosure 1 in Paper A), from the Post Office to the War Office, that it was decided to reimburse the charges on all telegrams in plain language (inclusive of those composed in any of the codes authorized through the medium of the International Bureau) which have been stopped, mutilated, or delayed by the censors; and that, although His Majesty's Government are desirous that some understanding should be arrived at as to the value of a notification of "sender's risk," they do not, as at present advised, consider that it would be expedient to raise the matter with the Telegraph Union.

At the recent Telegraph Conference, on the motion of Germany, it was decided to amend the detailed Regulation relative to the stoppage of telegrams or the suspension of a telegraphic service, by extending the obligation to give notice to the office of origin, which previously arose only in the case where a particular telegram was stopped, to the case of a general suspension of service.

This obligation was, however, modified by a condition that it should not apply where the stopping Administration considered it would be prejudicial to the interests of the State to give such a notice.

A copy of the Regulation, as well as of the two Articles of the Convention to which it refers, is forwarded for reference.

The Regulation as altered seems to have little effect, since the obligation to advise the senders in the case of stoppage of particular telegrams is obviously inappropriate to the general suspension of a service, and, moreover, the saving clause at the end of the addition leaves it entirely in the discretion of the stopping Administration to give notice or not.

The fact that the subject has been discussed in the Conference, and a Regulation on the subject framed, seems, however, to make it the more important that in any future case of censorship the Government should, as is suggested in the following observations, make it clear that it is acting entirely outside the provisions of the Convention.

It has accordingly been decided to modify the form of Notification on the next occasion when a censorship of telegrams has to be established, so as to make it clear that, so far as the Convention is concerned, His Majesty's Government are exercising their right under Article VIII of stopping all telegrams; but that as an act of grace, they will not object to telegrams in plain language being sent forward, on the understanding that such telegrams are sent subject to the liability to be stopped, delayed or otherwise dealt with at the point in question; and that the sender relinquishes all claim to reimbursement in the event of such telegrams being so stopped, delayed, or altered.

I am to inclose the draft of two forms of Notification (which have been drafted by the Solicitor to the Post Office, Papers D and E), the first announcing the suspension of the telegraphic service, the second, that telegrams of certain kinds may be sent subject to the chance of stoppage or delay or other treatment at the discretion of the suspending authority. The second Notice has been drafted to meet the case of a censorship similar to that notified in the case of South and East Africa in November 1899—that is, it is framed on the assumption (1) that the telegrams of neutral Governments in secret language will not be permitted to pass, (2) that telegrams in authorized codes, if allowed at all, will not be permitted at the outset, but will only be sanctioned by a subsequent relaxation of the censorship originally imposed. Should it, however, be decided on the occasion of a future censorship to depart from the course adopted in 1899 with regard to either of these points, the wording of the draft Notification could readily be altered.

The object of the Notification is to make it clear that the Government in transmitting telegrams is relaxing its power of suspending the telegraphic service entirely, and is not, therefore, acting under the ordinary provisions of the International Convention, but merely transmitting telegrams, if their transmission can be properly allowed, as an act of grace and favour.

It is stated on the part of the Post Office that during the last military censorship, telegrams were sometimes altered and forwarded as altered. Liability to alteration should, therefore, be covered by the general words used in the Notification.

I am to invite your special attention to the wording of that portion of the Notification which is intended to relieve His Majesty's Government of the obligation to compensate, and to request that, in taking these papers into your consideration, you will favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether the draft Notifications are such as might properly be issued by His Majesty's Government under Article VIII of the International Telegraph Convention in the event of the establishment at any future time of a censorship of telegrams being deemed by them to be necessary, or whether its terms may be advantageously altered or modified, and, if so, in what respect.

Lord Lansdowne would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations upon the matter which you may be good enough to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

List of Papers.

(A.)	War Office		October 6, 1902.
(B.)	Law Officers' Report	(Confidential 7733, p. 19)	June 11, 1901.
(C.)	Post Office		May 11, „
(D.)	Draft Form of Notification
(E.)	Ditto ditto
(F.)	Regulations of Telegraph Convention and annexes (Confidential 7993*, pp. 3 and 24), London Revision, 1903.

1904

Report.

We see no objection to the draft Notifications, and have no observations to make.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
January 18, 1904.

Annex.

Draft Notification of Suspension of Telegraphic Service.

HIS Britannic Majesty's Government find themselves under the necessity of availing themselves of the power reserved under Article VIII of the International Telegraph Convention to suspend entirely the transmission of telegrams to and from at

R. B. F.
E. C.

Draft Notification as to Provisional Use of Suspended Telegraphic Service.

WHILST maintaining the Notification of the instant, of the suspension under Article VIII of the International Telegraph Convention of the transmission of telegrams to and from at , His Britannic Majesty's Government, with a view to minimize inconvenience to the public, will, until further notice, permit the transmission of such telegrams in plain language as the public choose to send; on the understanding that such telegrams are subject to censure by the British military authorities; that they may be stopped, delayed or otherwise dealt with, in all respects at the discretion of those authorities, and without notice to the senders; and that no claims in respect of them, whether for the reimbursement of the sum paid for transmission or otherwise, will be considered by His Majesty's Government in any circumstances whatever. It is, moreover, essential that such telegrams should bear the sender's signature at the end of the text; otherwise they are liable to be stopped until the name is notified by paid telegram.

R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 15.

[February 25, 1904.]

(No. 1.)

The Marquess of Lansdowne to Sir C. Eliot.

(Treaty.)
(Telegraphic.) Foreign Office, February 10, 1904.

Russo-Japanese war: Supply of coal to belligerents in Zanzibar waters. Position of the Protectorate.

[RUSSIA and Japan war.]

No coal should be supplied to any belligerent vessels except on a written declaration by the Officer Commanding that it is for the specific purpose of enabling them to proceed direct to the nearest port of their own country or other nearer named neutral destination with reference to which the supply of coal is given.

Coal should not be supplied at all if there is reasonable ground for supposing that the coal is in fact to be used for another purpose.

(No. 2.)

Sir C. Eliot to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received February 10.)

(No. 46.)
(Telegraphic.) Nairobi, February 10, 1904.

YOUR telegram, Treaty, 10th February. Does it apply to Government coal only, or am I bound to control private firms? Indians have been buying up coal.

Minutes.

Qy. answer. The Rule, for terms of which see "London Gazette" of the 26th April, 1898, inclosed in Treaty Circular of same date, is applicable to all persons over whom His Majesty exercises jurisdiction in territorial waters of Protectorate.

Mr. Davidson.

W. M.

Foreign Office, February 11, 1904.

I should have thought that it would have been clear to Sir C. Eliot that these Rules would be absolutely nugatory if they were not of application to the supply of coal by private individuals.

The reply should be that the Rules are applicable to all persons in the Protectorate over whom His Majesty exercises jurisdiction.

Ought we not to suggest that the Sultan of Zanzibar should issue similar Rules with regard to his own subjects?

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 11, 1904.

The Sultan of Zanzibar did not issue any Proclamation of Neutrality at the time of the Spanish-American war, but I think Sir C. Eliot might be instructed to suggest to him that it might be well for him to adopt a neutral attitude, to make some public announcement of his intention to do so, and, by way of carrying it out, to enjoin his subjects to observe, as far as possible, the principles of the English Rules.

W. M.

Foreign Office, February 12, 1904.

But if the Sultan did not issue a Proclamation of Neutrality in 1898, we must pause before advising him to do so now. I was not suggesting that he should issue a Proclamation of Neutrality, but that he should, by issuing the rules as to coaling, make them binding on his subjects.

A Proclamation of Neutrality is a matter of external international relations as opposed to internal administration, and, in my opinion, would fall more properly within the domain of the Suzerain who is responsible for those external relations, than of the Sovereign whose foreign relations have been placed under the protection of the Suzerain.

But we had better obtain a Memorandum from the Library (the point has surely been discussed before), and when we have obtained all the available material in the way of fact and precedent, we should consult the Law Officers.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 12, 1904.

1904

Three months' Rule as to Coaling, and its application to British Protectorates.

I feel some doubt whether they could refuse to coal a ship at Zanzibar (if the contingency arose) on the ground that it had coaled at Aden, e.g., within the preceding three months. That is why I have put in "as far as possible."

W. M.

This is an important question, and I am glad Mr. Maycock has raised it so that it may be considered.

Personally, however, I am strongly of opinion that the three months' rule applies to British Protectorate ports as well as to British dominion ports.

His Majesty is responsible for the observance of neutrality by His Majesty's Protectorates, the external and international relations of which are entirely under His Majesty's control.

It is the essence of a Protectorate that the Suzerain or Protecting Power controls its external relations, while the Sovereign is concerned with its internal and domestic policy.

If a Russian cruiser which had coaled at Aden applied within three months for coal at Zanzibar she ought to be refused coal.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 12, 1904.

Seen by Mr. Hurst.

Foreign Office, February 14, 1904.

Breach of Neutrality Rules by private individuals.

There is some doubt whether these neutrality rules can be enforced in the case of recalcitrant private British subjects, who insist on breaking them, unless such breach happens also to amount to a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

To give an example: suppose a Russian vessel, which has already had coal within the last three months at Singapore, puts into Colombo and asks for more coal, she is, of course, refused coal from Government yards, but there are private coal yards there.

Unless the supplying of coal from such a private yard was in such quantity as to amount to an augmenting of the vessel's equipment for war (section 10 of the Foreign Enlistment Act), it seems to me extremely doubtful whether a private individual, disregarding the three months' rule, could be punished.

Other instances might be given.

Mr. Cox shares my doubts, and I think this point ought to be considered by the Law Officers.

These individuals would, of course, incur His Majesty's high displeasure, and they might be indirectly punished in other ways; but, meanwhile, if they get a famine price per ton for their Welsh steam coal, this would afford them some slight consolation perhaps.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 12, 1904.

Seen by Mr. Hurst.

I felt pretty sure that a similar case had arisen during the Spanish-American war, and Mr. Maycock has since found the reference to it.

On that occasion I expressed a similar opinion to that expressed on the preceding page—and the Law Officers concurred in it—so that we may consider this question settled

Perhaps Mr. Maycock would kindly add the exact reference for future convenience in dealing with the question should it actually arise in practice.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 13, 1904.

Seen by Mr. Hurst.

C. H.

I have not found any instance of the question having arisen as to the supply of coal to belligerent vessels by private individuals in British ports, but it would seem from the wording of Rule 3 in Lord Lansdowne's letter to the Public Offices, of the 10th February, 1904, that all coal is included within the meaning of the rule.

The rule says: "No ship of war shall hereafter be permitted to take in any supplies, except so much coal only as may be sufficient to carry such vessel to the nearest port," &c.

It is the ship of war which is forbidden to receive the coal, rather than the individual who is forbidden to supply it; and the special permission referred to in the case of further supplies within three months must therefore be intended to apply to the ship and not to the persons from whom the coal would be obtained. But there seem to be no cases recorded in our indexes in which the working of the rule is demonstrated.

The question of the application of the neutrality rules to British Protectorates in the matter of recoaling within three months was raised during the war between Spain and the United States in 1898, when it was decided that they applied equally to Protectorates and to Colonies (Colonial Office, 1st July, 1898).

Instructions in this sense were issued by the Colonial Office and concurred in by the Foreign Office. (To Colonial Office, 27th April, 1898.)

In the case of Sarawak, Rajah Brooke issued a Proclamation of Neutrality on his own account; as to which Mr. Davidson observed, in a Minute dated the 16th June, 1898: "I should doubt, moreover, whether, as a matter of policy, it is desirable that Rajah Brooke should magnify his sovereignty by issuing proclamations of his own motion." (Acting Consul-General Swettenham, No. 1, 16th May, 1898.)

(Signed) A. H. OAKES.

Foreign Office, February 13, 1904.

Mr. Davidson.—C. H.

There is no doubt at all that the rule is meant to apply to the supply of coal by private individuals as well as from Government sources. The rule would be quite nugatory otherwise.

Technically the rule as to no further supply within three months may be worded against the foreign public ship, but practically we should have to enforce its observance by restraining the private individual, and complaining of the conduct of the ship to the Government of the ship's nationality. We could not use force or coercive measures to a foreign man-of-war with whose nation we were at peace, except in an extreme case, as by international usage and courtesy she is not amenable to the ordinary law of any country but her own, and no other law runs on board of her while she is in commission but that of her own country.

Moreover, if a British subject aided a foreign man-of-war to do something which that foreign man-of-war was forbidden to do by the Rules in question, such British subject would himself be violating those Rules.

The question is whether, as the law now stands, such British subject could be punished, unless what he did amounted to an offence against the Foreign Enlistment Act. I doubt whether he could be punished, as a breach of these Rules—the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act apart—is not, so far as I know, a statutory offence, nor is it, I think, an offence at common law.

If this be the correct view, legislation is required on the subject, which, so far as our Protectorates and Crown Colonies are concerned, can readily be passed, but which, so far as this country and the self-governing Colonies are concerned, would require an Imperial enactment.

1904

The case of Rajah Brooke differs materially from that of the Sultan of Zanzibar, but I did not propose that the Sultan of Zanzibar should issue a Proclamation of Neutrality. On the contrary, that is precisely what I deprecated in my previous Minute of yesterday's date.

But if the Sultan does not issue similar Rules, or in some way make them binding on his subjects, the Court at Zanzibar will not be able to enforce them quâ Zanzibar subjects. As regards foreigners, not subjects either of the protected or protecting State, whose nations still possess extra-territorial jurisdiction at Zanzibar, no means exist, so far as I can see, of making these Rules binding on them.

But Zanzibar is in this respect in a peculiar position, and in most other Protectorates this difficulty will not arise, as Great Britain possesses jurisdiction over all persons in the Protectorate.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 13, 1904.

It seems to me that legislation is required, both Imperial and Protectorate.

The supply of coal to a belligerent ship of war putting into a port in the British dominions does not appear to me to be touched by "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870."

The only section that can affect it is section 10, and, in my opinion, the supply of coal in port is not "equipping" within the meaning of the Act. The word is defined in section 30, and is used in other sections of the Act, and it appears to me to apply only to the fitting out and adapting of the ship for sea service either when first put into commission or at some intermediate stage, when she is overhauled, strengthened, or repaired, and that the word does not cover the supply of consumable stores at an intermediate port in the course of a voyage. I quite admit that when a vessel is being equipped the supply of coal may be a portion of such equipping.

If the supply of coal at a neutral port is "equipping" within the meaning of section 10, then the supply of any coal at all (even within the limits allowed by the neutrality rules) is a criminal offence, and the merchant is liable to be punished, because the supply requires the licence of His Majesty, and such licence must be under the Sign Manual, or by Order in Council, or by Proclamation and consequently the instructions of the Secretary of State could not be pleaded as such licence.

There appears to me to be a further difficulty with regard to Rule 2. How can a foreign merchant-vessel be compelled to respect the twenty-four hours' rule? It seems to me an astute Japanese merchant-vessel might play over again the comedy of the "Tuscarora" and the "Nashville," and indefinitely detain a Russian war-ship in a British harbour by slipping out whenever the war-ship wished to leave and so preventing the latter sailing for twenty-four hours, she herself returning within that period.

With a war-ship the case is, I suppose, different, because it would be contrary to custom to affect her by legislation, and if she refused to abide by the neutral's instructions it would be a casus belli.

It seems to me that immediate legislation is required throughout the British dominions to give legal sanction to the coaling rule, and perhaps also to make the twenty-four hours' rule binding on neutral merchantmen.

To facilitate discussion I have drawn up a short Bill which would meet the point —not, of course, as a final draft, but merely to give a concrete form to the discussion of the question.

The British possessions between Europe and Japan are all Crown Colonies (except Somaliland, which is a Protectorate), and the most expeditious form of legislation would probably be local enactments in each particular Colony, which would eventually be superseded by an Imperial Act.

Immediate steps ought also, I think, to be taken to extend the Foreign Enlistment Act to our Protectorates. This cannot be done by Act of Parliament; it must be effected either by Order in Council or local enactment; the latter would be quicker, and I annex also the draft of an East African Ordinance applying the Act to the Protectorate, with the necessary modifications, and adding sections to deal with the coaling and the twenty-four hours' rule points.

In Zanzibar, King's Regulations should be issued similar to the Ordinance passed in East Africa, and the Sultan should be instructed to issue a Decree embodying an abbreviated Foreign Enlistment Act, and then also to issue the coaling rules.

I think in this way all the points might be met.

C. J. B. H.

Foreign Office, February 14, 1904

Draft Bill.

Whereas it is expedient to make further provision for regulation of the conduct of His Majesty's subjects during the existence of hostilities between foreign States with which His Majesty is at peace:

Be it enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. This Act may be cited as "The Foreign Enlistment Amendment Act, 1904," and shall be read as one with "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," hereinafter called the principal Act.

2. This Act shall come into operation in the United Kingdom immediately on the passing thereof, and shall be proclaimed in every British possession by the Governor thereof as soon as may be after he receives notice of this Act, and shall come into operation in that British possession on the day of such Proclamation.

3. If any person, without the licence of His Majesty, supplies, or causes to be supplied, or is privy to the supply of, any coal, provisions, or other stores to any ship in the dominions of His Majesty, which, at the time of the supply was a ship in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with any friendly State, contrary to any rules or instructions issued by a Secretary of State or by the Governor of that possession,

Such person shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and shall be punishable by fine and imprisonment, with or without hard labour, or either of such punishments, at the discretion of the Court before which the offender is convicted; and the coal, provisions, or other stores in respect of which any such offence is committed, shall be forfeited to His Majesty.

4. If, during the continuance of any war in which His Majesty may be neutral, the Captain or other officer in command of any vessel of the mercantile marine of either of the belligerent Powers should, while the vessel is within any port of, or within the territorial waters adjacent to, the dominions of His Majesty, fail to comply with the instructions of the Harbour-master or any officer of Customs, or other public officer authorized in that behalf, as to the time or date at or before which the said vessel shall or shall not leave the said port or territorial waters, it shall be lawful for any of the officers mentioned in section 21 of the principal Act to seize and detain the said vessel in the manner provided by section 22 thereof until His Majesty's pleasure be known.

EAST AFRICA PROTECTORATE.

An Ordinance enacted by His Britannic Majesty's Commissioner for the East Africa Protectorate.

(L.S.)

,
Commissioner.

Mombasa. , 1904.

No. , of 1904.

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT.

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. This Ordinance may be cited as "The Foreign Enlistment Ordinance, 1904."

1904

2. "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870" (33 & 34 Vict., cap. 90), shall apply to the Protectorate with the following modifications and additions:—

The Commissioner shall be substituted for the Governor of a British possession; the Protectorate shall be substituted for a British possession;

Natives of the Protectorate shall be deemed to be British subjects for the purposes of the said Act.

If any person, without the licence of His Majesty, supplies, or causes to be supplied, or is privy to the supply of, any coal, provisions, or other stores to any ship in the Protectorate which at the time of the supply was a ship in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with any friendly State, contrary to any rules or instructions issued by a Secretary of State or by the Commissioner, such person shall be guilty of an offence, and shall be liable on conviction to be fined or imprisoned, either with or without hard labour, or both fined and imprisoned, in the discretion of the Court before whom he is convicted, and the coal, provisions, or other stores shall be forfeited.

4. If, during the continuance of any war in which His Majesty may be neutral, the Captain or other officer in command of any vessel of the mercantile marine of either of the belligerent Powers, should, while the vessel is within a port or within the territorial waters of the Protectorate, fail to comply with the instructions of any public officer of the Administration as to the time or date at or before which the vessel shall or shall not leave the said port or territorial waters, it shall be lawful for any public officer to seize and detain the vessel in the manner laid down in section 22 of the said Act until His Majesty's pleasure be known.

(Signed) , Commissioner.

Mombasa, 1904.

Solicitor-General,

We can hardly do anything in this matter, at any rate so far as legislation of any kind may be involved, until the Attorney-General and yourself can consider the papers and questions together.

I would therefore propose that, as soon as you are ready, Cox of the Colonial Office, Hurst, and myself should come down to the House of Commons and have a conference with you both.

Meanwhile, if you wish to see me, will you send me a line, and I will come down any time to-morrow afternoon (Tuesday) that you like to appoint.

Hurst has made a rough draft of an Imperial Bill and of an Ordinance, which I send on as they may be useful for consideration. He has had to draft them in a great hurry, and desires your indulgence in consequence with regard to them

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 15, 1904.

Memorandum by Law Officers.

(B.)

The rules apply to all coal. The vessel is admitted only on terms of complying with the Regulations, and we think that in practice this would be found sufficient without Imperial legislation to prevent coal being taken on board in excess of the Regulations.

R. B. F.
E. C.

February 25, 1904.

We should instruct Sir C. Eliot in this sense in reply to his telegram of the 11th February.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 26, 1904.

The Law Officers consider that, on the whole, it is unnecessary and inexpedient to legislate.

They think Imperial legislation would be practically impossible unless some case of a glaring description, showing its necessity, could be produced; and as Imperial legislation is not at present, at any rate, within the range of practical politics, they consider that it would be objectionable from the point of view of symmetry and congruity to legislate for Crown Colonies by Ordinance or for Protectorates by Order in Council.

This view was originally expressed by the Solicitor-General at a Conference at which Mr. Bertram Cox, on behalf of the Colonial Office, and Mr. Hurst and myself were present.

They have since been confirmed by the Law Officers at a conference which I had with them yesterday, and in a short Memorandum (marked "B") on supply of coal, and dated the 25th February, 1904.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 26, 1904.

Reply in wording of Law Officers' Memorandum.

C. H.

Foreign Office, February 26, 1904.

No. 16.

[February 25 and 29, 1904.]

(No. 1.)

The Earl of Cromer to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received February 23.)

(Treaty.)
(Telegraphic.)

Cairo, February 23, 1904.

. . . . Egyptian Rules of Neutrality.

French translation is rather loose, but the two mean substantially the same thing. We hardly think a published alteration necessary.

Minutes.

Russo-Japanese War: Egyptian Rules of Neutrality.

With all respect to Lord Cromer, I do not think that "supplying in a place" means at all the same thing as "supplying from a place.

There is a very substantial difference indeed, as I pointed out in my previous Minute. It is not a mere question of verbal inaccuracy and loose translation.

For instance, contraband goods put on board a neutral vessel at Alexandria in the ordinary course of commerce by a private firm, and consigned to a hostile destination, are clearly included within the words "supplied . . . . from any place within the territorial jurisdiction of the Egyptian Government.

According to our view, however, such a proceeding is a perfectly legitimate commercial transaction, to be carried out subject to the risks of the ship being stopped on the high seas and taken in for adjudication.

In such a case, however, the contraband of war has clearly not been supplied "dans le domaine de la juridiction territoriale du Gouvernement Égyptien."

I must say, having regard to our own attitude on this matter, I regard the mistake as of very considerable importance, especially as the English version or counterpart is published in the "Journal Officiel du Gouvernement Égyptien," and may, therefore, be appealed to as authoritative.

Lord Cromer, moreover, speaks of the "French translation," which looks as though the Rules had originally been framed in English, in which case the mistake would be even more important than if the master version of the Rules had been (as I supposed was the case) in French, and the English translation, or translation from the French, had been "rather loose."

1904

On a more careful consideration, however, of the language of Article 9, there arises an even more important point than the above-mentioned material difference between the two versions (English and French) of these Rules, and that is that both versions of that Article go far beyond the accepted English doctrine as to the supply of contraband by private individuals in the way of trade to a belligerent.

According to the more benignant (French) version of Article 9, it would be unlawful for and forbidden to a private firm trading at Alexandria (e.g.) to furnish contraband goods to the Agents of the Japanese Government at or in that place, to be by those Agents thence shipped on board a neutral merchant-vessel to their hostile destination.

This, of course, goes far beyond the limitations to the English doctrine of absolute freedom of commerce in contraband on the part of private individuals, subject to the ordinary risks of transit on the high seas.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 25, 1904.

[See opinion on both points of the Law Officers, whom I have just seen at the House of Commons.]

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 25, 1904, 6·30 P.M.

Memorandum by Law Officers.

It appears to us that the difference between the English and French versions of Article 9 of the Proclamation of the 12th February, 1904, is material. The former prohibits the supply from any port, &c.; the latter prohibits only a supply to the belligerent in the port, &c.

But, apart from this, we desire to call attention to the wide scope of Article 9 in either version. The British doctrine (i.e., that of His Majesty's Government) prohibits supply to vessels of war in British territory, and all fitting out or equipping of expeditions or vessels; it does not prohibit the sale of any articles, such as arms, &c., to Agents of belligerents within the neutral territory. Article 9 prohibits the sale of arms, &c., to Agents of belligerents in Egypt. This appears to us to be in excess of any rule of neutrality which has yet been recognized.

R. B. F.
E. C.

February 25, 1904.

(No. 2.)

The Earl of Cromer to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received February 27.)

(No. 25. Treaty.)
(Telegraphic.) Cairo, February 27, 1904.

YOUR telegram of yesterday. Egyptian Rules of Neutrality.

Please telegraph text in English which you would propose in the place of the present Rule 9.

Minutes.

I am inclined to think it would be as well to withdraw it bodily. It would not be easy to modify it so as to make it conform to any procedure of this country.

Mr. Davidson.

W. M.

Foreign Office, February 27, 1904.

C. H.

I do not think we can advise that it should be bodily withdrawn, since if it were so withdrawn, there would be no rule to prevent supply of arms, &c., to a belligerent ship already existing, unless such supply constituted a building, an equipping, or an altering of such ship so as to increase its warlike force within the territorial jurisdiction of the Egyptian Government. The word "altering" applies to the ship itself apparently, and would hardly cover the shipment of a large quantity of ammunition on board her.

The difficulty might possibly be met by adding a few words to Rule 10, and omitting Rule 9, making then the present Rule 10, as altered, into Rule 9.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 29, 1904.

The Attorney-General.
The Solicitor-General.

Memorandum by Law Officers.

We suggest that Rule 9 might be omitted, inserting in Rule 4, before "supplies," the words "arms, ammunition, equipment, or any."

We would further suggest that, in Rule 10, the words from "unless" (inclusive) to the end of the clause should be omitted, and the following substituted: "If such ship is intended for the service of either belligerent Power."

Perhaps the best plan would be to withdraw all the present Rules, and substitute Rules as altered.

R. B. F.
E. C.

House of Commons, February 29, 1904.

No. 17.

[March 7, 1904.]

The Earl of Cromer to the Marquess of Lansdowne.

(No. 20. Treaty)
(Telegraphic.) Cairo, February 23, 1904, 11·22 A.M.

THE "Smolensk," which passed southward a few days ago and received 2,400 tons of coal, is now in the Canal proceeding northward. Port authorities have been instructed, in the event of Captain asking for coal, to refuse it pending examination of question.

Russo-Japanese War: As to application of three months' rule respecting coaling of belligerents.

Please telegraph as soon as possible whether you consider three months' limit, which applies to Egyptian ports outside Canal, should or should not be applied to the Canal ports. It appears to us that it should be applied, in order to prevent belligerents making use of Canal ports as a base of operations.

1904

Minutes.

See telegram of the 19th February, sent after reference to Law Officers.

I think that the "extra Canal" Rule (No. 4), under which no further supply should be given for three months, should certainly be applied, in practice, to the Canal ports, and since the Law Officers consider that the "Smolensk" is within Rule 8, then she should be given no further supply of coal at Port Saïd.

W. M.

Foreign Office, February 23, 1904.

I do not think that the Canal ports are quite in the same position as ordinary neutral ports. One of the main objects of the Canal Rules is to clear the Canal of belligerent vessels as soon as possible, and they are therefore, with this end in view, given coal, not necessarily enough to take them to the nearest port of their own country or to some nearer neutral destination, but merely enough to take the vessel to "the nearest accessible port at which she can obtain the supplies" (including the coal) "necessary for the continuation of her voyage."

Under the Canal Rules, therefore, the supply of coal is more limited than under our own, or the "Egyptian-ports-proper" neutral Rules.

For instance, the "Smolensk" at Suez could only have enough coal to take her to Perim–Aden; but if Suez were an Egyptian port proper, she could have enough coal to take her to the nearest Russian port. So at Port Saïd she would only get enough coal to take her (say) to Alexandria, if she had passed the Canal previously. But at Alexandria she could have enough to take her to Libau, provided she had room to store coal for a 5,000-mile voyage in her bunkers.

It must also be remembered that, if the three-months Rule is to be applied to Canal ports, the result might be that a belligerent vessel which turned up at Port Saïd within three months of her having been coaled at either Port Saïd or Suez would have to be kept at Port Saïd until the three months had expired, thereby blocking the Canal, or, at any rate, unduly prolonging her stay at a Canal port.

On the whole, I think that it would be a mistake to apply the three-months Rule to the Canal ports.

If a case should arise in which there is good reason to suspect that the Canal is being used as a base of operations, and not merely in the course of bonâ fide and legitimate voyaging from the Mediterranean to the Pacific, or vice-versâ, then such a case would have to be dealt with on its merits or demerits.

It will be seen from the later telegram, just received from Lord Cromer, that this particular case is not now so pressing, as the "Smolensk" is found to have 1,500 tons of coal on board, and does not ask for more.

As soon as Lord Lansdowne has seen these Minutes, and added anything he wishes to them, I would propose to send them to the Law Officers, and to defer instructing Lord Cromer until we have obtained their views.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 23, 1904.

It is now only the question of principle that has to be decided.

C. H.

Send to Law Officers at once.

L.

Mr. Davidson.

C. H.

Attorney-General.
Solicitor-General.

Would you be good enough to give your views on this question, so that Lord Cromer may be instructed as soon as possible. I think that all the necessary papers are put up herewith, but if you want any further information I will come down to the House of Commons.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 23, 1904.

---

* * * * * *

Memorandum by Law Officers.—(Received March 7, 1904.)

It is clearly necessary to prevent the Suez Canal ports being used by war vessels of belligerents as a base of operations, as this would be an infraction of neutrality. It is with this object that the three-months Rule has been generally adopted, and we think that it would afford a good working rule as regards the Suez Canal ports. We therefore suggest that it would probably be convenient if it were adopted in practice for the purpose of the Suez Canal ports, subject to the exigencies of any special cases in which it may be necessary to prevent a block of the Canal.

R. B. F.
E. C.

[In Colonial Office letter of April 30, 1904.]

No. 17A.

[March 19, 1904.]

Law Officers of the Crown to Colonial Office.

Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870: Extension of operation of to new Colonies.

Sir, Royal Courts of Justice, March 19, 1904.

WE were honoured with your commands signified in Mr. H. Bertram Cox' letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by you to request the favour of our Reports on certain questions which had arisen with regard to the application of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," to certain parts of His Majesty's dominions.

That the 3rd section of that Act (33 and 34 Vict., cap. 90) provided that the Act should be proclaimed in every Colony by the Governor thereof as soon as might be after he received notice of the Act, and should come into operation in that British possession on the day of such Proclamation.

That the Act when passed was sent out to the Governors of the British Colonies then in existence and was duly proclaimed and brought into operation, but that at various dates since that time new possessions had been acquired by cession or by conquest, and that the question had now arisen how far, if at all, the Act had been brought into operation in those Colonies.

That the British possessions to which Mr. Bertram Cox was to call our attention were Fiji, Ashanti, the Transvaal, the Orange River Colony, Griqualand West, Bechuanaland, Zululand, and Basutoland.

That Fiji was acquired by cession from the Chiefs and people of the islands on the 10th October, 1874, and was erected into a separate Colony by letters patent, dated the 2nd January, 1875.

That "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," did not seem ever to have been proclaimed in Fiji, but that by section 26 of "The Supreme Court Ordinance, 1875," passed in that Colony, it was provided that the common law, the rules of equity, and the Statutes of general application which were in force on the 2nd January, 1875, should be in force in the Colony.

That you assumed that the Foreign Enlistment Act, which applied to all of His Majesty's subjects, was a Statute of general application within the meaning of the Ordinance, and that, therefore, that Act might be considered as being in force in Fiji, notwithstanding that it had not been formally proclaimed there, as prescribed by section 3 of that Act.

That Ashanti was annexed to, and became part of His Majesty's dominions under an Order in Council of the 26th September, 1901.

That no Proclamation under the Foreign Enlistment Act had been made within Ashanti, and that it was presumed that a Proclamation should be at once issued, unless, having regard to the length of time which had elapsed since the date of annexation, it was desirable to extend that Act to Ashanti by the passing of an Ordinance under the provisions of section 7 of that Order in Council.

That the Transvaal was annexed on the 1st September, 1900, and the Orange River Colony on the 24th May, 1900.

That a telegram was sent to Lord Milner on the 19th February last, instructing him to proclaim the Foreign Enlistment Act in both Colonies, if that step had not already been taken, but that there would be no difficulty in passing an Ordinance in each of those Colonies should we consider that the steps already taken were insufficient.

That Griqualand West was annexed to the Cape Colony by Act 39 of 1877, which came into operation on the 15th August, 1879.

That by a Proclamation dated the 28th September, 1870, the Foreign Enlistment Act was proclaimed in the Cape Colony, and that Mr. Cox was to inquire whether—under the Act of 1877, which annexed Griqualand West to the Cape Colony—the Foreign Enlistment Act came into effect within the Province of Griqualand West, or whether legislation was necessary.

That the Province of British Bechuanaland was annexed to Cape Colony by Act 41 of 1895, and that it was presumed that the provisions of section 2 of that Act brought the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act, which were—as already pointed out—at that time in force in the Cape Colony, into operation within British Bechuanaland.

That Zululand was annexed to Natal under the operation of letters patent of the 1st December, 1897, and the Zululand Annexation Act. That Mr. Cox was to refer us to the Acts of the Colony collected under the title "Zululand" in the third volume of the Consolidated Statutes of Natal, and that he was to request us to report whether, under the provisions of those Acts, the Foreign Enlistment Act was in force within the Province of Zululand.

That Basutoland was annexed to the Cape Colony by an Act of the Colonial Legislature No. 12 of 1871, but that it was provided by that Act that it should not be subject to the general law of the Cape Colony.

That by Act No. 34 of 1883, which was assented to by an Order in Council, Basutoland was disannexed from the Cape Colony and put under the direct control of the High Commissioner for South Africa, who was empowered to make laws by Proclamation.

That no Proclamation bringing into force the Foreign Enlistment Act had apparently ever been passed, and that Mr. Cox was to inquire whether a Proclamation should be passed in the nature of an Ordinance bringing the Act into operation, or whether it should be proclaimed under the provisions of section 3 of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to request us to take these papers into our consideration, and report—

1. What was the proper meaning to be assigned to the expression "Statutes of general application" in section 26 of the Supreme Court Ordinance of Fiji, and whether, under that section, the Foreign Enlistment Act might be considered to be in force in Fiji?

2. Whether the Foreign Enlistment Act should be proclaimed in Ashanti, or whether an Ordinance should be passed declaring it to be in force within that territory.

3. Whether Ordinances should be passed in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony, bringing the Foreign Enlistment Act into force, or whether the Proclamation made by Lord Milner under section 3 of the Act would be sufficient to insure its taking effect within those Colonies.

4. Whether the Foreign Enlistment Act was in force within Griqualand West, Bechuanaland, Zululand, and Basutoland, and, if not, what steps should be taken to bring it into operation within those parts of His Majesty's dominions?

5. Generally.

We have taken the papers into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report—

1. That, in our opinion, the expression "Statutes of general application" in section 26 of the Ordinance referred to would include the Foreign Enlistment Act, which, by section 2, extends to all the dominions of His Majesty. We think, however, that, having regard to the third section of the Act, it should be proclaimed in Fiji.

2. In Ashanti we think that an Ordinance should be passed applying the Foreign Enlistment Act, and that, after the passing of the Ordinance, the Act ought to be proclaimed.

3. In the Transvaal and Orange River Colony we think that Ordinances putting the Act in force should be passed, and that then Proclamation should be again made.

4. In the case of Griqualand West, we think there should be legislation. We do not consider that it would be safe, having regard to section 27 of the Act of Annexation, to assume that the Foreign Enlistment Act came into force when that province was annexed.

In the case of British Bechuanaland no legislation is necessary, as the Act is already in force there.

As regards Zululand, there must be legislation under section 4 of the Colonial Act No. 37 of 1897.

In the case of Basutoland, a Proclamation in the nature of an Ordinance should be passed.

5. We have nothing to add.

We have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

1904

[Home Office.]

No. 17^{B}.

See their letter of April 7, 1904.

[March 23, 1904.]

Case.

Russo-Japanese war: Torpedo-boat bought by foreigner [M. Fontaine] during progress of.

THE Secretary of State has received the following letter from Palmer's Shipbuilding and Iron Company (Limited):—

"Sir, "Jarrow, March 15, 1904.

"We have almost ready for sea a torpedo-boat destroyer which was built for the purpose of sale to the British Government, as she is similar in type to others built and building. The vessel has been offered to the Government, but as they wished certain alterations made which we could not conform to, we have been obliged to try and dispose of her elsewhere. We have had several offers for her lately, and we now have a firm offer from a gentleman who has done a large business in buying and selling vessels to the Turkish, Spanish, Argentine Republic, and other Governments. The vessel is unarmed, and will be delivered to the purchaser on the Tyne, but to what Power we do not know.

"We thought it advisable, owing to the present state of affairs in the East, to apply to you for a licence to sell and to dispatch the vessel from the Tyne, as she now lies without armament or arms of any kind, and as we wish to dispose of the business as early as possible, we should feel obliged by your granting the necessary licence.

"We have, &c.
"For Palmer's Shipbuilding and Iron Company (Limited), (Signed)
"Secretary."

A representative of the Company has been informed that the matter would be submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown, without whose advice the Secretary of State could not take action in the matter, and also that it was impossible for the Secretary of State to say at this stage what proof of destination of the torpedo-boat destroyer referred to the Law Officers would require.

The Company will therefore be prepared to furnish the Law Officers with such further information, and any other material they may require, in order to enable them to form an opinion as to the steps which should be taken with reference to the proposed sale.

The Law Officers will notice that the application made to the Secretary of State is one for a licence to sell and dispatch the vessel. Presumably the licence referred to would be a licence under section 8 of the Foreign Enlistment Act (33 and 34 Vict., cap. 90). Such licences, however, appear to be suitable for cases only in which ships are built, equipped, or dispatched with intent, or knowledge, or reasonable cause for believing that they are to be employed in the naval or military service of a belligerent. Presumably the Law Officers would not advise that a ship built with such intent or knowledge should be allowed to leave this country.

If the Law Officers are satisfied by inquiry that there is no doubt that the purchaser of the ship proposes to buy it on behalf of the Government of some country which is not at war with any friendly Power, it is requested that they will advise whether any further steps are required beyond a written communication from the Secretary of State to the effect that he sees no reason for interfering in the matter of the purchase or dispatch of the ship whether with or without armament.

If, on the other hand, they consider that there is reasonable and probable cause, within the meaning of section 23 of the Act, for believing that the ship is about to be dispatched contrary to the provisions of the Act, their advice is asked as to whether the Secretary of State should inform Messrs. Palmer that if the sale is completed it will be his duty to take proceedings under the said section with a view to the legal proceedings for the condemnation or release of the ship, provided for by that section, being instituted.

The Secretary of State will also be obliged if the Law Officers will advise generally on the case, and on the procedure to be followed by the Secretary of State.

Opinion.

The licence for the dispatch of the vessel to be employed in the service of a belligerent should not be granted.

The fact that such a licence has been applied for creates a strong suspicion that it is proposed to dispatch the vessel for service with a belligerent Power. It is for the Secretary of State to satisfy himself whether there is reasonable and probable cause for believing that this is so, and, if he is so satisfied, to exercise the powers conferred upon him by section 23 of the Act.

If Messrs. Palmer are able to give explanations which dispel the suspicion to which we have adverted, the Secretary of State should not exercise his powers under section 23, but we see no occasion for his sending any notice or formal intimation to this effect.

Messrs. Palmer appear to be disposed to treat the Secretary of State with the utmost frankness, but he must be, of course, careful to see that nothing takes place which would entitle either belligerent to complain of a breach of neutrality on the part of this country.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Law Officers' Department,
March 23, 1904.

No. 18.

[August 15, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, July 26, 1904.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Jurisdiction Neutrality Order in Council: as to extending to Protectorates, &c.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the accompanying draft of an Order in Council, entitled "The Foreign Jurisdiction Neutrality Order in Council."

"The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," applies only to the British dominions, and no means exist of enforcing the observance of neutrality during a war between foreign Powers, either by the inhabitants of Protectorates which are technically not part of the British dominions, nor by British subjects and other persons over whom His Majesty possesses jurisdiction in foreign countries, such as Turkey and China.

Lord Lansdowne considers it undesirable that this state of things should continue, and, after consultation with the Colonial Office, it has been decided that Orders in Council should be prepared to meet the above object.

His Lordship is informed that Mr. Secretary Lyttelton has already forwarded for your consideration the draft of an Order which enacts for the Protectorates (including those administered by this Department) provisions similar to those contained in "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870"; and the draft now inclosed has been prepared to effect the same purpose for the foreign Jurisdictions of the Crown.

The question, of course, arises whether there is any obligation on His Majesty to enforce neutrality on British subjects in such foreign countries, and whether it is not for the local Sovereign to do so; but Lord Lansdowne considers that, whatever may be the answer to the abstract question, it is desirable that machinery should exist enabling the British authorities to act where they consider it desirable.

The draft Order follows as closely as may be the wording of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

No clause, however, is inserted corresponding to section 14 of the Act, as, the jurisdiction of His Majesty being a personal one and not territorial, it does not appear that any vessel that would be illegal prize would be subject to that jurisdiction.

No provision for the award of compensation has been made, as it seems better that if any such payment is thought desirable in consequence of enforcing the Order, it should be made ex gratia.

A clause corresponding to section 17 has been omitted because it does not appear to be necessary, and provisions similar to section 18 of the Act already appear in the Orders in Council dealing with the particular jurisdictions.

1904

I am to request that you will be so good as to take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and inform his Lordship whether the terms of the draft Order in Council are such as may properly be submitted to the King in Council for His Majesty's approval.

His Lordship will also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ELDON GORST.

Report.

In our opinion the draft Order in Council, as altered and initialled by us, may properly be submitted to His Majesty for approval.* We presume that the effect of the omission of section 33 of the Foreign Enlistment Act has been considered—its omission creates a disparity between the effect of this Order and that of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
August 15, 1904.

Annex.

*NOTE.—The following alteration, indicated in erased type, was made by the Law Officers :—

10. If any person within the jurisdiction of the Court, and without the licence of His Majesty, by adding to the number of the guns, or by changing those on board for other guns, or by the addition of any equipment for war, increases or augments, or procures to be increased or augmented, or is knowingly concerned in increasing or augmenting the warlike force of any ship which at the time of her being within ~~the dominions of His Majesty~~ the jurisdiction aforesaid was a ship in the military or naval service of any foreign State at war with any friendly State, such person shall be guilty of an offence against this Order, and shall be punishable by fine and imprisonment, or either of such punishments, at the discretion of the Court before which the offender is convicted; and imprisonment, if awarded, may be either with or without hard labour.

No 19

[August 22-23, 1904.]

Foreign Office to Attorney-General.

Russo-Japanese war: "Askold' taking refuge at Shanghae.

Dear Mr. Attorney-General, Foreign Office, August 20, 1904.

I AM requested to send you these papers which deal with the "Askold," the Russian cruiser that got to Shanghae after the naval battle, a good deal knocked about. Lord Lansdowne would like your opinion.

My previous Minute referred to in the one inclosed is in Ireland, but the purport of it was that international law allowed a belligerent cruiser to effect repairs in a neutral harbour, provided they were limited to rendering her seaworthy, and did not enhance her fighting power; that a vessel that reached Shanghae might be assumed not to have entered with a Japanese vessel in hot pursuit, and that therefore by entry into neutral waters Japan was not robbed of a prize; that there was no reason to apply at Shanghae the rule of disarmament that would be enforced at Wei-hai Wei, and has been enforced at Kiao-chao, which are both close to the scene of the sea fighting; that there was no reason why China should not apply to the "Askold" the rules she announced at the beginning of the war, which embodied the ordinary rule that a belligerent cruiser might use a Chinese port but must leave in twenty-four hours or as soon as necessary repairs were effected.

But there is the question which should come first: Are we in any way concerned at all?

Perhaps you would indicate your opinion whether if we are in any way concerned, what steps you think should be taken.

* * * * *

Very truly yours,
(Signed) C. J. B. HURST.

Annex.

The Marquess of Lansdowne to Mr. Campbell.—(Received August 19.)

(Telegraphic.) Lauragh, August 19, 1904.

SATOW'S telegram No. 176.

I should have thought responsibility lay entirely with Chinese, but if this is doubtful send papers to Attorney-General.

Minute.

Lord Lansdowne,

With reference to your telegram about the "Askold" at Shanghae, I felt no doubt that the responsibility was China's, but as Mr. Hurst seemed to think that, owing to the repairs being effected in a British-owned dock, and to our extra-territorial jurisdiction in China, the responsibility might be a divided one.

We decided to send the papers to the Attorney-General as you directed should be done if the case were not clear.

We also wrote Minutes drawing attention to the points involved.

After a further talk I had with him this morning, I think Mr. Hurst was ready to agree that, as there has been no indication whatever of a wish on the part of China to transfer the responsibility to us, it is not at all desirable that we should intervene.

But I believe it would be a good thing that we should be able to let Sir E. Satow know our view of the Case, as he might have to intervene later.

* * * * *

See telegram to Sir E. Satow, No. 123, August 26, 1904.

F. A. C.

Foreign Office, August 20, 1904.

Opinion of Attorney-General.

I think that this matter should be left to China to deal with.

China is responsible to Japan and to Russia for the observance of neutrality, and could not with truth allege that she has not the power to prevent the "Askold" from putting out to sea again after being equipped for warlike purposes.

No application has been made to Great Britain with regard to the action of British subjects, and the facts as to any such action are far from clear. The Order in Council applying the Foreign Enlistment Act is not yet in force in China, and I do not see that there is a case for advising China as to her action. She is mistress of the situation, and should be left to deal with it.

Of course circumstances might arise out of infractions of neutrality by British subjects in China which would give ground of complaint to China, and even to third Powers, and it is in view of such possibilities that the Order in Council is being passed; but such a case does not arise in the present instance.

It may be questionable whether any repairs at all should have been allowed at Shanghae, but this, as is pointed out in the Minutes of Mr. Campbell and Mr. Hurst,

---

* The Order as issued is contained in the "London Gazette" of the 28th October, 1904. [Library No. 8276*.]

1904

depends on questions of fact, and these are not before me, nor in view of the attitude of Japan as to repairs, not by way of warlike equipment, could this question apparently arise.

R. B. F.

Newton, Nairn, N.B.,
August 22, 1904.

Attorney-General to Mr. Hurst.

(Private.)
Newton, Nairn, N.B., August 23, 1904.

My dear Hurst,

I sent off the papers with my note on them yesterday.

To-day I have yours with Satow's further telegram.

My impression is that it was a case of taking refuge from hostile pursuit—but I daresay I haven't all the facts—and that the vessels ought to have been interned at the end of twenty-four hours, without allowing delay for any repairs at all. However, the Japs do not appear to insist on this.

Satow's instructions to the Consul seem very sensible.

The news of a reference to Peking, which I see in this morning's papers, may make it necessary for Satow to take part in advising the Chinese Government as to their action. The situation may easily become a very troublesome one.

* * * * * *

I hope China will be firm. I daresay she wants backing.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

No. 20.

[August 26, 1904.]

Foreign Office to Attorney-General.

Dear Mr. Attorney-General,
Foreign Office, August 25, 1904.

Seizure of Russian destroyer "Reshitelni" at Chefoo by the Japanese.

LORD LANSDOWNE is anxious that you should see the "apologia" of the Japanese Government for the seizure by two torpedo-boats of the Russian destroyer "Reshitelni" in the harbour of Chefoo. You will see from the other papers that the Japanese Government were advised to restore the vessel, but have declined.

I inclose two packets of telegrams which contain the history of the incident, one set of telegrams from Satow at Peking, and the other to and from MacDonald at Tôkiô.

No action is contemplated unless you think it necessary, but, of course, any general observations would be welcomed.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) C. J. B. HURST.

List of Papers.

Sir E. Satow	(No. 168. Telegraphic)	August 12, 1904.
Ditto	(No. 170. Telegraphic)	„ 14, „
Ditto	(No. 171. Telegraphic)	„ 14, „
Ditto	(No. 174. Telegraphic)	„ 17, „
Ditto	(No. 175. Telegraphic)	„ 17, „
Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 212. Telegraphic)	„ 12, „
Ditto	(No. 217. Telegraphic)	„ 15, „
Ditto	(No. 219. Telegraphic)	„ 16, „
Ditto	(No. 223. Telegraphic)	„ 18, „
To Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 113. Telegraphic)	„ 21, „
Sir C. MacDonald (contains "apologia" of the Japanese Government)	(No. 227. Telegraphic)	„ 22, „
Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 229. Telegraphic)	„ 24, „
Ditto	(No. 231. Telegraphic)	„ 24, „

Opinion of Attorney-General.

I do not see that there is any case for interference by His Majesty's Government.

The facts are in dispute, but it would appear that the Japanese may have a very good answer. China seems to be quite unable to enforce the observance of her neutrality by Russian vessels taking refuge in her ports, and it is alleged that the "Reshitelni" was not in fact disarmed, that she was using Chefoo for purposes of communications as to the war, and that Chefoo had been systematically so used by the Russians.

As between Russia and Japan the capture was good; it is China only that could complain, and her inability to prevent her ports being used substantially as a base of operations by Russia may afford a complete answer to any such complaints.

A very similar question may arise if Kuropatkin is forced over the frontier, and General Ma proves unable to intern him.

R. B. F.

Bradbury Private Hotel, North Berwick,
August 26, 1904.

No. 21.

[September 22, 1904.]

(No. 1.)

Sir C. Hardinge to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received September 17.)

(No. 129. Treaty.)
(Telegraphic.)
St. Petersburgh, September 16, 1904.

Russian Rules as to contraband of war: Articles of dual use, &c. Supplementary instructions.

COUNT LAMSDORFF informed me to-day officially that supplementary instructions have been sent to the Naval Commanders and to the Prize Courts defining the interpretation of section 10 of Article 6 of Regulations respecting contraband of war, which has in some cases been misinterpreted. According to new instructions the conditionally contraband nature of articles used for peaceful or warlike purposes according to circumstances and included under Article 6 is admitted, but articles of dual use, as explained in my telegram No. 117, Treaty, are not necessarily free from seizure and condemnation as contraband when addressed to private individuals in enemy's country, since such persons might be military or naval contractors.

I remarked that in such cases onus of proof would rest with the captor. Count Lamsdorff agreed, but added that it would be to the interest of the owner to disprove the charge. He observed that horses and beasts of burden are to be considered as absolutely contraband. This official statement practically cancels Count Lamsdorff's note to Sir C. Scott of 7th March.

Minutes.

This is only partially satisfactory. The principle for which both this country and the United States have so strenuously fought—viz., that food-stuffs are only to be considered contraband if intended for the enemy's fighting forces as distinguished from the enemy country—is now conceded by Russia, and, consequently, another link is added to the chain of international law. But, and this is after all in accordance with our own formula, it is for a Prize Court to investigate and decide what use the articles are to be put to, so that a ship conveying flour or provisions, e.g., will still be subject to capture and adjudication by Prize Courts, and our shipping will still be put to some inconvenience.

It will be best to await the official note before offering fuller criticisms on the telegraphic summary. It will probably be desirable to publish the official note in the "Gazette."

The last sentence applies to the whole message, not to horses and beasts of burden only. They, apparently, are in no circumstances to be regarded as of dual use, which seems very absurd, as it is obvious that horses and mules may be employed for "perfectly peaceful purposes."

1904

I fear that the practical effect of this concession, though undoubtedly valuable in principle, is not wholly satisfactory.

The real difficulty will be that our merchant-ships will still be taken, I fear, to a remote and inaccessible Prize Court for adjudication, and I can not see that the contention advanced in the passage marked on p. 2 of Lord Lansdowne's despatch No. 94, Treaty, is satisfied in any way.

How far that contention can be further pressed is a matter of some difficulty, as we have so repeatedly admitted for years past that the real destination of articles of ancipitis usûs can only be determined by a Prize Court.

I think we should still have to protest against vessels carrying provisions being even taken to a Prize Court, unless there is primâ facie evidence that the consignees are naval or military contractors. But the question still bristles with difficulties. Possibly the chief one might be got over if some sworn declaration accompanied the manifest that the consignees were neither naval or military contractors, and the captor at sea might take this as sufficient and satisfactory evidence.

I think some proposal on these lines might be made to the Russian Government, but I apprehend that Lord Lansdowne will probably wish to refer the matter for the opinion of the Attorney-General.

W. M.

Foreign Office, September 16, 1904.

On the whole—judging from this summary—the Russian reply seems to me more satisfactory than, at all events a little time ago, we were justified in expecting. That ships with any food-stuffs on board may still be seized and taken before a Court is true enough, but it remains to be seen how Russian cruisers will interpret the new instructions.

The text of the note will be here on Monday probably, and after Mr. Hurst has seen it we may be able to submit to you some suggestions as regards points to be referred to the Attorney-General or Law Officers.

F. A. C.

Foreign Office, September 17, 1904.

A good deal will, no doubt, depend upon the actual terms of the note, but it is clear that the Russian Government have abandoned the position from which we desired to drive them, and that articles ancipitis usûs are no longer to be dealt with as unconditionally contraband. The reservation apparently made by Count Lamsdorff—namely, that such articles should not be necessarily free from seizure and condemnation when addressed to private individuals in the enemy's country—does not seem to me to be, on the face of it, unreasonable. If the private individual was notoriously a military or naval contractor, it would be absurd to contend that the articles were not destined for the use of the enemy's forces. It is quite true, as Mr. Maycock points out, that it will still be for the Prize Court to decide as to the destination of the alleged contraband. If, therefore, the Russian cruisers exercise their right of capturing neutral vessels in large numbers and bringing them before the Prize Courts, our shipping will certainly be put to serious inconvenience; but that seems to me an inevitable, though no doubt deplorable, result of the prevalence of hostilities between maritime Powers; and I presume that if the right of seizure is exercised in cases where the charge can be made good, the owners and shippers concerned will have a right to claim damages. Much will, of course, depend upon the character of the Prize Court, and we may have something to say upon that subject after our recent experiences. I do not know whether a mere declaration that the consignees were neither naval nor military contractors would be accepted as sufficient evidence, but points of this kind will have to be considered by our Legal Advisers. All papers bearing upon this matter should be sent as they arrive to the Attorney-General, with whom I hope to be able to confer before long.

L.

Foreign Office, September 19, 1904.

(No. 2.)

Sir C. Hardinge to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received September 20.)

(No. 124. Treaty.)

St. Petersburgh September 16, 1904.

My Lord,

WITH reference to my despatch No. 112, Treaty, of the 8th instant, I have the honour to report to your Lordship that Count Lamsdorff made an official communication to me to-day on the subject of contraband, and on the interpretation to be placed on the Rules published by the Russian Government on the 14th February of this year.

His Excellency stated that, owing to the decision of a Commission which had been formed under the Presidency of Professor Martens to study the question of contraband, supplementary instructions had been issued to the Naval Commanders and to the Naval Prize Courts defining the interpretation of section 10 of Article 6 of the Russian Rules which the Commission were of opinion had in some cases been misinterpreted. According to the instructions now issued, the conditionally contraband nature of articles used for peaceful or warlike purposes, according to circumstances and included under Article 6, was admitted, but the Russian Government could not admit that articles of dual use when addressed to private individuals in the enemy's country should be necessarily free from seizure and condemnation, since, as he had pointed out to me on a previous occasion, provisions and such articles of dual use, though intended for the military or naval forces of the enemy, would obviously under such circumstances be addressed to private individuals and not to the Government, thus defeating the object of the Regulations.

I told Count Lamsdorff that I presumed the new instructions covered all the articles of dual use mentioned in Article 6. His Excellency agreed, with the exception of their application to horses and beasts of burden, which, he said, it had been decided to regard as absolutely contraband. I also added that, in the event of the seizure of articles of a conditionally contraband nature addressed to private individuals in the enemy's country, the burden of proof would necessarily rest with the captor. He assented, with the observation that it would be equally to the advantage of the owner of the articles in question to disprove the charge that they were destined for the military or naval forces of the enemy.

Count Lamsdorff expressed the hope that this admission of the conditionally contraband nature of articles included in Rule 6 of the Russian Regulations respecting contraband of war would prove satisfactory to His Majesty's Government, and would tend to avoid many difficulties in the future.

I have, &c.

(Signed) CHARLES HARDINGE.

Minutes.

This merely extends the telegram received on Saturday, which has been fully minuted.

As I have already said, I can see nothing at present which will prevent our ships being taken off to Vladivostock.

Mr. Hurst.

W. M.

Foreign Office, September 20, 1904.

This is so, but the Russian answer, nevertheless, concedes the principle for which we have been contending as regards conditional contraband.

The Russians having now replied, the point is, are we to accept it, or try for anything more.

We might, I think, acknowledge the friendly spirit in which our representations have been met, and then point out that, in the case of articles of dual use, unless the supplementary instructions are interpreted in a liberal spirit by the Commanders of Russian cruisers, they will not prevent our vessels carrying such goods from being seized and taken before a Prize Court with all the hardship incidental thereto in the case of innocent ships, and inquire, or, indeed, urge, that where there is no absolute contraband of war on board, the ship should not be detained unless the Commander has some good reason to suspect that ancipitis usûs merchandize is, in fact, intended for the enemy's military or naval forces.

1904

I do not think this would be inconsistent with the view we have held that in doubtful cases the question of ultimate destination must be decided by a Prize Court.

Mr. Hurst.

F. A. C.

Foreign Office, September 20, 1904.

I agree. I should like to see the words "definite evidence" substituted for "good reason to suspect." We ought, I think, to aim at the ships being allowed to pass, and not brought to a Prize Court merely because the goods are consigned to the enemy's territory. There should be some more definite circumstance to take hold of than that, but I can imagine a Russian Captain believing that he had "good reason to suspect" that rice consigned to Kobe was for the Japanese army, when there was in reality nothing whatever that could be pointed to beyond the destination of the goods.

I should like also to see some reference inserted as to compensation being granted where articles ancipitis usûs are brought in, and it is found that the captors cannot establish that they are for the naval or military forces of the enemy.

Article 30 of the Russian Prize Court Regulations contemplates indemnities being paid when it is recognized that the property was seized without sufficient reason.

Section 88 seems to show that the owner of the goods must initiate proceedings for the recovery of compensation, and the proceedings go on simultaneously with those initiated by the captor to secure the condemnation of the goods (section 89).

I do not know whether we have been advising parties interested to claim compensation under these sections, but their existence justifies His Majesty's Government in saying that they expect the Prize Courts to award compensation where goods are seized and their contraband character cannot be established.

On the more general question, whether the new Russian attitude is to be regarded altogether as failing to meet the objections that His Majesty's Government have raised or accepted, and efforts made to have safeguards attached, so as to make it tolerable to neutral shippers, as Mr. Campbell suggests, I would like to observe that, if it is rejected, I do not quite see what His Majesty's Government could demand instead of it.

We clearly cannot demand that, under no possible circumstances, can food-stuffs be contraband. Our history, our naval manuals, and our attitude during this war all prevent such a claim.

The old Rule, which our own Prize Courts worked out, and which was generally accepted for a long time, was that, to be contraband, food-stuffs must be consigned to a port of naval equipment (I am omitting, for the present, cases of a direct destination to the enemy's fleet).

This Rule was established in the days when there were no railways, and when it was practically certain that sea-borne provisions for a fleet fitting out at Spithead would be shipped to Portsmouth, and not to the Thames. Nowadays, the goods might just as well be sent to Newcastle.

It seems to me, therefore, that it will be impossible to maintain the old Rule. Foreign nations who have not got old Prize Court precedents to look to would not accept it, and I doubt whether the Admiralty would consider it was to our advantage to adhere to it.

There practically remains only the Rule of enemy destination, coupled with proof that the food-stuffs are for the naval and military forces.

The difference between this and the attitude now adopted by Russia is not one of principle. The point out of which difficulties might grow is the amount of proof required that the food-stuffs were intended for naval or military use before they could be condemned as contraband. It is important to maintain the doctrine that there must be more than the presumption or suspicion arising from the destination being in the enemy country before the goods can be condemned.

This, however, is really a question not of what the principle lays down, but of the spirit in which it is administered, and is, to my mind, no reason for rejecting altogether the new Russian interpretation.

C. J. B. H.

Foreign Office, September 21, 1904.

The Attorney-General to Foreign Office.

THE Russian answer as to food-stuffs seems to me to be in itself satisfactory.

We cannot properly contend that the mere fact that the consignee is a private person is to give immunity. On the other hand, it would be wrong and vexatious to take in vessels for adjudication merely because the destination is the enemy's country—there must be circumstances raising a reasonable suspicion that the food-stuffs are for the enemy's forces. I do not think that any general formula can be desired for this purpose—each case must stand on its own facts.

As regards horses, the war code of the United States treats them as absolutely contraband, and there is a good deal even in English writers in support of this view. I do not think we should be on strong ground in insisting that they are only conditionally contraband.

I suggest that we should accept the declaration as to food-stuffs as satisfactory; it is a great step in advance, and relates to a point of vital importance to this country. We might at the same time guard ourselves as to the evidence which is to justify the bringing in of the ship at its condemnation; it is for the captor to show adequate grounds of suspicion to justify the former, and to establish the fact of destination for enemy's forces to procure the latter.

R. B. F

Bradbury Private Hotel, North Berwick,
September 22, 1904.

No. 21A.

Customs.
[In Treasury to F. O.
September 9, 1904.]

[October 4, 1904.]

Commissioners of Customs to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Prohibition of sugar-sweetened products containing bounty-fed sugar.

THE International Convention relative to bounties on sugar, signed at Brussels on the 5th March, 1902, of which a print is herewith, provides in Article VII for the establishment of a Permanent Commission charged with supervising the execution of the provisions of the Convention, and contains an Article of which the first paragraph, as translated into English, is as follows:—

ARTICLE I.

The High Contracting Parties engage to suppress, from the date of the coming into force of the present Convention, the direct and indirect bounties by which the production or exportation of sugar may profit, and not to establish bounties of such a kind during the whole continuance of the said Convention. For the application of this provision, sugar-sweetened products, such as preserves, chocolates, biscuits, condensed milk, and all other analogous products containing, in a notable proportion, artificially incorporated sugar, are assimilated to sugar.

By "The Sugar Convention Act, 1903" (3 Edw. VII, cap. 21), passed to give effect to this Convention, it is provided in section 1 as follows:—

1. Where it is reported by the Permanent Commission that any direct or indirect bounty is granted in any foreign country on the production or export of sugars, His Majesty may, by Order in Council, make a prohibition Order, that is to say, an Order prohibiting sugar from that foreign country to be imported or brought into the United Kingdom, subject to any provision which may be made by Parliament, in lieu of such prohibition, to impose a special duty on such sugar in accordance with the Convention.

1904

2. While a prohibition Order is in force, the laws relating to Customs shall apply as if the sugar in respect of which the Order is made was specified in the Table of prohibitions and restrictions inwards, contained in section 42 of "The Customs Consolidation Act, 1876."

By an Order in Council made under this section, and dated the 11th August, 1903, after reciting that it appears from the finding of the Permanent Commission that the said Permanent Commission had reported that a bounty on the exportation of sugars is granted in Denmark, Russia, and the Argentine Republic, it was ordered that from and after the 1st September, 1903, and subject to any such provision by Parliament as thereinbefore treated, all sugar from Denmark, Russia, and the Argentine Republic (not including molasses and sugar-sweetened products) shall, except in transit, be prohibited to be imported or brought into the United Kingdom, and, in relation to this Order, certain regulations were prescribed. The prohibition has been extended by an Order in Council dated the 23rd June, 1904, to sugar from the Dominican Republic.

The effect of the Act and Orders is that sugar from these four countries is liable to forfeiture under the Customs Laws on importation into the United Kingdom.

It will be observed that Article I of the Convention deals only with the suppression of bounties, and that for this purpose alone does the Convention specifically provide that sugar-sweetened products are to be assimilated to sugar. Article III contains an engagement to limit the surtax—that is to say, the difference between the rate of duty or taxation to which foreign sugar is liable and the rate of duty or taxation to which home-produced sugar is subject; but the Permanent Commission have decided that the rates of surtax fixed in this Article for raw and refined sugars respectively are not applicable to sugar-sweetened products.

There is no definition of sugar in the Act, and goods which, to a more or less extent, contain or are prepared with sugar are imported to a slight extent from Russia and the other three countries affected by the Order in Council, and to a considerable extent from countries which are not parties to the Convention—e.g., the United States and Switzerland.

In order to ascertain what is the real scope of the Article I, it is necessary, in the first place, to determine how much per cent. of added sugar will bring any sugar products within the meaning of the words, as translated, "a notable proportion"; but this is probably a matter for the determination of the Permanent Commission, as it is obviously desirable that there should be uniformity of practice on this matter in all the countries which are parties to the Convention. There is nothing to show that it was ever the intention of the Convention that it should be applied to articles which contain only a small proportion of added sugar, and it is not thought that the Contracting States would support such a contention.

The quantity of sugar in goods imported into the United Kingdom has, of necessity, to be ascertained by the officers of Customs because, where there is not any fixed rate of customs duty imposed by law upon the goods by name, duty is charged under section 7 of "The Finance Act, 1901" (1 Edw. VII, cap. 7) by reference to the quantity of sugar contained therein.

It is thought to be not improbable that goods so imported may be manufactured from bounty-fed sugar. Condensed milk and chocolate are instances of goods imported from Switzerland to a large extent, and it is thought that they may be manufactured from Russian sugar. The quantity of sugar imported from Switzerland as contained in condensed milk, after allowing the quantity natural to milk itself, is about 40 per cent. of the bulk, and, in chocolate, varies from 41 to 76 per cent.

If imported goods are produced from bounty-fed sugar, there is a hardship upon the British manufacturer, e.g., a confectioner or maker of sugar-sweetened goods, in the competition for sale of his goods, as he cannot obtain bounty-fed sugar, and it is suggested that sugar which is prohibited to be imported in the condition of sugar should not be free from the prohibition because it forms part of other goods in the preparation of which it has been used. In the case of the composite goods imported it would be impossible to separate the sugar from the other component parts of the goods.

As the importation of bounty-fed sugar is prohibited, such sugar, if imported, becomes forfeited, and it is, therefore, necessary to consider the position with regard to forfeited goods which are mixed with goods which are not forfeited. This matter was the subject of a decision in 1775, Rex v. Mawbey, reported in Lofft's Reports, p. 179. This case was decided upon the statute 1, Geo. III, cap. 1, against the distillation of wheat, and had reference to a seizure of 200 quarters of corn preparing for that use in the proportion of one-third wheat and two-thirds barley. At the trial before Lord Mansfield, a special verdict was given, and it was found (inter alia) that the wheat and barley were so mixed that it was impossible to separate them. The question whether the seizure was lawful was reserved and submitted to the Court. It was argued before Lord Mansfield and two other Judges when the point was taken, that there was no power to seize a mixture, but it was held unanimously that the seizure was lawful. This case has always been regarded as establishing the position that, if forfeited goods are mixed with goods that are not forfeited, so that the one cannot be separated from the other, the whole is forfeited.

It is probable that, notwithstanding the conclusion already arrived at upon Article III, as above mentioned, a proposal to adopt a limitation of surtaxes on sugar-sweetened products may be discussed at the meeting of the Permanent Commission, which is fixed for the 10th October next, and if a limitation is adopted it may become necessary to deal with the importation into the United Kingdom of these composite goods by legislation or some other means. There would be no difficulty in giving effect to a prohibition, but it would mean that the numerous products containing either a notable proportion or more than a certain percentage (as might be fixed by the Commission) of added sugar, and coming from countries which either give direct bounties or maintain a higher surtax than that fixed by the Commission, would have to be wholly excluded from the United Kingdom.

The questions upon which it is desired to obtain the opinion of the Law Officers are:—

1. Whether the word sugars, as used in the Sugar Convention Act, 1903, can be held to include the sugar contained in sugar-sweetened products, so that upon an Order in Council being made, prohibiting the importation of sugar (without, as in the present Orders, any words of exception excluding sugar-sweetened products) the officers of Customs would be justified in seizing as forfeited such imported goods, e.g., Swiss milk and chocolate, as are referred to in the case if made with bounty-fed sugar; and

2. Whether, in the existing state of the law, an Order in Council can be made directly prohibiting the importation of sugar-sweetened products generally, or the importation of named sugar-sweetened products, or of sugar-sweetened products containing more than a given proportion of sugar by reason of the Permanent Commission reporting either that they contain bounty-fed sugar or that they are in receipt of a bounty arising from an excessive surtax or otherwise.

Opinion.

1. We think that the first question should be answered in the affirmative.

We understand from the instructions that the sugar exists as such in these products, and not in any new chemical combination, although it cannot for commercial purposes be separated from the other ingredients of the product.

If so, sugar on which a bounty has been paid is being brought into the United Kingdom, and the Act applies.

The difficulty arising on the language of the Ist Article is, we think, met by the consideration that the special definition of sugar for the purposes of this Article was wanted to meet the case of bounties being granted on the production or exportation of sugar-sweetened articles as such.

2. We think that the second question should be answered in the negative. The Act applies only to sugar.

If it be decided to issue an Order not exempting sugar-sweetened products, some notification to the trade of its scope and effect may be desirable.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
October 4, 1904.

No. 22.

[October 25, 1904.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Destruction and protection of Submarine Cables during war: Instructions to naval officers.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 16, 1904.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit herewith a draft Memorandum dealing with the question of the protection of British submarine cables and the destruction in time of war of an enemy's cables, which the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty propose to issue confidentially to His Majesty's fleet (Inclosure in Paper A).

It will be seen from the accompanying correspondence that, on the outbreak of the present war in the Far East, the attention of Naval Commanders-in-chief and Commodores commanding on foreign stations was drawn to the terms of the International Convention of 1884 for the Protection of Submarine Cables (Paper B). This Convention does not affect the freedom of action of belligerents (see Article XV and Lord Lyons' Declaration of the 14th March, 1884, p. 12), and the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty felt that there were certain questions connected with the rights of belligerents and with the methods of procedure to be adopted by a neutral Signatory Power in regard to neutral vessels suspected of acting in the employment of belligerents on which naval officers should be furnished with clear instructions. These points are set forth in the Admiralty letter of the 18th February (Paper C), and the observations of this Department thereon are contained in the Foreign Office letter of the 26th February (Paper D). In this letter it was suggested that, in framing general instructions, it was desirable to be guided by the general principles indicated in your Report of the 15th August, 1900 (Paper E); and that the proper course would be to embody the substance of this opinion in a Memorandum for the guidance of Commanding Officers of His Majesty's fleets.

Since the instructions which have now been prepared are largely based on your opinion above mentioned, and in view of the great importance of the questions dealt with, the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty are desirous that the Memorandum should be seen and approved by you before it is issued; and I have the honour to request that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion whether the terms of the instructions contained in the early part of the Memorandum are in the circumstances right and proper.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A)	Admiralty..	August 9, 1904.
(B.)	Submarine Cables Convention [Treaty. Library No. 743]	March 14, 1884.
(C.)	Admiralty..	February 18, 1904.
(D.)	To Admiralty	February 26, „
(E.)	Law Officers' opinion [in Confidential 7516]	August 15, 1900.
(F.)	Admiralty..	September 5, 1904.

Report.

1. We suggest some modification in the language of clause 3 of the Memorandum. Article X of the Convention can hardly be described as laying down the powers for the protection of cables; it merely provides for identification of offenders and securing evidence.

2. The letter (c) should be deleted in clause 4. The words to which it is prefixed do not form a third class, (a) and (b) being the first and second. They are in contradistinction to the preceding words as to territorial waters of a belligerent and the high seas. We would also suggest that the words "and amount to act of hostility" in this clause should be omitted.

3. It might be more convenient to number the two cases dealt with in clause 5 as (a) and (b).

4. We would suggest that the language of clause 6 should be altered, somewhat as we have suggested in red ink* on the Memorandum. The Convention remains in full force except as against belligerents. We think the words "whether in the employ of one of the belligerents or not" would be better omitted. If a vessel is under a neutral flag she must be treated, for the purposes of the Convention, as a neutral, but a vessel for the time being in the service of a belligerent and flying his flag cannot be dealt with under the Convention, even if her so acting amounts to a breach of neutrality. The last three lines should be omitted. They go beyond the scope of Article X, and that Article may be left to speak for itself.

5. We suggest the addition at the end of clause 8 of the words which we have inserted in red ink.*

6. We have indicated for consideration some slight alteration in the language of the second sentence of clause 12.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
October 25, 1904.

Annex.

MEMORANDUM ON THE PROTECTION OF BRITISH SUBMARINE CABLES, AND ON THE DESTRUCTION OF AN ENEMY'S CABLES.

(I.) The Protection of British Submarine Cables during Peace and in Time of War.

General.

THE Commanding Officers of His Majesty's ships and vessels are given clearly to understand that the protection of British cables in peace as well as in war is a part of their duty, and that they must take such steps to this end as may be possible without detriment to the performance of their primary and more important duties during hostilities.

2. The position of all submarine cables is approximately shown on Admiralty Telegraph Chart No. 1188, as amended in accordance with the notices issued from time to time by the Hydrographer. On the Mediterranean, China, and North America and West Indies Stations, all ships are also supplied with special confidential cases containing all the detailed information on the tracks and landing places of foreign cables that is obtainable.† It is also the duty of Commanding Officers of His Majesty's ships and vessels to make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the details of the cable systems of the stations on which they may, from time to time, be serving.

(II.) In Time of General Peace or of Wars in which Great Britain is Neutral.

3. The powers vested in Commanding Officers of His Majesty's ships for the protection of cables in time of peace are laid down in Article X of the International Convention of 1884, a copy of which, Parliamentary paper, "Commercial No. 6 (1890), France, &c.," is attached.

4. As regards the control which may be exercised over cables by a neutral State in time of war between other Powers, a belligerent is held to be justified in cutting a submarine cable, either in the territorial waters of a belligerent or upon the high seas—

(a.) Between two stations of a belligerent;
(b.) Between a station of a belligerent and a station of a neutral;

but a belligerent is not held to be justified in cutting a cable—

(c.) Within the territorial jurisdiction of a neutral State.

(Such a proceeding would constitute a violation of the sovereignty of the neutral State, [and

---

* Printed in italics.

† Information on the French cables on West Coast of Africa and on Cape Station is being furnished to His Majesty's ships.

1904

amount to act of hostility]. A war-ship of the neutral State finding a belligerent so engaged should strongly protest, and, if protest failed, would be justified in using force to protect the cable.)

5. Ordinarily a belligerent would not be held to be justified in cutting a cable—

(~~d~~.) (a.) Between stations of two neutral Powers; or (~~e~~.) (b.) Between two stations of the same neutral Power, situate on different territories.

It cannot, however, be laid down as an inflexible rule that the right to cut a cable under the conditions stated in (~~d~~) (a) and (~~e~~) (b) should not be exercised; it might conceivably form a link of communication, interruption of which might be essential to the belligerent. Unless, however, it could be established by the belligerent that such cutting is necessary on warlike considerations and is not a purely wanton act, such action might well afford grounds for a claim for compensation against the belligerent State.

6. The Convention of 1884 cannot, therefore, be applied by neutrals as against belligerents within waters which are the scene of operations between belligerents, ~~except in so far as that~~ but a neutral war-ship finding a neutral vessel belonging to one of the Signatories to the Convention~~, whether in the employ of one of the belligerents or not,~~ attempting to tamper with a cable on the high seas may act in accordance with the instructions contained in Article X of the Convention ~~i.e., the offending vessel's nationality should be ascertained, and the proper representations made with a view to the case being adjudicated by the tribunals of the State to which she belongs.~~

(III.) In Time of War, i.e., Great Britain Belligerent.

7. The Convention of 1884 in no way affects the freedom of action of belligerents (vide Article XV, and the declaration made by Lord Lyons and embodied in the procès-verbal of the 14th March, 1884, p. 12 of the Parliamentary paper).

8. A neutral merchant vessel detected by a belligerent ship in cutting or damaging, or attempting to cut or damage, a cable is liable to search or detention as being actively employed in the service of the enemy. Any neutral merchant vessel, therefore, found hovering suspiciously near the track of a cable should be boarded to ascertain whether she is in any way fitted for picking up submarine cables, and her papers should be carefully examined. If all be in order, she should be watched, and if caught in the act of lifting or creeping for a cable without proper authority she should be captured and brought before a Prize Court for adjudication.

9. The operation of cutting a cable does not require that a vessel should be armed, and an enemy would be more likely to employ a vessel under a neutral flag, as all outward signs would be removed on the approach of a hostile ship.

10. An enemy might be expected to employ local agents, such as fishing vessels, to attack cables in shoal waters. This course might especially be pursued on the coasts of China, where the fishing population have repeatedly cut the Telegraph Company's cables for the mere sake of the iron and copper wire, and would possibly be ready to do so for hire.

Except by securing the influence of the Chinese coast authorities or by subsidising the fishermen themselves, it has not been found possible to find any safeguard against these attacks.

11. Given the necessary appliances, it is possible to cut a cable at any depth, and, therefore, an enemy's operations would not necessarily be confined to the terminal ends of a cable in shoal water, but might extend to positions on the line where there would be less probability of disturbance, and the damage would be more difficult to repair.

12. The damage that can be done to communications, and consequently the probability of attempts being made on a cable, varies greatly in different parts of the world.

Where there are ~~alternate~~ alternative routes it is evident that the [~~annoyance to the owners~~] interference with communication will not justify much risk or time in trying to cut only [~~a portion~~] (?) one of them.

13. To many British stations and possessions there are now several lines of cables on widely separated routes, and either attempts will not be made on them, or if made successfully the inconvenience will not be great, as it is improbable that they can all be interrupted at once. When, however, the communication is single or only double, or where the alternative cables lie near to one another, every vigilance is necessary to protect them.

14. The most favourable conditions for attacking cables are when they lie in fairly shallow water (less than 40 fathoms) on an even bottom, at some distance from the nearest landing station. This is especially the case where the cable or cables lie parallel to the coast.

The attacking ship dragging her grapnel in a direction at right angles to the shore has a fair chance of hooking and breaking the cable, and knowledge of the precise track of the cable is not so necessary as in other cases.

15. The cables to Gibraltar, westward of Tarifa Point, are so situated that if a ship were undisturbed it might, by dragging intelligently, destroy all five in half-a-day. The breaking of the first would, however, in this case convey warning to Gibraltar, and the enemy would run considerable risk.

16. The British cables running from Singapore to Hong Kong are also liable to interruption, as for many miles they lie in shallow water, though not near the shore.

In both these cases there are other lines of communication, though not British.

17. At any such points His Majesty's cruisers employed in protecting British commerce should, as far as possible, be specially careful to safeguard the cables against the operations of an enemy's ship, or of a neutral ship acting in the service of the enemy.

18. If possible, a ship of war should accompany a cable ship whenever she goes to effect a repair to an important cable during a period of hostilities, and Commanders-in-chief or other Senior Officers should endeavour to give effect to this arrangement if the circumstances permit.

(IV.) The Measures to be taken to Cut the Enemy's Cable Communications in time of War.

19. The tabular statement following, which has been drawn up on the assumption that Great Britain is at war with France, or with France and Russia, indicates the action which it is proposed should be adopted with regard to the cables communicating with the several French Colonies, and also with regard to the cables connecting Calais with Fanoe (Denmark), and Port Arthur with Chefoo.

20. It should, however, be clearly understood that the recommendations contained in this statement are not to be regarded as absolutely binding; and that it is left to the discretion of the several Commanders-in-chief to decide whether, in any particular case, the enemy's cable communications should be cut, and, if so, when and where the attempt should be made to do so.

21. As cutting operations may be necessary before a formal declaration of war, it may be considered desirable to make what secret preparations are possible during the period of "strained relations," in order that no time may be lost in carrying out the work, should a telegram be received from the Admiralty giving the requisite permission to commence cutting even before the declaration of war.

22. It is at the option of Commanders-in-chief to take the Officers Commanding His Majesty's ships under their orders into their confidence in regard to the contents of this Memorandum, and the arrangements they propose to make.

(V.) Communications to French Colonies.

Colony.	Line.	If Line passes British Territory.	Proposed Action.
Algiers and Tunis ...	7 lines from Marseilles...	No ...	Important to cut if possible, as there would then be left only the cable connecting Spain (assumed neutral) and Morocco; and even if this cable could be used it would scarcely be able to cope with all the telegraphic correspondence passing to and from North Africa in the event of operations off that coast, and the loss of their own cables would thus cause France considerable inconvenience.
Corsica	4 lines	No ...	Important to isolate when fleet move up off Toulon.
Dakar and West Coast Colonies, viz.:— French Guinea Ivory Coast Dahomey	3 lines (1 direct from Brest)	1 British	Desirable to cut line between Dakar and Brest; also that between Teneriffe and St. Louis. The English line between Fernando Noronha to St. Louis requires interrupting at the same time. The method to be left for consideration at the time. Land lines behind Sierra Leone also require attention, and might be interrupted by Colonial forces.
French Congo	... ...	Yes ...	No action necessary.
Madagascar	1 line starting from Mozambique	Yes ...	Important to isolate, as the island contains an important base which might be used by commerce raiders. Madagascar cable is dependent on British lines to complete connection with Europe, but its actual end is in Portuguese territory, and it would be impossible to insure non-dispatch of information from so-called neutral source in Mozambique.
Jibuti and Obok ...	... ...	Yes ...	No action necessary; new line under consideration.
Cochin China ... ... Tonquin ... ... Annam	1 line from Dutch Borneo	Yes ...	Desirable to cut between Pulo Condore and Saigon, as enemy would thus be dependent on Chinese land service, which is slow and not very reliable; also desirable to cut Tourane–Amoy line.
New Caledonia... ...	... ...	Yes ...	No action necessary.

1904

Colony.	Line.	If Line passes British Territory.	Proposed Action.
Martinique and Guadeloupe	1 cable connecting the two islands 2 others— 1 to Porto Plata in Hayti 1 to Paramaribo	No	Important to cut all three, as Martinique is a fortified base which might be used by commerce raiders.
French Guiana	...	...	Not necessary to consider.
St. Pierre	2 cables	No	Dangerous to cut without chance of damaging British cables.
Réunion	...	...	No line at present, but if cable communication should be established with Madagascar on the one side and Mauritius on the other, it would be desirable to cut both.

Important Lines in the event of War with Russia as well as France.

Lines.	If Line passes through British Territory.	Proposed Action.
2 cables of the Great Northern Telegraph Company (Danish) between Calais and Fanoe in Denmark	...	NOTE.—These cables have been laid down for the express purpose of enabling France and Russia to communicate without using land lines in Germany and Austria. Desirable to be cut.
Port Arthur–Chefoo	No	Desirable to cut, in order to delay information as to movements at Wei-hai Wei reaching Port Arthur. The cable office at Port Arthur would presumably be occupied by military, so that the cable would be useless to Great Britain, as we, on our side, could not occupy the office at Chefoo, which is in neutral territory.

(VI.) Notes on Cable Cutting in general, and in special Instances.

23. To destroy the enemy's submarine telegraphic communication in a prompt and efficient manner is by no means, in all instances, a simple or easy operation, even when the severance of one or two cables will effect it.

(a.) The depth of water;
(b.) The nature of the bottom;
(c.) The knowledge of the position of the cable;
(d.) The means at hand;

are all matters which greatly influence the feasibility of the undertaking.

(a.) In most cases breaking a cable in deep water at a considerable distance from the land is, from the British point of view, the best way of destroying an enemy's communications, because with even a partial British command of the sea, its repair would be a hazardous undertaking for the enemy's cable ship, whereas when cut near the land, repair is often easier.

Such breaking can, however, only be performed by a properly fitted cable ship.

Even if a man-of-war is supplied with the requisite length of wire hawser on suitable reels, and cutting grapnels, she has no means of managing it. The hawser may be paid out, but without dynamometers it is next to impossible to tell whether the cable has been caught, or broken, and the recovery of the weight of two or more miles of hawser would, in most ships, be impracticable.

For such work, therefore, a cable ship must be employed, and the presence of British cable repairing ships on most stations renders their aid, when required, comparatively simple.

In water up to perhaps 100 fathoms a man-of-war may, with a suitable grapnel, carry out the operation, but there are difficulties even in shallow water.

(b.) The nature of the bottom, it is evident, must largely affect the chance of grappling a cable.

Cables are, of course, laid wherever possible in smooth bottom for the sake of their own maintenance, but on some coasts this is not to be found, and on an uneven bottom the grapnel will jump.

(c.) Most cables to be cut will be foreign cables.

In many cases, the knowledge of the exact positions of these is wanting, and in such cases a considerable amount of time will be expended in finding them.

There are certain foreign cables laid by British Cable Companies, the line of which they have engaged not to divulge. But in case of war, this knowledge can probably be utilized if the Cable Company's ship is employed.

(d.) The means in possession of a man-of-war are her wire hawsers, steam capstan, and such grapnels as may be supplied, with such information as to the line of the cable as the telegraph charts may be able to convey.

24. In cutting a cable, the operation must be carried out with great deliberation.

The direction of the drag should be at as nearly right angles to the line of the cable as possible, and the speed of the ship when dragging should be less than a knot, or the grapnel will probably jump. This is very important.

Plenty of hawser should be paid out for the same reason.

A man sitting on the hawser over the side is the best means to ascertain when the cable has been caught, as he can tell by the variation in the vibration when the grapnel has hooked something that gives. Necessarily experience is here valuable.

25. When caught, it is in most cases necessary to lift the cable, firstly, to make sure that it is a cable, secondly, to ascertain that it is a working cable.

Dead cables or portions of cables are getting common, especially in the neighbourhood of landing places.

When a cable is repaired, a large piece is commonly cut out and is left on the bottom, and near many important cable landing places there are many dead lengths.

A practical illustration of this was given in the Spanish–American War, when the Americans cut cables several times outside Santiago, and never succeeded in interrupting one of the three working cables landed at that port. To avoid such disappointments is important.

26. The cable should therefore be lifted, and when cut, galvanometer tests should be applied to ascertain whether it is merely a short dead length or a working cable.

27. It follows that a position in moderately shallow water, some distance from the landing place, will give the best chance of breaking communication, because the probabilities of the cable having been repaired are not so great. Unless, however, the cable from its landing place runs along the shore, such positions are not generally to be found.

If the cable be not raised, the jerk of the grapnel catching something on the bottom and coming away may easily be mistaken for an indication that the cable has been caught and broken, especially when the operator is not skilled in the work.

28. Should a cable be attacked in its trench on dry land at the landing place, digging should be carried a foot or two below the first cable found, as there are instances of protection of the working cable from wilful injury by laying a dummy piece above the real cable.

29. See also "Torpedo Manual," vol. i, 1901, pp. 321 and 327, for further information.

(VII.) Notes on particular Cables.

30. The Seven Cables from Marseilles to Algeria.—To sever this communication effectually, it should be done in deep water by a cable ship. The Eastern Telegraph Company alone possess information on the position of at any rate parts of these cables, and could probably carry it out, the cable ship being escorted.

If broken near the shore at either end, the only places where these cables lie in shallow water, the possibility of repair is greater, but if attempted, the Marseilles end presents the best chance. Here all the cables converge, and, presuming that the command of the sea is sufficient to prevent attack, several ships might succeed in effectually breaking communication in a comparatively short time, and the prevention of repair could also be more easily carried out, as one squadron would suffice to watch all the cables.

31. The Cables to Corsica can probably only be satisfactorily cut in deep water, but at the French end the cable running from Antibes might be severed.

32. The Cables to St. Louis, Senegal, can be cut at about 6 miles from St. Louis, the water being shallow and the bottom smooth, but the position of these are only very imperfectly known.

33. The Cables to Saïgon, which come from Singapore and from Hong Kong, should be cut at some distance from the land and joined together by a telegraph ship, to afford an independent communication between Singapore and Hong Kong.

The Saigon–Haiphong Cable is not very important, but, if practicable, should be cut.

34. The Mozambique–Madagascar (Mojanga) Cable must either be attacked in deep water or near the Madagascar shore, where conditions are favourable, but the line of it is very doubtful.

At the Mozambique end it lies so close to the British cables to the Cape that attack would be dangerous.

35. Martinique.—A telegraph ship is necessary here.

The water is very deep close up to the Martinique shore, and success would be very doubtful.

36. The Cable to Paramaribo could be cut off Paramaribo, outside the territorial limits, in shallow water.

1904

No. 23.

[November 9, 1904.]

(1.)

Minutes.

Examination of vessels for contraband of war where her papers are incomplete.

A LETTER was received from the Liverpool Steam-ship Owners' Association on the 19th August last, inclosing copies of Resolutions passed by them with regard to contraband of war, and at the same time pointing out the difficulty of producing complete manifests and bills of lading in order to prove the nature of a neutral cargo, in view of the rapidity with which vessels are now loaded and sent to sea.

The question was referred to the Board of Trade and Admiralty, and a reply was received from the former Department, suggesting that the Russian Government should be urged to accept a declaration made by the master, and visé by a Russian or Japanese Consul. The view, however, taken by the Admiralty is that a declaration such as that suggested would not meet the requirements of the case, and that a belligerent has a right to ascertain the nature of a neutral cargo. They further consider that, in the case of a vessel having no document on board to show the character of her cargo (since the proposed declaration merely enumerates the ports of call, and declares generally that there is no contraband on board), the belligerent would insist on his right to examine the goods—a process which would in most cases involve taking the ship into port.

The annexed draft concurs in the Admiralty view, and explains the process of reasoning by which this Department have arrived at the same conclusion.

E. G. W.

The draft seems to me a good one, but this pronouncement of our views is of great importance. We do not, I understand, concur in the opinion expressed by the Board of Trade, and we contemplate writing a letter, which will be founded on this draft, not only to the Board of Trade, but to the Liverpool Steam-ship Owners' Association. It would, therefore, be as well to ask the Law Officers to look at the draft.

L.

November 7, 1904.

(2.)

Mr. Davidson to Attorney-General.

My dear Attorney-General, Foreign Office, November 8, 1904.

Lord Lansdowne spoke to me about this draft before he wrote his Minute of the 7th November, 1904.

The shipping community are, as you know, much exercised, and not unnaturally, with regard to this matter; and his Lordship is anxious to take every precaution before emitting any pronouncement such as that which is involved in the draft.

It seems better to ask you to look at it before it goes to the Admiralty than after it comes back from them, and also to request you and the Solicitor-General to be good enough to make any amendments which you may think desirable before it goes further.

Lord Lansdowne is anxious to deal with the matter—which has been some time on hand—as soon as possible, so that he will be obliged to you if you will give the papers such precedence in your consideration as you think is justifiable, having regard to other matters now before you.

Yours very sincerely,
(Signed) W. E. DAVIDSON.

(3.)

Attorney-General to Mr. Davidson.

My dear Davidson, November 9, 1904.

I return the draft letter to Admiralty, with some alterations by the Solicitor-General and myself.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Annex.

Draft of Letter from Foreign Office to Admiralty.

Sir, Foreign Office, November , 1904.

I am directed by the Marquess of Lansdowne to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st ultimo, relating to the practice prevailing among ship-owners of sending vessels to sea without complete manifests and bills of lading.

Lord Lansdowne concurs in the view expressed by the Lords Commissioners that a general declaration such as that suggested by the Board of Trade could not meet the requirements of the situation. It appears to his Lordship that, according to the present usages of war, a belligerent is entitled to ascertain the nature and destination of the cargo of a neutral ship, and has, in fact, the right to form his own judgment as to whether ~~it~~ the cargo can, or cannot, be deemed to be contraband for the purpose of determining whether the ship and cargo should be brought in for adjudication. The proposed declaration merely enumerates the ports of call of the vessel, and affirms that there is no contraband on board. It does not state the nature of the cargo nor the consignees (in which case the belligerent would be at liberty to form his own opinion as to its contraband nature), but endeavours to decide the question for him; and if it were to contain the information desired, the time involved in its preparation would, as the Lords Commissioners justly remark, be as great as that consumed in drawing up an ordinary manifest.

Lord Lansdowne conceives that, as a general principle, it is reasonable that the rules of war at sea should, as far as possible, accommodate themselves to the general practice of the trading and shipping communities of all nations, and that it is ~~not competent for any Prize Regulations to direct that~~ undesirable that a vessel ~~shall~~ should be brought into a Prize Court ~~on the ground that her papers are incomplete~~ merely because she has not on board a document which is habitually left ashore.

The examination of a ship's papers is, however, a mitigation of the right of search, and, in the case of a vessel carrying no index to the nature and consignees of ~~her~~ the cargo, the belligerent might insist on his right to examine the goods—a process much longer, and therefore more expensive, to the ship-owner—and ~~one which~~ if, as is usually the case, it would be practically impossible thoroughly to carry out such an examination without conveying the ship into port, he might take her into port, alleging as his justification the absence of papers affording any sufficient index to the nature and consignees of the cargo.

The practice of leaving the manifest and bills of lading to follow by post does not appear to be universal, and, though such a course may be unobjectionable and even convenient in times of peace, his Lordship doubts whether ship-owners would be wise to press for the recognition, in time of war, of any such custom, even assuming it to exist.

GREECE.

No. 23A. [Colonial Office.]

[March 31, 1904.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Colonial Office.

Royal Courts of Justice, March 31, 1904.

Rights of Greece as to coasting trade of Australia.

Sir,

WE were honoured with your commands, signified in Mr. H. Bertram Cox's letter of the 12th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 17th July, 1903, he was directed by you to request the favour of our report on certain questions which had arisen with regard to the rights of Greece under the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of 1886 in respect of the coasting trade in Australia.

1904

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to transmit to us a copy of that Treaty, together with correspondence which had passed between your Department and the Governor-General of Australia, the Foreign Office, and the Board of Trade.

That it would be seen that in the Navigation Bill, shortly to be introduced in the Commonwealth Parliament, clauses would be inserted which might affect the right of foreign vessels to engage in the coasting trade of Australia, and that the question accordingly arose whether the Anglo-Greek Treaty of 1886, or other similar Treaties on the part of two Australian States, must be held to confer on the other contracting party any right to engage in the trade between those two States, that trade having—since the passing of the Commonwealth Act—become part of the coasting trade of the Commonwealth.

That Mr. Bertram Cox was to request us to be good enough to take the papers into our consideration, and to report—

1. What were the rights of Greece under the Treaty of Greece of 1886, in the event of legislation by the Commonwealth of Australia to restrict the coasting trade of the Commonwealth to national vessels?

2. Whether the separate denunciation of the Treaty by the Australian Commonwealth in respect of all Australian States which had adhered thereto was permissible?

We have taken the matter into our consideration, and, in obedience to your commands, have the honour to

Report.

1. That, in our opinion, the rights of Greece could not be affected by legislation of the Commonwealth of Australia until the Treaty of 1886 is denounced or modified by agreement.

2. No. The Treaty is with His Majesty, and could only be denounced as a whole by His Majesty, unless the Greek Government consented to modify it by cancelling the adherence of the Australian States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON

JAPAN.

No. 24.

[January 18, 1904.]

Admiralty to Foreign Office.

(Confidential.)

Sir,

Admiralty, January 11, 1904.

Russo-Japanese war: Cruisers bought by Japan of the Argentine Government.

MY Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty having received information that the two cruisers lately purchased from the Argentine Republic by the Japanese Government will shortly be sailing from Genoa for Japan, desire me to request you will lay the following considerations before the Marquess of Lansdowne.

2. The two cruisers have not been commissioned as men-of-war, but are going out under the Japanese merchant flag, the captains being British subjects, and the crews also British to some extent.

In these conditions my Lords would be glad to know Lord Lansdowne's opinion on the following points:—

(i.) What would the status of these vessels be considered to be, if war should break out?

(ii.) In the event of war breaking out while they are on passage, would they be affected by the terms of the Neutrality Proclamation when issued, and, if so, in what way?

(iii.)—(a.) If after the date of issue of the Neutrality Proclamation, these vessels should arrive in a British port, would it be necessary for the authorities there to remove the British portion of the crew?

(b.) And if so, would this be done under the Foreign Enlistment Act?

(iv.) In the conditions mentioned in (iii), what would be the position if a Japanese naval crew desired to take over the vessel at a British port?

3. My Lords would be glad to receive information on the above points, in the event of naval officers being called on to act, as in the case of the Japanese torpedo gun-boat "Tatsuta," which was detained at Aden in 1894 on the outbreak of hostilities between China and Japan, and which presents certain points of similarity to the present case, though differing to the extent that the gun-boat was sailing under the Japanese man-of-war flag.

I am, &c.
(Signed) C. I. THOMAS.

Minutes.

A Memorandum is attached which states briefly the circumstances attending the case of the "Tatsuta."

The naval authorities at Aden held (27th August, 1894), that the "Tatsuta" was not in commission.

On the 21st August, 1894, the Law Officers reported:—

"The 'Tatsuta' appears to be a Japanese war vessel in the command of a Japanese officer,* and as such she cannot be boarded for any such purpose as suggested" [i.e., to withdraw the British crew]. "We are of opinion that the continuance of the voyage by the British seamen does not constitute a continuance of equipping within the meaning of the Foreign Enlistment Act."

The next day, doubts having been raised as to whether she was commissioned, the Law Officers wrote:—

"The nationality of the captain would not in any way alter the opinion we have already given if the vessel is really a commissioned vessel of war.

"It does, however, suggest that she may not yet be commissioned, and the question should be dealt with on that hypothesis.

"Even then, we are of opinion that the British seamen could not lawfully be removed by use of force, though there would not seem to be any reason why they should not be told of the risks which they are likely to run of which they may by possibility be ignorant."

I imagine the four questions should be answered categorically as follows:—

1. If the vessels are not commissioned, they must be held to have the status of vessels of the Japanese mercantile marine.

2. The British subjects on board of them would be liable to the punishments provided by the Foreign Enlistment Act if convicted by a competent Court of an offence under that Act.

3. They could not properly be forcibly removed.

4. This is a point on which some difference of opinion arose between the then Lord Chancellor and the Law Officers (see Print Nos. 209 and 210, China and Japan), but if we followed the "Tatsuta" precedent, the course is indicated in No. 212.

Mr. Davidson. W. M.

Foreign Office, January 12, 1904. F. A. C.

---

* This was not so, however.

1904

Memorandum.

The "Tatsuta," built by Sir W. Armstrong and Co., at Elswick, for the Japanese Government, was launched on the 6th April, 1894. On the 31st July of that year, the Customs reported that the vessel was about to sail at 2 P.M. on that day. They were informed, in reply, that, as no declaration of war had yet been made by China or Japan, there was no reason why, under present circumstances, the vessel should be detained.

On the 1st August the Japanese Government notified to foreign Powers that a state of war existed with China, and the Queen's Proclamation of Neutrality was issued on the 7th August.

The "Tatsuta" arrived at Port Saïd, and passed through the Suez Canal on the 19th August.

Meanwhile, the Chinese Government, through Sir H. Macartney, stated that if the vessel touched at Aden, application would be made to have British subjects removed from her.

Mr. Bertie, in his Minute recording the conversation, added that the Attorney-General, whom he had consulted, had expressed the opinion that, assuming the "Tatsuta" to be the property of the Japanese Government, and commissioned and commanded by a Japanese officer, and that part only of the crew consists of British subjects, nothing could be done.

A formal application for the withdrawal of the British portion of the crew of the "Tatsuta" was made by the Chinese Minister on the 20th August, and the Law Officers, on being consulted, expressed the opinion that no action could be taken in the sense desired by the Chinese Government.

On the 16th August the Governor of Aden telegraphed to the India Office, requesting instructions as to detention of the "Tatsuta" (in case she should call at Aden), and as to what quantity of coal should be allowed her. The India Office were informed in reply that the vessel should not be allowed to remain at Aden more than twenty-four hours, and that she should be allowed sufficient coal at Aden to carry her to Ceylon.

The "Tatsuta" arrived at Aden on the 25th August, commanded by a British subject, Captain Stranach.

The telegram from the Governor stated that the naval authorities at Aden ruled that she was not in commission, and that her crew, all British subjects, had been warned of the Proclamation of Neutrality (which contains the Foreign Enlistment Act), and the vessel directed to leave at 5 P.M. on the 27th.

This she was unable to do, owing to a portion of the crew refusing to proceed, and was taken possession of by the Senior Naval Officer at Aden.

The Law Offieers, on being consulted, urged that every care should be taken to prevent any recruitment or enlistment of men at Aden for service on board the "Tatsuta."

The Japanese Government having, meanwhile, requested that the vessel might be handed over to a duly-commissioned Japanese officer and crew to be taken to Japan, the request, after consultation with the Law Officers and with the Lord Chancellor, was complied with, provided the vessel were manned at Aden with a crew no more than sufficient properly to navigate the vessel, and that she would not, unless attacked, be used for hostile operations until her arrival in a Japanese port.

This undertaking was given by the Japanese Government; the "Tatsuta" handed over on the 14th January, 1895, and after docking for strictly necessary repairs at Bombay, the vessel arrived at Yokosuka on the 19th March.

E. G. W.

Foreign Office, April 22, 1898.

I think that the answers to these questions are as follows:—

(1.) So long as the vessels fly the Japanese mercantile flag they are presumably to be regarded as Japanese merchant-vessels.

If, and as soon as, a commissioned officer in the Japanese navy takes over command and hoists the Japanese Imperial flag and his pennant, the vessels will of course become Japanese public ships.

(2.) So long as they remain Japanese merchant-vessels I do not see how they, or the British subjects commanding them or serving as members of their crews, will come within the doctrine of the Proclamation of Neutrality or the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act. If after war breaks out, and while the vessel still flies the merchant flag of Japan, anything is done inconsistent with her merchant character those on board will incur responsibilities a good deal more serious than those which might, in other circumstances, attach to them under the Foreign Enlistment Act.

The vessel while flying the merchant flag is of course liable to be stopped on the high seas by a Russian war-ship, and taken in for adjudication, in which case, having regard to her obvious destination and the purposes for which she was evidently designed, she would no doubt be condemned and then utilized for the Russian navy. It is, however, questionable whether—as she is not now a Japanese public ship, and could not be captured by force after having struck her colours in combat to a public ship of the other belligerent—she could be immediately utilized as a Russian war-ship without adjudication and condemnation.

(3.) The answer to Question iii (a) and (b) is, No.

(4.) If we are to act on the precedent of the case of the "Tatsuta"—as I presume we are—we should allow her to be manned with a crew no more than sufficient properly to navigate the vessel, on the understanding that she would not, unless attacked, be used for hostile operations until after she had been navigated to a Japanese port. (See Lord Kimberley's note to Mr. Uchida of the 30th October, 1894.)

It is unnecessary to go into the question raised by Mr. Maycock as to some disagreement between the Lord Chancellor (Herschell) and the Law Officers—since this note was subsequent to the discussion between them, and is, moreover the authoritative utterance of Her Majesty's then Government on the question.

A merchant-vessel—if she chooses to do so—can resist capture by force at her own risk. She does not usually attempt to do so, because she would almost certainly be sunk, or otherwise seriously endangered, and the lives of those on board her put to great peril for no practical purpose.

This must, of course, go to the Attorney-General for his concurrence.

* * * * * *

I presume the Admiralty understand that if any of these British subjects enter the Japanese service before war breaks out, they will not commit a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act by continuing such service. I know nothing of the facts, but it seems not unlikely that some of these men may already have done so.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, January 13, 1904.

Question 1.—As these vessels are flying the merchant flag, they must be considered as waiving the right to any privileges granted to public vessels. But as they are apparently, in fact, the property of the Japanese Government, and proceeding to the East to take part in any war which may break out, having been built as vessels of war, they should, in the event of war breaking out while they are on the way to the East, be treated in neutral ports in the same way in which vessels of war are treated.

Question 2.—The terms of the Neutrality Proclamation as regards supply of coal, &c., to vessels of war should, in this event, be applied in the case of these vessels.

1904

Question 3.—No.

Question 4.—The precedent of the "Tatsuta" should be followed.

I agree with Mr. Davidson's observations as to the bearing of the Foreign Enlistment Act in this case.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

January 18, 1904.

No. 25

[February 16, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, February 3, 1904.

Further as to traffic between Yokohama and Yeddo, in British lighters.

WITH reference to the letter from this Office of the 16th January, 1903, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list on the subject of the prohibition by the Japanese Government of lighter traffic by foreigners between Tôkiô and Yokohama.

Your opinion with regard to the points at issue, forwarded to this Office on the 23rd February last, was communicated to His Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô, with instructions to make a representation to the Japanese Government in the sense of your Report, and to express the hope that they would see their way to accept the construction put by you on Article III of the Treaty of 1894, and that they would not interfere with the privileges as to lighter traffic between Yokohama and Tôkiô hitherto enjoyed by British subjects.

Sir C. MacDonald accordingly on the 15th May addressed a note to Baron Komura on the subject. (Inclosures in Paper A.) In one point, however, for the reasons stated in his despatch No. 70 (Paper A, printed as an Annex), he diverged from the lines laid down in your Report.

In his despatch No. 106 (Paper B) Sir C. MacDonald forwarded a copy of the reply which he received from the Japanese Government.

It will be observed that they reiterate their former arguments, viz.:—that coasting trade is not allowed to foreigners, that Tôkiô is not an open port, and that the Treaty of 1894 annuls utterly all previous Conventions and Treaties. They steadfastly refuse to acknowledge that continuity of rights which, Lord Lansdowne agrees with Sir C. MacDonald in thinking, was the object of the new Treaty and which seems amply provided for therein.

His Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô has expressed the opinion that, in the circumstances, no useful purpose would be served by continuing the controversy, and he has requested that he may be informed whether he should take any further action in the matter.

Lord Lansdowne has availed himself of the presence in England of Mr. A. B. Walford, who formerly practised as a barrister at Yokohama, and who has a special knowledge of Japanese law and of the question under discussion in the present controversy, to consult that gentleman on the subject, and his Lordship directs me specially to invite your attention to the Memorandum drawn up by Mr. Walford (Paper C), and to the arguments therein contained.

I am to request that you will take the papers submitted herewith into your consideration, and that you will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether any reply should be returned to the note from the Japanese Government, and, in the event of this being deemed advisable, as to the nature of any further representations which Sir C. MacDonald should be instructed to make.

I have, &c.

(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 70)	May	26, 1903.
" "	(No. 106)	July	18, "
Memorandum by Mr. A. B. Walford		October	30, "
Law Officers' Report		February	23, "
Reference to Law Officers		January	16, "
Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 11)	February	17, 1902.
" "	(No. 94)	August	9, "
Treaty of 1894. (Library No. 957, Treaty.)
Arrangements of 1867 (see Confidential 1579.)
Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 121)	October	28, "
Treaty of 1858. (Library No. 433, Treaty.)

Report.

We do not think that anything can be gained by replying at present to the arguments of the Japanese Government. Their note raises the question of construction of Article III of the Treaty of 1894, and, as the view of His Majesty's Government of the true construction of that Article has already been placed before the Japanese Government, there can be no object in restating it.

We have nothing to add to our previous Report, to which we adhere.

We think that the Japanese Government should be informed that His Majesty's Government adhere to their view and reserve their rights.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
February 16, 1904.

Annex.

Sir C. MacDonald to the Marquess of Lansdowne.

(No. 70.)

Tôkiô, May 26, 1903.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship herewith copy of the note which, after some preliminary conversation with members of the Japanese Foreign Office, I have, as directed by your Lordship in your despatch No. 27 of the 11th March last, addressed to Baron Komura on the question of the restrictions imposed on lighter traffic between Tôkiô and Yokohama.

Your Lordship will perceive that in one not unimportant point I have ventured to diverge from the lines laid down by the Law Officers of the Crown. In the note addressed to them, inviting their opinion on the case, occurs the following passage:—"It is to be observed that the wording of Article XX is peculiar and explicit. It does not say that all privileges whatsoever shall cease; it specifies only those arising out of the extra-territorial jurisdiction. . . . ."

The Law Officers, in their reply, differ from this view. They state that they do not think that Article XX of the 1894 Treaty can be construed so as to limit its effect merely to matters of jurisdiction, but that it appears to have been intended to determine the previously existing Treaties.

Consequently, your Lordship desired me to inform the Japanese Government that, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, the rights granted to foreigners, under the arrangements of 1867, coincided with the duration of those arrangements.

I would here beg to draw your Lordship's attention to my despatch No. 56 of the 2nd May, inclosing the draft of the Joint Case in the Perpetual Lease Arbitration proceedings, which will, by this time, be in your hands. In that despatch I intimated that Mr. Bonar would, with my full concurrence, submit to the Committee for the revision of the Joint Case the advisability of inserting a passage regarding the bearing of Article XX on the controversy. In this passage it will, doubtless, be argued that the specific confirmation of the perpetual leases carries with it the confirmation of arrangements on which these leases are based, and that such confirmation cannot be overridden by the general abrogation of pre-existing Agreements by Article XX. But it seems to me not improbable that it will be found desirable to argue, also, that Article XX was intended to abrogate the pre-existing arrangements only so far as they related to privileges appurtenant to extra-territorial jurisdiction. The former argument is not at variance with the Law Officers' Report on the lighter question, but the latter argument could hardly be used if this Legation had just informed the Japanese Government that, in the opinion of His Majesty's Government, Article XX could not be construed so as to limit its effect to the abrogation of such privileges.

I have therefore, in my note to the Japanese Foreign Office, omitted the position of the Law Officers' Report, which treats of the interpretation of the Article in question.

I have, &c.

(Signed) CLAUDE M. MACDONALD.

[INCLOSURE OVERLEAF.

1904

Inclosure.

Sir C. MacDonald to Baron Komura.

(No. 35.)

Your Excellency, Tôkiô, May 15, 1903.

I HAVE the honour to recall your attention to a matter which was under discussion between this Legation and the Imperial Foreign Office during the course of last summer, namely, the inhibition of the lighter traffic carried on by Messrs. Helm Brothers between Yokohama and Tôkiô.

The correspondence on this subject, terminating with your Excellency's note No. 71 of the 18th September last, was transmitted by me to His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, who referred it to the Law Officers of the Crown, with the result that I am instructed to complement my previous communications by the following arguments, bearing purely on the legal side of the question:—

By the Agreement of 1867, the right was granted to foreigners to reside in Tôkiô, and to convey their goods in lighters between that town and Yokohama. This right was held and enjoyed by them continuously up to, and even for some eight years subsequent to, the enforcement of the Treaty of 1894. It was first denied to them in the spring of 1902, on the ground, as your Excellency informed me, that Tôkiô was not an open port, and that the business, being one of transport to a port not opened to foreign commerce, was interdicted by that provision (Article XI) of the new Treaty, which excepts the coasting trade of each of the High Contracting Parties from the action of the Treaty, and that as Article XX annuls all previous engagements, the right granted by the Agreement of 1867 no longer existed, and the lighter traffic must therefore cease.

Basing themselves solely upon the true construction of Article III of the Treaty of 1894, by which it is concluded that the subjects of each of the High Contracting Parties shall have liberty to come with their ships and cargoes to all places, ports, and rivers in the dominions and possessions of the other which are, or may be, opened to foreign commerce, His Majesty's Government consider that Tôkiô should be regarded as a place open to foreign commerce to the extent to which it was so open before, viz., by traffic in lighters, &c., to and from Yokohama.

They maintain that there is nothing in the Treaty indicating any intention to limit the rights and privileges which previously existed at Tôkiô.

They therefore consider that British subjects are still entitled to the same privileges as to lighter traffic as existed before the Treaty.

The question has still one more aspect.

The right to bring in lighters goods which have been imported into a port open to foreign commerce appears to be incident to the right to trade, conferred by Article III of the Treaty, like the right to carry such goods by road to the place of trade, nor would the circumstances so created appear to constitute coasting trade within the meaning of Article XI.

This line of reasoning is not, however, one which I am at present concerned to emphasize.

But relying on the arguments which I have had the honour to submit to your Excellency, I am instructed to express the hope that the Imperial Japanese Government will see their way to accept the construction I have exposed of Article III of the Treaty of 1894, and will not interfere with the privileges as to lighter traffic between Tôkiô and Yokohama hitherto enjoyed by British subjects.

I take, &c.
(Signed) CLAUDE M. MACDONALD.

No. 26.

[May 11, 1904.]

(No. 1.)

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Taxation of property in foreign Settlements in Japan: Cases, &c.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, December 9, 1903.

WITH reference to your Report of the 13th August last, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you two copies of the Case and Annexes prepared for the Governments of Great Britain, France, and Germany, and of the Case of the Japanese Government,* in the arbitration respecting the taxation of property situate in the former foreign Settlements in Japan, and held under perpetual leases.

Mr. Walford is engaged on the preparatory work connected with the Counter-

Case of the three Governments, and a further communication will eventually be addressed to you on the subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

---

* Not printed.

(No. 2.)

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, January 25, 1904.

WITH reference to the letter from this Office of the 9th ultimo, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit, for your information, two printed copies of a Memorandum drawn up by Mr. Walford to assist the Committee now sitting in Paris, on which he himself is the British Representative, in the preparation of the Joint Counter-Case for the Governments of Great Britain, France, and Germany in the arbitration with regard to the perpetual leases in the former foreign Settlements in Japan.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

(No. 3.)

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, April 21, 1904.

ON the 9th December, 1903, I had the honour to transmit to you two copies of the Case and Annexes prepared for the Governments of Great Britain, France, and Germany, and of the Case of the Japanese Government in the arbitration respecting the taxation of property situated in the former foreign Settlements in Japan, and held under perpetual leases.

Printed copies of a Memorandum, drawn up by Mr. Walford to assist the Committee sitting in Paris, on which he was himself the British Representative, in the preparation of the Joint Counter-Case for the three Governments, were forwarded to you on the 25th January last.

I have now the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit two copies of the Counter-Case as finally settled by the Committee, and signed on the 20th ultimo by the British, French, and German Delegates.*

According to the terms of the Protocol, signed at Tôkiô on the 28th August, 1902,† the Counter-Cases should have been exchanged on the 28th May. As this would have necessitated the dispatch to Tôkiô of the Counter-Case of the three Governments by the middle of this month, no opportunity would have been afforded for consulting you on the subject; but the Japanese Government have requested that the time should be extended for three months, viz., until the 28th August, and His Majesty's Government and the French and German Governments have acceded to that request.

The extension of time has made it possible for his Lordship to refer the Counter-Case to you, but unfortunately the period allowed for its consideration is even now limited.

The new arrangement would, in any case, entail the dispatch of the Counter-Case to Tôkiô by the middle of June, but the French Government have expressed a desire to be able to finally put the printing in hand by the 15th May.

I have accordingly the honour to state that his Lordship hopes you will be able to inform him before that date whether you approve the Counter-Case.

The subject of the arbitration was fully described in the letter which was addressed to you from this Office on the 11th August, 1903.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

---

* Joint Counter-Case in Sir E. Monson's No. 175, March 20, 1904 (Confidential, Library No. 8187*).

† Treaty, Library No. 1160

Report.

We have no observations to make upon this Counter-Case, which appears to us to be very well drawn.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
May 11, 1904.

No. 27.

[October 15, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, September 28, 1904.

Leases in perpetuity: Appointment of Baron Descamps as Counsel for Japan.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to inform you that the Japanese Government have nominated Baron Descamps, who is a member of the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague, to act as Counsel for Japan before the Tribunal constituted under the Protocol for submitting to arbitration certain questions as to the interpretation of the Treaties with regard to leases held in perpetuity.

The question whether a Member of the Permanent Court can properly act as Counsel or Agent for one of the litigants in a case which has been referred for arbitration to that Tribunal, was raised last year in connection with the claims of certain Powers against the Republic of Venezuela. M. Renault, one of the Judges of the Permanent Tribunal, was appointed to act as leading Counsel for the French Government. On that occasion the Counsel for Venezuela addressed a formal protest against the appointment to the Administrative Council of the Court, on the ground that such persons, owing to their presumed acquaintance with other Members of the Tribunal in advance of its meeting, and of their presumed fitness to express weighty opinions upon questions of international law, as attested by their appointment on the Permanent Court, might be supposed to possess certain advantages over Counsel not so situated, and this conviction might lead litigants to suppose that a proper protection of their interests required them to retain some member of the Court as Counsel in a given case.

The second objection, they maintained, was even more serious—that suspicion might attach itself to the proceedings before the Court, and that a decision in favour of a Member of the Court acting as Counsel in one instance might exert some weight when the gentleman who was Counsel yesterday, and received a favourable decision, is himself a Judge to-day, and the Judge of yesterday is appearing as Counsel before him.

The fact of M. Renault's appointment having been brought to the knowledge of His Majesty's Government, their views on the subject were expressed in a despatch (Paper B) to His Majesty's Minister at The Hague. Lord Lansdowne stated that the question whether the Members of the Court should be permitted to appear as Advocates before it was one of great general importance, on which it appeared desirable that a conclusive decision should, in the interests of the Tribunal, once for all be taken.

His Majesty's Government concurred in the opinion, which had already been expressed on behalf of the Venezuelan Government, that the practice was open to very grave objection. It was of the utmost importance that the impartiality of the Members of the Court who might be called upon to act as Judges should remain beyond all possibility of suspicion, and the force of the objections to their acting as Advocates was greatly increased by the fact that the number of possible litigants was limited, while the questions to be decided would constantly affect the interest of a large number or even of all those litigants. It followed that, unless precautions were taken to guard against such a contingency, Members of the Tribunal would continually find themselves called upon to deal as Judges with the interest of those who have been their clients in the not remote past, or may become their clients in the not remote future.

His Majesty's Minister was instructed to make a formal protest to the Council of the Bureau, on purely general grounds, against the employment of one of the Judges of the Permanent Tribunal as Counsel in the Venezuela Arbitration.

I am to remind you that this question was not overlooked during the discussions of The Hague Conference, and that Lord Pauncefote then expressed a strong view that no Member of the Court should practise as a Counsel before it. The Conference, however, failed to arrive at an agreement, and the Convention is silent upon the subject.

In the only other case which has yet come before The Hague Tribunal, viz., "The Pious Fund of the Californias," the Mexican Government appointed as their Advocate one of the Members of the Permanent Court, and thereupon the Government of the United States thought it prudent to adopt a similar course.

In the forthcoming arbitration, Great Britain, Germany, and France together form one party, and Lord Lansdowne therefore assumes that His Majesty's Government could not, without the consent of the other Powers, address a protest to the Tribunal against the employment of M. Descamps; but if a protest should be decided on, this objection could perhaps be avoided if the other Powers declined to concur by the communication being addressed to the Permanent Council by His Majesty's Government not as litigants in this particular Arbitration, but as signatories of the Peace Convention.

The Council would not, of course, of itself be competent to decide upon the issue involved; but the views of His Majesty's Government would be on record, and it might help to discourage the practice.

The first meeting of the Tribunal appointed to arbitrate on the question of the Japanese leases is fixed to take place on the 21st November next.

I am directed to transmit to you the papers noted in the annexed list, and to ask you to favour Lord Lansdowne, at your early convenience, with your opinion whether any, and if so what, steps should be taken in the present instance by His Majesty's Government, and with any observations of a general nature which you may be good enough to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Sir H. Howard..	(No. 107)	September 9, 1903.
(B.)	To Sir H Howard	(No. 64)	„ 29, „
(C.)	Sir H. Howard..	(No. 115)	„ 20, „
(D.)	Ditto	(No. 119)	„ 30, „
(E.)	Ditto	(No. 120)	„ 30, „
(F.)	Ditto	(No. 122)	October 5, „
(G.)	Ditto	(No 123)	„ 5, „
(H.)	Ditto	..	„ 16, „
(I.)	Ditto	(No. 133)	„ 28, „
(J.)	Ditto	(No. 136)	November 4, „
(K.)	Ditto	(No. 93)	June 29, 1904.
(L.)	Ditto	(No. 113)	August 22, „
(M.)	Ditto	(No. 120)	September 7, „
(O.)	Hague Convention (Treaty Series No. 9, 1901). Foreign Office Library, No. 1118, July 29, 1899.
(P.)	Protocol of August 28, 1902 (Treaty Series No. 16, 1903.) Foreign Office Library, No. 1160.

Report.

We agree with the view that His Majesty's Government could not, without the concurrence of France and Germany, raise objection to the appointment of Baron Descamps to act as Counsel for Japan in the pending arbitration. Unless, therefore, the other Powers agree to this course, we think that any representation or protest by His Majesty's Government should be of a general character, and without specific reference to the appointment of Baron Descamps.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
October 15, 1904.

1904

RUSSIA.

No. 28.

[February 19, 1904.]

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received February 19.)

Supply of coal of Russian Volunteer Fleet during war.

1. IN our opinion, no general direction can be given as to whether ships of the Volunteer Fleet are to be considered as war-ships within the meaning of Rule 8 of the Notification issued by the Egyptian Government (10th February, 1904). Each case must be separately considered.

2. But as the ships are in the service of the Russian Government, and intended, if necessary, to be used for warlike purposes, we think that when they are being used for conveying munitions of war, or any goods which are intended for the use of the belligerent Power in carrying on hostilities, they would come within the definition in the said Rule.

3. On the other hand, when they are merely conveying ordinary merchandize in the way of general commerce, they should not be treated as war-ships within the definition.

(Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

Annex.

The Earl of Cromer to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received February 11, 10 P.M.)

(No. 13. Treaty.)
(Telegraphic.) Cairo, February 11, 1904, 8.35 P.M.

ARRANGEMENT at Port Saïd is working smoothly as regards ships of war, but the Commander of one of ships of Volunteer Fleet refused to sign Declaration on the ground of her being a merchant-vessel. She was allowed to take 2,400 tons of coal. There can be no doubt whatever that she comes under Rule 8. She carried fifteen guns. I think Volunteer Fleet should be treated as ships of war. My only hesitation in giving orders to that effect arises from fact that these ships are apparently allowed to pass through the Dardanelles, so that, by treating them as ships of war here, some other important questions may be raised. I should be glad to have an early expression of your views.

Minutes.

We must refer as soon as possible to the Law Officers.

Would a Volunteer ship, fully equipped and armed for war, be allowed to pass through the Dardanelles?

Are we aware of any such cases?

L.

I am not at all clear that the questions (1) of allowing this vessel to pass the Dardanelles and (2) of allowing her coal under the Canal Rules are interdependent.

What the authorities who administer the Canal Rules have got to look to is the language of those Rules, and if, as Lord Cromer says, "there can be no doubt whatever that this vessel comes under Rule 8," I do not think that her Commander should have been allowed coal without signing the Declaration.

The question of the status of the Volunteer Fleet is a very complicated one, on which, in the very limited state of my knowledge on the point, I should not be justified in offering an off-hand opinion. But I do not understand that we have ever acquiesced in such vessels being allowed to pass the Dardanelles, although, of course, we have not resorted to force to prevent their so doing.

Moreover, the Porte have not treated them on the footing of merchant-vessels, but have always granted Iradés before they were allowed to pass.

The telegram says that the vessel "carried fifteen guns," from which, in ordinary circumstances, I should have inferred that the guns were mounted.

It is an odd phrase to employ with regard to guns which were purely cargo, and "carried" in the vessel's hold, and I think, perhaps, it might be safer to telegraph to Lord Cromer inquiring whether the guns were mounted, or whether they were merely cargo, and what other cargo the vessel had on board, what flag she flew, and whether the Commander had a Commission; also whether there were Russian troops on board, and whether she had an ordinary crew for a merchant-ship of her size.

In order to bring the vessel within Rule 8—which, as Lord Cromer has let her have the coal without signing the Declaration, we do not want to do if we can reasonably exclude her—she must be either a man-of-war, a transport, or a fleet auxiliary, &c.; and if she is a mere merchant-vessel laden with contraband cargo, not necessarily destined direct for the fleet, it seems possible that she may not come within the Rule.

If Lord Cromer had refused her coal, and the Commander had then signed a Declaration under protest, the situation would have been easier to deal with, but by allowing the Captain to have the coal without signing the Declaration, the ship has been treated as though she did not come within Rule 8, and as though the Captain's contention that she is a merchant-vessel were correct.

In these circumstances, I am inclined to think that we should seek for circumstances justifying their method of regarding this particular ship, and then, in the event of other vessels of the Volunteer Fleet appearing at Port Saïd, find discriminating circumstances in their case to bring them within the Rule. But I fear the case is a very difficult one to deal with, after what has occurred, in a thoroughly satisfactory or logical manner.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 12, 1904.

The Marquess of Lansdowne to the Earl of Cromer.

(Treaty.)
(Telegraphic.) Foreign Office, February 12, 1904, 4·25 P.M.

Your telegram No. 13, Treaty: Coaling of volunteer steamer.

Were the guns mounted or carried in hold?

What was the nature of the cargo?

Were Russian troops on board, and were the crew of the ordinary number for a merchant-vessel?

What flag was the ship flying, and was the vessel in other respects equipped for war?

The Earl of Cromer to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received February 14, 4 P.M.)

(No. 14. Treaty.)
(Telegraphic.) Cairo, February 14, 1904, 12.15 P.M.

Treaty: Your telegram 12th February.

Following from Consul at Port Saïd:—

"Volunteer steamer 'Smolensk,' guns not apparent. Cargo general; no troops; crew 176, not excessive for 12,000 tons; speed, 20 knots. Flying Volunteer Fleet flag, namely, bugle in middle of blue instead of in top of white band, as in merchant service. Instead of the usual route, straight from the Dardanelles, went towards Piræus for two torpedo-boats, which it convoyed here. Took 2,400 tons of coal and [left] with one of the torpedo-boats for Jibuti to join Admiral there. Is included in naval [group undecypherable] code under the Russian Navy."

Minute.

Mr. Davidson. W. M.

Foreign Office, February 15, 1904.

There would seem to be nothing inconsistent with the character of a merchant-vessel carrying contraband goods for the use of a belligerent in the conduct of the "Smolensk."

She is described as "convoying the torpedo-boats," but this does not seem to have been a convoying to protect them against hostile attack, but merely as accompanying the boats in order to protect them against the perils of the sea, and for the purpose of standing by them in heavy weather, &c.—in other words, what is technically known as "mothering" them.

There is, however, no doubt that practically she was in the service of the Russian Government, and I do not think that she ought to have been given coal if and when the Commander declined to sign the Declaration. A ship may be a merchant-vessel and yet be "employed by a belligerent Power as a fleet auxiliary" (see Rule 8), and I think the case might have been dealt with under this Rule, without contending that she either was or was not a merchant-vessel.

1904

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 15, 1904.

How do we stand with regard to this question? Have we not referred to the Law Officers?

L.

Mr. Davidson considered it necessary to obtain further information than that contained in Lord Cromer's first telegram before referring the question to the Law Officers. He has now got all the papers, and will refer them at once to the Attorney-General.

C. H

Please let this be done as soon as possible.

L.

I had already sent the papers with a copy of this telegram, which were supplied to me by the Department, and a long Minute by myself, to the Solicitor-General.

I had previously ascertained from the House of Commons by telephone that the Attorney-General "would not be in attendance at the House to-day," so I fear that he is still unwell.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, February 15, 1904.

L.

No. 29.

[March 11, 1904.]

Admiralty to Foreign Office.—(Received March 8.)

Admiralty, March 8, 1904.

Sir,

War with Japan: Supply of coal to Russian vessels, the Russians regarding coal as contraband.

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to request you will move the Marquess of Lansdowne, should he see no objection, to cause the Law Officers of the Crown to be consulted on the following point of international law which arises out of the conditions of the war between Japan and Russia:—

"The Governments of the two belligerents having proclaimed coal to be contraband of war (Russia absolutely and Japan conditionally), does this affect the position of Great Britain as a neutral Power, under the rules laid down in Foreign Office letter of the 10th February, 1904, whereby coal within certain limits and in certain conditions can be given to belligerent men-of-war in British ports?"

In other words, as regards Russian men-of-war, in respect of which this point can alone arise in present conditions, is the decision of the Czar to confiscate cargoes of coal carried in neutral merchant-ships as contraband of war consistent with a claim for Russian men-of-war destined for the Far East to take coal in a British port under the British rules?

I am, &c.
(Signed) C. I. THOMAS.

Minutes.

This is an interesting, and, so far as I know, a novel point. It has a bearing on the question propounded by Baron Gericke on the 16th February (print, § 2, p. 50), but we were unaware of the Russian Declaration then.

At first sight there would seem to be no connection between coal supplied by a neutral to the public ship of a belligerent, and a declaration by such belligerent that coal carried by a merchant-ship is contraband of war.

I presume, however, the underlying theory is that we are warranted in saying to Russia: "Since you will not allow British colliers to carry, either directly or indirectly, a commodity which may be utilized as a propelling force by the public ships of Japan, it follows that we shall not be observing our duties as neutrals to Japan by allowing your ships any coal at all."

But if this is the theory on which the proposition rests (and I can think of no other for the moment), then it would seem to follow that we should have to apply the same principle to Japanese ships, since one of the conditions in which the latter declare coal to be contraband is when it is destined for the enemy's navy.

Mr. Davidson.

W. M.

Foreign Office, March 8, 1904.

I do not understand on what theory the question rests; but we must consult the Law Officers about the matter, as we have promised the Admiralty to do.

We shall have, I think, to protest against the Russian claim to treat coal and food-stuffs as absolute contraband of war. Possibly the Admiralty think that our protest should take a retaliatory form, by denying their public ships a modicum of coal in our ports. But this—as it seems to me—would be a very impolitic proceeding.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, March 8, 1904.

We do not think that coal should be refused to Russian vessels, unless it is determined to retaliate against Russia for treating coal as absolutely contraband—this, of course, would be a very serious step.

There is no connection between the two questions, unless Great Britain were prepared to adopt the view on which we understand China is acting—viz., that contraband should not be supplied at a neutral port. We presume that there is no intention of adopting this extension of the doctrine as to the duties of neutrals.

R. B. F.
E. C.

Foreign Office, March 11, 1904.

No. 30.

[March 25, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, March 12, 1904.

Gentlemen,

War with Japan: Russian rules respecting Contraband and other matters.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit, for your consideration, the papers noted in the accompanying list relating to the Rules respecting contraband and other matters which will be enforced by the Russian Government during the continuance of hostilities between that country and Japan.

I am to direct your attention more particularly to Rule 6 of the Russian Proclamation (Paper A), which defines the articles which are to be deemed contraband of war, and especially to the following sub-sections of that Rule, viz., (8) "Coal, naphtha, alcohol," &c., (9) "Articles and material for the installation of telegraphs, telephones, or for the construction of railroads," and (10) "Rice, provisions," &c.

I am to explain that, as the result of telegraphic correspondence with His Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh (copies of which are inclosed for convenience of reference—Papers B and C), it has been ascertained that the Russian Government evidently intend to treat coal as unconditionally contraband of war. This attitude on the part of the Russian Government is clearly not in harmony with the very emphatic and definite pronouncement to the contrary effect which was made by Count Kapnist, the Russian Delegate at the West African Conference of 1884, and which is quoted on p. 2 of the inclosed Memorandum (Paper D).

1904

His Majesty's Government have also made inquiry of the Governments of Austria-Hungary, France, Germany, Italy, and the United States as to the view taken by them of the Russian Proclamation, and a summary of their opinions will be found in the annexed telegrams from His Majesty's Representatives at Vienna, Paris, Berlin, Rome, and Washington (Papers E, F, G, H, I, J, K).

During the Franco-Prussian War of 1870, the German Government protested against the export of coal and other warlike stores from this country to France; and on the 11th August, 1870, a Circular was addressed to His Majesty's Representatives abroad, in the course of which the following passage occurs:—

"But even if this point were clearly defined, it is beyond dispute that the contraband character would depend upon the destination. The neutral Power could hardly be called upon to prevent the exportation of such cargoes to a neutral port; and if this be the case, how could it be decided at the time of departure of a vessel whether the alleged neutral destination were real or colourable?"

On the 15th September, 1870, a comprehensive reply was returned by Lord Granville to the Prussian Minister's complaints. With regard to the demanded prohibition of the export to France of arms, coal, &c., his Lordship said:—

"There is no doubt that the Executive has, under 'The Customs Consolidation Act, 1853,' the legal power to prohibit the export of contraband of war, but the highest authority can be adduced to show that such exportation is not forbidden by our municipal law, and it has not been the practice to prohibit it except when the interests of this country, as in the case of self-defence, are directly and immediately concerned in the prohibition."

The view taken by His Majesty's Government with regard to coal during the Franco-Chinese War of 1885 and the Spanish-American War of 1898 is summarized on pp. 1 and 2 of the Memorandum (Paper D) above referred to. In view of the fact that on no previous occasion has coal been classed as unconditionally contraband, Lord Lansdowne would be glad to be favoured with your opinion (1) whether His Majesty's Government should at once protest against this Proclamation, or whether they should wait until some specific cargo of coal has been condemned by the Russian authorities, and (2) if you consider that a protest should be made, what form it should take.

"(9) Articles and material for the installation of telegraphs, telephones, or for the construction of railroads."

There appears to Lord Lansdowne to be no reason whatever for including these articles unconditionally in contraband, and that, at most, they can only become so when there is reason to believe that they are intended to be employed to further belligerent operations.

"(10.) Rice, provisions, ... if they are transported on account of, or are destined for the enemy."

This sub-section as it stands is exceedingly difficult to construe. It appears from Sir C. Scott's telegrams (Papers B and C) that the Russian Government interpret the words "for the enemy," as meaning in this case "to Japan or to Japanese armed forces."

The Russian Regulations in regard to naval prizes (Paper L) do not appear to contain any provisions with reference to goods which are contraband only under certain conditions, and the answer of the Russian Government contained in the telegram (Paper C) suggests that they place the articles enumerated under section 6 (10) of the Proclamation in the same category as the contraband referred to in Article 2 (1) of the Russian Naval Prize Regulations, i.e., goods which are absolutely contraband. A summary of the attitude of His Majesty's Government as regards the above category of contraband will be found on pp. 2, 3, and 4 of the Memorandum already alluded to (Paper D), and a further Memorandum (Paper M), also inclosed, deals generally with this question.

I am to invite your particular attention to the opinion, dated the 26th October, 1899, of the then Law Officers, which is quoted in Paper (M), and to the Lord Chancellor's opinion of the 9th November, 1899, of which a separate copy is annexed (Paper N).

I am to request that you will inform his Lordship whether, in your opinion, Article 6 (10) of the Proclamation is, as to food-stuffs, a departure from the general rule of international law, or whether the saving clause "if they are transported on account of, or are destined for the enemy," may be treated as sufficient to bring it into harmony with the rules which have been acted on by His Majesty's Government. If you consider that the sub-section is in any respect (i.e., not only as to food-stuffs) contrary to the general practice of international law, I am to request that you will inform his Lordship what steps it would be advisable for His Majesty's Government to take in the matter.

I am to add that the Russian Prize Law Procedure Rules of 1895 will form the subject of a separate reference, which will be sent to you as soon as the necessary notes and Memoranda can be prepared.

I have, &c.
(Signed) C. HARDINGE.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Russian Proclamation (Confidential No. 8101*)		February	14, 1904.
(B.)	To Sir C. Scott	(Telegraphic)	March	3, „
(C.)	Sir C. Scott	(Telegraphic)	March	7, „
(D.)	Memorandum by Mr. Maycock (and Minutes)		March	1, „
(E.)	To His Majesty's Representatives at Paris, Berlin, Rome, Vienna, and Washington.	(Telegraphic)	March	4, „
(F.)	Sir E. Monson	(Telegraphic)	March	5, „
(G.)	Sir F. Plunkett	(Telegraphic)	March	6, „
(H.)	Sir M. Durand	(Telegraphic)	March	7, „
(I.)	Sir F. Bertie	(Telegraphic)	March	8, „
(J.)	Sir F. Lascelles	(Telegraphic)	March	8, „
(K.)	Sir M. Durand	(Telegraphic)	March	10, „
(L.)	Russian Regulations in regard to Naval Prizes (1895).*
(M.)	Memorandum by Mr. Oakes		March	7, „
(N.)	Opinion of Lord Chancellor (Confidential No. 7356, p. 16) ..		November	9, 1899.
(O.)	Sir Robert Reid		February	22, 1904.
(P.)	To Sir Robert Reid		February	26, „
(Q.)	Sir E. Monson	(No. 12, Treaty)	March	11, „

Report.

1. Whether any protest should be sent in is, of course, a matter of policy, but, in answer to the question put to us, we say that, in our opinion, it would probably be better to protest at once against the unqualified treatment of coal as contraband of war. Coal is contraband if for the use of the enemy's war-vessels; but whether this is so or not is a question of fact in each particular case.

2. We think that the protest should call attention to the generally-recognized rule that coal is only conditionally contraband, and to the views previously enunciated by Russia.

3. Telegraphs, railway materials, &c., are also ancipitis usûs.

4. Head (10) as to rice, &c., is somewhat ambiguous, but it seems clear that the Russian Government regard it as making rice contraband if intended for Japan, apart from the question whether it is intended for the use of the Japanese forces. This seems to us to be inconsistent with the true view of international law. We do not think that the qualifying words at the end of the sentence can be relied on as bringing the rule into harmony with the view acted on by His Majesty's Government, particularly having regard to the expressed views of the Russian Government as to its interpretation.

The enormous importance to this country of maintaining the rule that food is not contraband unless the inference can be properly drawn that it is for the use of the enemy's forces, or of a besieged town, cannot be lost sight of in considering the propriety of sending a protest with reference to the proposed treatment of food-stuffs.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
March 25, 1904.

---

* For original text, see inclosure in Sir C. Scott's No. 4, Treaty, of February 18, 1904.

1904

No. 31.

[May 31, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, May 9, 1904.

Further correspondence respecting status of Russian Volunteer Fleet.

WITH reference to your Report of the 19th February last (a copy of which is inclosed for convenience of reference, Packet B, No. 4), I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the further correspondence, noted in the accompanying list, with regard to the status of vessels of the Russian Volunteer Fleet.

I am to invite your especial attention to the Memorandum exchanged with the Russian Ambassador on the subject (Packet A, Nos. 7 and 8), in the course of which the Russian Government draw an analogy between these vessels and the Royal Naval Reserve merchant cruisers held at the disposition of the Admiralty, and also to the Admiralty letter commenting upon this view (Packet A, No. 13); to the note addressed by the Russian Consul-General at Cairo to the Egyptian Government as to the treatment of vessels of the Volunteer Fleet in the Suez Canal and its ports of access (Packet A, Nos. 9, 10, 11); and to the protest made by the Acting Russian Consul at Singapore dealing with the action of the local authorities in the case of the steamship "Voronej" (Packet C, No. 6). I am also to call attention to the views expressed on the general question by Mr. Davidson, K.C., and Mr. Hurst, the Legal Adviser and Assistant Legal Adviser to this Department (Packet A, No. 6); and I am to request that, in taking these papers into your consideration, you will favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether it is possible to lay down any general principle as regards the treatment of vessels of this category (a) under the Rules adopted by the Egyptian Government, and (b) under the British Rules, or whether each case should still, in accordance with the opinion already expressed in your Report of the 19th February last, be considered on its merits as it arises.

Copies of these Rules are inclosed for convenience of reference (Packet A, Nos. 1 and 2).

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A.)—General.

1.	Suez Canal Rules (Confidential No. 8404, p. 73)		February	10, 1904.
2.	British Rules (Confidential No. 8404, p. 77)		„	10, „
3.	Memorandum, Mr. G. E. P. Hertslet		August	22, 1896.
4.	Confidential Memorandum	(No. 7781)	October	1902.
5.	Ditto ditto	(No. 7784)	„	„
6.	Minutes, Sir C. Hardinge and others		March	31, 1904.
7.	Memorandum given to Count Benckendorff		April	6, „
8.	Ditto given by ditto		„	13, „
9.	Lord Cromer	(No. 40. Telegraphic)	„	7, „
10.	To Lord Cromer	(No. 16)	„	15, „
11.	Lord Cromer	(No. 19. Treaty)	„	8, „
12.	To Sir C. Scott	(No. 29. Treaty)	„	13, „
13.	Admiralty		„	30, „

(B.)—Case of "Smolensk."

1.	Lord Cromer (and Minutes)	(Telegraphic)	February	11, 1904.
2.	To Lord Cromer		„	12, „
3.	Lord Cromer		„	14, „
4.	Law Officers		„	19, „
5.	To Lord Cromer	(Telegraphic)	„	19, „

(C.)—Case of "Voronej."

1.	Colonial Office		February	13, 1904.
2.	Ditto		„	23, „
3.	Memorandum, Sir T. Sanderson		„	15, „
4.	Colonial Office, with telegram [Straits Settlements]		„	18, „
5.	Sir T. Sanderson to Count Benckendorff		„	18, „
6.	Colonial Office		March	16, „
7.	To Sir C. Scott	(No. 20. Treaty)	„	30, „

Report.

We do not think it is possible to lay down any general principle beyond that indicated in our Report of the 19th February, nor, as to its application in each particular case, have we anything to add to that Report. This applies to the Rules of the Egyptian and the British Government alike.

As regards the despatch of the 7th April, 1904 from Consul-General Smith upon the facts as stated in the telegram, we think the ships should be treated as ships of war.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
May 31, 1904.

No. 32.

[June 3, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, May 9, 1904.

Russo-Japanese War. Use of Wireless Telegraphy.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers indicated in the accompanying list on the subject of the Declaration recently issued by the Russian Government to the effect that correspondents on board neutral vessels, who may communicate news to the enemy by means of improved telegraphic or other apparatus not yet provided for by existing Conventions, will, if such vessels are arrested off the coast of Kwantung or within the zone of operations of the Russian fleet, be treated as spies, and vessels having on board apparatus for transmitting messages by wireless telegraphy will be considered as lawful prize of war.

This Declaration, which was apparently directed against the action of the "Times" newspaper, on board of whose chartered steamer the "Haimun" an apparatus for the transmission of messages by the De Forrest system of wireless telegraphy has been installed, was communicated to the Foreign Office by the Russian Ambassador on the 16th instant (Paper (A)), and on the following day a letter was received from Mr. Moberly Bell, the manager of the "Times" (Paper (B)) drawing attention to it, and pointing out that, as the "Times" is the only newspaper employing a steamer with wireless telegraphic apparatus on board, the notice was obviously aimed at that journal.

Mr. Bell proceeds in his letter to put forward arguments to prove that the action of the Russian Government is neither justifiable nor necessary. He states that the "Haimun" is under the British flag, that the apparatus on board is the property of the "Times," and that their correspondent, Captain James, is a British officer. He argues that even if telegraphic apparatus is contraband of war, a question which he does not consider himself competent to discuss, contraband of war can only be seized when there is an intention of putting it at the disposal of a belligerent—and that in this case there is and can be no such intention. The apparatus consists of an instrument which is, and is bound to remain, on a British ship, and another instrument which is fixed on British territory at Wei-hai-Wei. Such information as Captain

1904

James can obtain he can only obtain from the Japanese, and he can only telegraph it to Great Britain viâ Wei-hai-Wei. If he desired to communicate with Japan he has no means of doing so through the apparatus, because he can only telegraph to one place, namely, Wei-hai-Wei. Mr. Bell considers the idea that the Japanese may want to intercept Captain James' information is ridiculous, because he is the correspondent with the Japanese forces, and it is from them that he gets such information as he sends.

Wireless telegraphy, Mr. Bell states, is not, and cannot be, used by any of the "Times" correspondents with the Russian forces; and they have no more power of communicating with Wei-hai-Wei by means of it than with St. Petersburgh.

Mr. Bell concludes by asking for information and advice in the matter.

A protest against the action of the Russian Government from the correspondent of the "Times" at Wei-hai-Wei was also published in the "Times" of the 19th April (Paper (C)).

Lord Lansdowne was advised that the arguments of Mr. Moberly Bell were far from conclusive.

It was evident that, even if the power of communication of the "Times" correspondent on board the "Haimun" were confined to communicating from any place within the zone of operations at which he chanced to be to Wei-hai-Wei, information as to Russian, as well as Japanese, movements, it might readily be used to the great detriment of Russia and to the great advantage of Japan.

It was not unnatural that the Russian Government, being well aware of the very general sympathy extended to Japan by the British nation, and being also aware that, owing to the expulsion of one of their correspondents last year, the "Times" newspaper was probably not well disposed towards them, might feel some difficulty in accepting any assurance from the managers of that newspaper that the information thus obtained would not be turned to an improper use. His Majesty's Government could, moreover, clearly not take upon themselves any responsibility, vis-à-vis of the Russian Government, for the bona fides of any newspaper in this regard.

His Lordship was further advised that, apart from any detriment to Russian interests which might be caused by communication between the "Haimun" and the private receiver of the "Times" at Wei-hai-Wei, it would be easy for the Japanese fleet to tune an apparatus so that it would be capable of intercepting and receiving messages sent by the apparatus now carried on board of the "Haimun," and in this case the Japanese fleet would practically be able to make use of the "Times" steamer as though she were a Japanese despatch-boat or cruiser employed in observation before Port Arthur or elsewhere within the sphere of warlike operations. It appeared to Lord Lansdowne, moreover, that the presence of a war correspondent furnished with an apparatus of this kind within the zone of operations would be in itself a matter of which either belligerent had a right to complain, and that, if the apparatus were so employed by a neutral on board a neutral vessel as in fact to result in placing information of the movements of one belligerent at the disposal of the other to the detriment of the former, the neutral person thus carrying the information would render himself liable to the most serious consequences.

The case would appear to differ little in principle from that of a neutral war correspondent who, without being actually attached to either belligerent, circulated within the theatre of war, and while clothed with neutrality picked up valuable information which he conveyed directly or indirectly to one of the combatants concerning the movements of the other.

In the present case the "Times" correspondent was apparently in a far more advantageous position in regard to Japan if he wanted to help her, and in a far more advantageous position also if he were willing to disserve Russia, than if he were on board the Japanese flag-ship and subject to censorship.

Before dealing with the question from a legal point of view, it was thought advisable to refer the matter to the Admiralty (see Paper (D)) for the opinion of the Lords Commissioners on the question of policy involved, having regard to the effect which any decision now arrived at might have on the interests of His Majesty's naval forces in the event of this country being engaged in hostilities.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty expressed themselves in their reply (Paper (E)) as entirely in accord with the view taken by the Foreign Office, and, consequently, as not in sympathy with the action of the "Times" in chartering a vessel for the purpose of transmitting messages by means of wireless telegraphy, or with Mr. Bell's protest against the Russian Declaration.

Their Lordships added that if Great Britain were at war the presence of press steamers fitted with wireless telegraphic apparatus would, in their opinion, be so prejudicial to naval operations that it could not be tolerated, and it would be necessary to promulgate some such Notification as that now issued by the Russian Government, and urged the inexpediency of allowing the action of the "Times" to establish what would certainly prove to be a most inconvenient precedent.

The question of the possibility of intercepting messages sent by the De Forrest system from the "Haimun" to the station at Wei-hai-Wei was referred to the expert adviser of the Admiralty in matters connected with wireless telegraphy, who gave it as his opinion that, assuming that the Japanese were sufficiently advanced in this branch of science, it would be perfectly possible for them to intercept any such messages, since the "tuning" of the apparatus presented no serious difficulty to experts.

A communication has been received from the United States' Chargé d'Affaires (Paper (F)) stating that when acknowledging the Russian Declaration his Government added that they "do not waive any right they may have in international law in the case of any American citizens who may be arrested, or of any American vessels that may be seized under it."

On the 26th ultimo Lord Lansdowne informed the Russian Ambassador (Paper (G)) that the question, raised for the first time by this Declaration, will require careful examination at the hands of His Majesty's Government, and that, in the meantime, they must reserve any rights which they may have in international law in the event of arrests of British subjects or seizures of British vessels taking place under the Declaration.

I am to request you to take these papers into your consideration and to favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion whether the Russian Circular affords any, and if so what, grounds for a protest by His Majesty's Government. Lord Lansdowne would also be glad to be furnished with any observations of a general nature which you may have to offer on the case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A) Count Benckendorff	April 15, 1904.
(B.) Mr. Moberly Bell	April 16, „
(C.) "Times" extract	April 19, „
(D.) To Admiralty	April 22, „
(E.) Admiralty	April 22, „
(F.) Mr. White	April 21, „
(G.) To Count Benckendorff	April 26, „
(H.) Colonial Office	April 22, „
(I.) Admiralty	April 28, „

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, May 24, 1904.

WITH reference to my letter of the 9th instant, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you two further letters which have been received from the Colonial Office, forwarding correspondence with the Commissioner of Wei-hai-Wei, dealing with questions which have arisen in connection with the establishment of wireless telegraphic communication between the British steamship "Haimun," which has been chartered by the "Times" newspaper, and the British dependency of Wei-hai-Wei.

It appears from the inclosures in the Colonial Office letter of the 30th April (Paper (A)) that the wireless telegraphic station was established at Wei-hai-Wei by the "Times," with the permission of the Government of the dependency, and that the Commissioner, who was absent from Wei-hai-Wei when the application was made, saw no objection to the erection of the apparatus.

On the other hand, the Commander-in-chief on the China Station considered that the transmission of messages for public use by wireless telegraphy from the sphere of operations, unrestrained by censorship, was inconsistent with the observance of neutrality, and should not be officially sanctioned.

1904

The Commissioner, having no precedent to guide him in deciding the question raised by the Admiral, has referred the matter home.

The correspondence inclosed in the Colonial Office letter of the 11th May (Paper (B)) has reference to the censorship of telegrams dispatched from the "Haimun."

Captain James, the special correspondent of the "Times," informed Mr. Lockhart that arrangements had been made for all messages to be censored by the Japanese. In reply to inquiries from the Colonial Office as to how and where the messages were censored, Mr. Lockhart stated that they were censored on board the "Haimun" by the Japanese officer who was always stationed on that vessel.

On receipt of this information a telegram was sent to His Majesty's Minister at Tôkiô (Paper (C)), asking whether he could obtain confirmation of it from the Japanese Government.

Sir C. MacDonald replied (Paper (E)) that the officer in question was in no way officially appointed by the Japanese Government, that he did not censor telegrams, and had not with him any Japanese cypher or code, and that he would be at once recalled if Lord Lansdowne desired. Sir Claude MacDonald added that he was a Japanese officer on half-pay, and a guest on board the vessel.

Mr. Moberly Bell, the manager of the "Times," stated, in reply to inquiries which had been made of him (Paper (D)), that he was not "officially" aware of the fact that there was a Japanese censor on board the "Times" steamer, though he thought it extremely probable, that press telegrams were not sent in cypher or code, and that, so far as he was aware, press telegrams only had been sent by wireless telegraphy.

In view of the difficulty of reconciling Captain James' statement with the information supplied by Sir C. MacDonald, the position of the Japanese officer on board the "Haimun" and the nature of the arrangements made for censoring messages dispatched from that vessel remain unexplained, and Mr. Moberly Bell's letter throws no light on the matter.

I am to inquire whether you are of opinion that the establishment of a wireless telegraphy station at Wei-hai-Wei constitutes a breach of neutrality, and whether the answer to the question submitted for your consideration in the Foreign Office letter of the 9th May is, in your opinion, in any way affected by the fact of the presence on board the "Haimun" of a Japanese officer, either as an official censor on behalf of the Japanese Government or as a private guest of the "Times" newspaper or of its correspondent.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Colonial Office	.. ..	April 30, 1904.
(B.)	Ditto	.. ..	May 11, „
(C.)	To Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 85. Telegraphic)	May 16, „
(D.)	To Mr. Moberly Bell	.. ..	May 17, „
(E.)	Sir C. MacDonald	(No. 144. Telegraphic)	May 17, „
(F.)	Mr. Moberly Bell	.. ..	May 18, ,

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, May 30, 1904.

With reference to my letters of the 9th and 24th instant, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you a letter which has been received from the Admiralty,* inclosing a communication from Sir C. Bridge, late Commander-in-chief on the China Station, in which he gives his reasons for the objection taken by him to the establishment of a wireless telegraphy installation at Wei-hai-Wei.

I am to request that you will take Sir C. Bridge's letter into your consideration in connection with the papers forwarded to you in the letters from this Office above referred to.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

---

* Admiralty, May 25, 1904.

Report.

In our opinion the Russian Circular does not afford any grounds for a protest by His Majesty's Government. In its terms the Circular only applies to correspondents on board vessels who transmit news to the enemy by means of wireless telegraphy, and it cannot, in our opinion, be contested that a belligerent is within his rights in preventing such transmission.

In reply to Mr. Campbell's further letters of the 24th May and of the 30th May, and inclosures, we are of opinion that the establishment of a wireless telegraphy station at Wei-hai-Wai does not per se constitute a breach of neutrality, though no doubt if it were allowed to be used as a means of communicating information to the enemy or were likely to be so used it might be regarded as inconsistent with the duties of neutrality.

We think that the presence on board the "Haimun" of a Japanese officer as an official censor would, from the Russian point of view, naturally tend to aggravate the case, and even if his presence is unofficial, it could not fail to give rise to suspicions. We think it open to serious objection that a British vessel so employed should have on board a Japanese officer in any official capacity.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 3, 1904.

No. 33.

[June 6, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Russo-Japanese War.

Supply of coal to belligerent ships; their reception in British ports.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, June 3, 1904.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list with reference to the terms and conditions on which, during the continuance of the present hostilities between Russia and Japan, coal should be supplied to Russian public vessels visiting British ports.

On the outbreak of war between the two Powers, His Majesty issued a Proclamation of Neutrality (Paper (A)), dated the 11th February, 1904, together with Rules and Regulations for its observance, to Rule 3 of which I am to invite your especial attention. That Rule runs as follows:—

> "No ship of war of either belligerent shall hereafter be permitted, while in any such port, roadstead, or waters subject to the territorial jurisdiction of His Majesty, to take in any supplies except provisions and such other things as may be requisite for the subsistence of her crew, and except so much coal only as may be sufficient to carry such vessel to the nearest port of her own country, or to some nearer-named neutral destination; and no coal shall again be supplied to any such ship of war in the same or any other port, roadstead, or waters subject to the territorial jurisdiction of His Majesty, without special permission, until after the expiration of three months from the time when such coal may have been last supplied to her within British waters as aforesaid."

On the 28th February last the Emperor of Russia issued a Proclamation declaring every kind of fuel, such as coal, naphtha, alcohol, and other similar materials, to be absolute contraband of war ("combustibles de tout genre, tel que: charbon, naphte, alcool, et autres matériaux semblables").

1904

Hitherto Russia had—so far, at any rate, as her most recent public declaration is concerned, not only not regarded coal as absolutely (as distinguished from conditionally) contraband, but had declined, in the most positive and clear terms, to consent to its treatment even as an article ancipitis usûs.

Count Kapnist, the Russian Plenipotentiary at the West African Conference held at Berlin in 1884, made the following declaration:—

> "Je dois faire une réserve toute spéciale quant au troisième alinéa de l'Article XIII, qui a trait aux objets considérés comme articles de contrebande de guerre. . . . . Je veux parler de la proposition Anglaise, ... dans laquelle la houille se trouverait rangée parmi les articles devant être considérés, en vertu du droit des gens, comme contrebande de guerre. . . . . Je dois déclarer, pour me conformer à mes instructions, que le Gouvernement Impérial de Russie n'accepterait en aucun cas une telle interprétation.
>
> "Sur ce point mes instructions sont péremptoires. Le Gouvernement que j'ai l'honneur de représenter ici refuserait catégoriquement son assentiment à l'Article d'un Traité, d'une Convention, ou d'un Acte quelconque qui impliquerait la reconnaissance de la houille ou du charbon comme contrebande de guerre.
>
> "Il n'y adhérait pas même sous la réserve d'une limitation de la portée d'un tel Article aux régions qui nous occupent, ou à n'importe quelle autre localité." (Protocole No. 5, séance du 18 Décembre, 1884.)

Up to the present time coal has, so far as is known, always been treated in modern wars as an article ancipitis usûs, and has been so regarded during the present hostilities by Japan, the other of the two contending nations.

I am next to invite your especial attention to the report by the Senior Officer at Portland of his interview on the 28th April last with the agent of Messrs. G. N. Collins and Co. with regard to the supply of coal to the Russian squadron which is expected at Portland towards the end of June on its way to the Far East (Paper (B)), and to the correspondence between this Department and the Admiralty (Papers (C), (D), and (E)), in which is discussed the question of the supply of coal to a whole fleet of war vessels, as distinct from a single vessel; and also whether the case is affected by the Russian declaration that coal is unconditionally contraband of war.

As much turns upon the exact wording of the British Rule, it may be well to give a short account of its origin.

So far as can be traced, the British Rules, as a whole (including that dealing with the supply of coal to belligerents), appear to have originated at a Conference held at the Foreign Office in January 1862, at which certain members of the Cabinet and the Law Officers of the Crown were present. The phrase "to the nearest port of her own country or to some nearer destination," as originally drafted, was "to the nearest point of their own country, or to some nearer destination." The former phrase has been invariably employed in the Rules issued in recent wars, but on the outbreak of the present hostilities between Russia and Japan the words "named neutral" were, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor and the Attorney-General, inserted after "nearer," and the phrase therefore now runs, "to the nearest port of her own country, or to some nearer-named neutral destination."

Lord Lansdowne is, moreover, advised that in the present state of our Statute Law some difficulty in enforcing the prohibition of the supply of coal to belligerent ships in British ports by private firms or individuals, either altogether or within certain prescribed limits, might be experienced, since the supply of coal to a belligerent does not appear to constitute any offence under the equipment section (section 10), and the definition of "equipping" given in the interpretation section (section 30) of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870."

Should you share this opinion, the desirability of strengthening the Statute Law in this regard would seem to be worthy of serious consideration.

Copies in print of Declarations of Neutrality made by foreign Governments in the present war are also inclosed for convenience of reference. (Packet marked (F.))

Pending your reply to the questions subsequently submitted to you in this letter, no action has been taken by His Majesty's Government with reference to the Russian pronouncement in regard to coal, though a protest has been addressed to His Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh for communication to the Russian Government (Paper (G)) with regard to their declaration, which was also contained in the Imperial Order of the 28th February on the subject of rice and food-stuffs.

It is therefore very important that His Majesty's Government should, with the least possible delay, decide what attitude they should adopt with regard to the Russian declaration as to coal.

I am to request that you will take the various papers herewith into your consideration, and will favour his Lordship, at your earliest possible convenience, with your opinion on the following questions:—

1. What is the proper construction of the words "so much coal only as may be sufficient to carry such vessel to the nearest port of her own country, or to some nearer-named neutral destination."

Are the words "some nearer-named neutral destination" referable solely to some such nearer neutral destination situate between the British coaling port and the nearest port of the vessel's own country, or must they be construed without any such limitation, and as comprehending every neutral port, in whatever direction, which is in actual mileage nearer to the British coaling port than is the nearest port of the vessel's own country?

2. If the latter interpretation be the correct one, should the language of the Rule be altered so as clearly to apply only to neutral ports between the British coaling port and the nearest port of the vessel's own country?

3. Should any distinction be made in regard to the limited facilities for coaling to be afforded in British ports between a single belligerent public vessel and an aggregation or fleet of such vessels?

4. Does the fact that the ultimate destination of such vessel or vessels is obviously to Japanese waters, to which at present the theatre of naval warfare is wholly confined, affect the question?

5. Assuming that vessels of a belligerent fleet—themselves with more or less empty bunkers at the time, but accompanied, as part of a concerted operation, by a number of coaling tenders fully laden—put into a British port, leaving the tenders in the offing, ought such vessels to be refused the modicum of coal indicated by the Rule? In other words, could they, the facts above mentioned being clearly ascertained, be said to be in need of coal within the meaning of the Rule?

6. Has the Rule embodying the principle of granting limited hospitality, by way of succour in cases of necessity or distress to the public vessels of a belligerent with whom Great Britain is at peace, any application at all where circumstances show that it is being taken advantage of in order to enable one belligerent to conduct hostile operations against another belligerent with whom Great Britain is equally at peace?

7. Does the supply of coal by private individuals to belligerent ships in British waters—if such supply be in excess of the limits prescribed by Rule 3—constitute an offence against the municipal law ("Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870," or otherwise) of this country? If not, is it desirable to strengthen that law in order to bring the case within its provisions?

8. Lord Lansdowne would also be glad to receive any other observations of a general nature which you think would assist His Majesty's Government in dealing with this most important question.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A.) British Proclamation of Neutrality (Confidential No. 8076*) ..	February 11, 1904.
(B.) Inclosure in Admiralty letter	May 14, „
(C.) Admiralty	May 14, „
(D.) To Admiralty	May 18, „
(E.) Admiralty	May 30, „
(F.) Proclamations of Neutrality issued by Foreign States during the present hostilities (see Confidential No. 8279).
(G.) To Sir C. Hardinge .. .. .. (No. 41. Treaty)	June 1, „
(H.) Packet of printed papers respecting coal (correspondence during present hostilities) (in Confidential No. 8404).
(I.) To Sir M. Durand	June 1, „
(J.) Reports by the Law Officers of the Crown (seven, in print), July to August, 1870, and January 1885.
(K.) Naval Prize Manual.

1904

Report.

There is no obligation on the part of a neutral to receive into his ports vessels of war of a belligerent not in actual distress. He may forbid their entrance or impose such conditions as he thinks fit. The same treatment must, of course (apart from any special rights in this respect conferred by Treaty) be extended to the vessels of both belligerents.

The reason for the practice of admitting vessels of war into neutral ports while the troops of belligerents are excluded from neutral territory arises out of the exigencies of life at sea and the hospitality which it is customary to extend to vessels of friendly Powers. This principle does not extend to enabling such vessels to utilize a neutral port directly for the purpose of hostile operations. Indirectly, of course, every supply of provisions or coal to a belligerent vessel may facilitate its taking part in the war, but when the supplies are required directly for the purposes of hostilities, other considerations apply. As was stated in the Law Officers' Report of the 22nd December, 1884, with regard to the instructions to be issued in the case of the war between France and China: "The object should be to prevent such supplies as would assist the naval operations."

The rule on which Great Britain has hitherto proceeded as to the supply of coal to belligerent vessels is embodied in the third of the Rules and Regulations annexed to the Proclamation of Neutrality of the 11th February last, which is set out in Mr. Campbell's letter to us. It is in substantial conformity with all similar instructions issued since 1862, when the British Rule on this subject was first formulated.

Upon the construction of this Rule it is difficult, if not impossible, to say that under it, coal is to be supplied only for the purpose of reaching the nearest home port, or some neutral port on the way to the nearest home port. In its natural meaning the Rule applies to the case of a neutral port wherever situate so long as it is nearer to the port of supply than is the nearest home port. It has, we believe, always been so construed in practice, and the propriety of such a construction from a practical point of view is strongly insisted on by the Admiralty in their letter to the Foreign Office of the 30th December, 1903.

We cannot, however, help thinking that the framers of the Rule must have had primarily in view the case of a neutral port between the port of supply and the nearest home port of the vessel. The distance of the nearest home port might be such that enough coal could not be taken on board for the whole voyage and the words as to another nearer port might well have been introduced for the purpose of enabling the vessel on her way home to achieve the first stage of that voyage and then coal afresh at a nearer neutral port. It is difficult to see why, unless this was the object of the rule, these words as to neutral ports were confined to nearer neutral ports.

It appears to us to be clear that any coal which the vessel has already on board must be deducted in estimating under this Rule 3, the quantity to be supplied for the purpose of taking her to her nearest home, or nearer neutral, port, and we think that in the case of a belligerent vessel accompanied by a store-ship containing coal, the right to be supplied at a British port would not arise if such coal could be obtained from such store-ship, as it is obvious that in any such case there would be no necessity for the supply, and that it was being obtained only for the purpose of saving up the coal in the store-ship for use on a subsequent stage of the voyage or in hostile operations.

In the instructions issued by the United States with reference to the Franco-German war (Hertslet's "State Papers," 1870–71, Vol. 61, pp. 670—671) these words as to other neutral ports do not occur at all.

It may be a matter for consideration whether the Rules of His Majesty's Government should, at the next suitable opportunity, be amended by leaving these words out. Without them the Rule would enable the vessel to take on board coal enough to reach any neutral port on the way home in case the capacity of the vessel were insufficient to take coal for the whole voyage home. Such an amendment would follow the United States' precedent, but if, for any reason, it is thought desirable that some such words should be retained, it may deserve consideration whether words should be inserted to make it clear that the nearer neutral port must be on the way home. If an amendment is made it may possibly be well to add words to remove all doubts that the coal supplied is to be used only for the purpose of reaching the port in question. Whether any such amendment should be made is a question of policy of great importance.

We do not think it would be practicable to frame instructions suitable for general use to the effect that coal is not to be supplied directly for the purpose of any hostile operations. Perpetual friction would arise in the working of such a rule as those who would have to administer it at British ports, all through the world, might not have the materials for rightly determining the purpose for which the coal was asked and very different views might be taken at different ports on the subject. We may refer, by way of illustration of the difficulties attending the attempt to frame a Rule upon any such lines, to the observations made by the Law Officers in their Report of the 28th January, 1885, upon the instructions which had been sent by the Colonial Office to Hong Kong and to the Straits Settlements.

The case, however, which is suggested in Mr. Campbell's letter as likely to arise is of a very special nature and seems to us to be outside the scope of the Rules as to coaling already issued by His Majesty's Government.

It is suggested that the Russian Fleet in the Baltic may desire to proceed eastward to Japanese waters for the purpose of taking part in the war and that with a view to facilitate this expedition, arrangements are being made by the Russian Government for a supply of coal to be ready at Portland to be put on board the ships of the Baltic Fleet which arrive there on their way eastward. In substance, this would be converting a neutral port into a depôt for the coaling purposes of a war-like expedition. We think that in such a case special instructions might properly be issued directing that Russian vessels taking part in such an expedition are not to be permitted to use any British ports for the purpose of coaling.

It is probably better to deal with the case in this way than, at the present moment, to make an amendment in the general Rule.

Of course, no such prohibition would affect the right of British merchants to supply coal to dealers at the ports of other neutral countries, even though such coal may be intended for the Russian Fleet if allowed to coal in such ports by the Government of the country. This country has never taken upon itself to prohibit the export of coal even if intended for use by belligerent vessels. Such export was not interfered with during the Franco-German war (Hansard (1870), 3rd series, vol. 203, columns 1094 and 1278), and we cannot advise any new departure in this respect.*

As we have above said, we think that His Majesty's Government may properly prohibit the supply of coal, under the suggested circumstances, in any British port. If, after such prohibition, British colliers left any British port for the purpose of supplying coal to the Russian Fleet outside the limits of the territorial waters, this might bring them within the terms of the Foreign Enlistment Act on the principle enunciated in 1870 by the then Attorney-General and by Mr. Gladstone, in answer to questions with regard to the supply of coal to the French Fleet (Hansard, ubi supra).

Every such case would, of course, have to be dealt with upon the facts which could be proved, but we think that it might be held to fall within section 4 of the Act.†

We think it right to add that as a mere matter of law the question of the supply of coal is not affected by the Russian declaration that coal is unconditionally contraband, nor would it be affected by any acquiescence by Great Britain in this new departure. Coal supplied to a belligerent man-of-war has always been, in the view of this country, contraband, but this has not affected the limited hospitality in the matter of coaling afforded to belligerent vessels coming into British ports. The attitude, however, lately assumed by the Russian Government in this matter may, no doubt, be usefully employed if any diplomatic correspondence should arise as to the treatment to be extended in the matter of coaling to Russian vessels.

We think that the observations which we have made above deal with most of the points which are raised in the letter of reference, but we think it better to add answers to the specific questions in their order.

1. We think that the words "some nearer-named neutral destination" cannot be

---

* Hansard, 3rd series, vol 203, p 1094, contains the answer of the Attorney-General to Mr. Gourley's question of July 28, 1870, as to the carrying of coal to French or Prussian ports.

On p. 1278 is Mr. Gladstone's reply to Mr Stapleton's question of August 1, 1870, as to supplying the belligerents (i e., the French and Prussian fleets) with coal.

† Accepting a Commission or engagement in the service of a belligerent without the licence of His Majesty. Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, sec. 4.

1904

confined to ports situate between the British coaling port and the nearest port of the vessel's own country.

2. This is a question of policy, and we refer to what we have stated above on the subject.

3. No distinction can be drawn between the case in which vessels of the Fleet present themselves at the port at the same time, and the case in which they arrive successively, so long as they are acting in concert for the purposes of an expedition.

4. The fact that the destination is the seat of war is a most material circumstance. We should, however, point out that vessels may also take part in a war by proceeding to a destination which would enable them to intercept neutral vessels carrying contraband of war.

5. The vessels of the belligerent fleet having in attendance tenders laden with coal could not, under the circumstances stated, be regarded as entitled to coal within the meaning of the Rule.

6. We think not—for the reasons stated above.

7. We think that such supply of coal would constitute an offence under the Foreign Enlistment Act. On this point we agree with the opinion of the Law Officers, expressed in their Report of the 28th January, 1885.

8. We have nothing further to add.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 6, 1904.

No. 34.

[June 13, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 8, 1904.

Sale of steam-ship "Teutonic" to a Russian.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, which relate to certain telegrams (packet marked A) which have recently passed between Liverpool and Hamburg, and from which it will be seen that negotiations are in progress for the sale of the steamship "Teutonic," of the Oceanic Steam Navigation Company (otherwise known as the "White Star Line"), to a Count Stroganow, of St. Petersburgh.

Although the purchaser would appear to be a private individual, it can hardly be doubted that the ultimate destination of the "Teutonic" is the Russian Government, and her future employment that of a belligerent vessel in the hostilities now in progress between Russia and Japan; and the inclosed despatch from His Majesty's Consul at Riga (Paper B), relating to the purchase of passenger steamers by the Russian Government (amongst which is the "Fürst Bismarck," of the Hamburg-American Line), would tend to confirm this conjecture.

I am to invite your especial attention to the Admiralty letter of the 3rd instant (Paper D), in which copies are inclosed of two Agreements: the first, dated the 1st August, 1903, between the Admiralty and Board of Trade (as representing His Majesty's Government) and various British Companies, included in the so-called American "combine," one of them being the Oceanic Steam-ship Company; and the second, dated the 4th July, 1902, between the Admiralty and the Ocean Steam-ship Company.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your early consideration, and that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion on the following points:—

1. Whether the sale or transfer of the "Teutonic," if permitted by His Majesty's Government in the circumstances stated, would, according to admitted principles of international law, constitute a breach of neutrality on the part of this country towards Japan.

2. Whether, having regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case, the sale of the vessel would amount to a breach of section 8, sub-section 4 (or otherwise) of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870;" and if the answer to this question should be in the affirmative, what steps, if any, should be taken by His Majesty's Government in the matter.

3. Whether, if the President of the Board of Trade should withhold his consent to the transfer of the "Teutonic," under Article 3 of the Agreement of the 1st August, 1903, it will become incumbent on the Admiralty, under Article 8 of the Agreement of the 4th July, 1902, to purchase the said vessel—a course which it appears that Department would not be desirous of adopting, as the "Teutonic" no longer fulfils the requirements laid down by the Admiralty in respect of speed.

4. Lord Lansdowne would at the same time be glad to be favoured with any observations of a general character which you may desire to offer on the papers now submitted to you.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Home Office (with packet of four telegrams)	May 31, 1904
(B.)	Consul Woodhouse	May 21, ,,
(C.)	To Admiralty	June 1, ,,
(D.)	Admiralty (Inclosures: Copies of contracts)	June 3, ,,
(E.)	Memorandum by Mr. Maycock on case of a torpedo-boat destroyer built by Messrs. Palmer at Jarrow*	June 7, ,,

Report.

1. This question we answer in the negative. There is no admitted principle of international law of general application which would make the permission of the sale, in the circumstances stated, a breach of neutrality. It is not stated that there has been any accession, as between England and Japan, to the Rules embodied in the VIth Article of the Treaty of Washington, 1871, and, indeed, it does not appear clear, upon the facts before us, that even these Rules would apply to the present case.

2. We think that the sale of the vessel would, in the circumstances stated and in the absence of other facts putting a different complexion upon the case, amount to a breach of section 8, sub-section 4, of the Foreign Enlistment Act. The vessel should, therefore, upon the facts as they at present appear, in our opinion, be detained under the powers of the Act unless a satisfactory undertaking be given by the owners.

3. This question we answer in the negative. Article 8 of the earlier Agreement of the 4th July, 1902, provides that the Company shall not entertain any offer for sale without giving notice to the Admiralty and allowing the Admiralty the option of purchase, and that the failure to exercise such option shall amount to a consent to the sale. This Agreement does not impose upon the Admiralty any obligation to purchase.

The later Agreement of the 1st August, 1903, contains, in its 3rd Article, an unqualified Agreement by the Association not to transfer to a foreign registry without the consent of the Board of Trade, which, however, is not to be withheld unreasonably. This Article has no reference to the provisions of the earlier Agreement as to sale without the consent of the Admiralty, and cannot create any obligation to purchase.

4. Although the sale would not amount to an infraction of any generally admitted principles of international law on the subject of neutrality, any neglect to put in force the provisions of our Municipal Law would probably lead to remonstrances by any friendly Power thereby prejudiced.

While it cannot be conceded that there is any international obligation to enforce our Foreign Enlistment Act so far as it is in excess of the requirements of international law, it deserves consideration, as a matter of policy, whether its provisions should not be strictly enforced. We do not concur in the suggestion that the only remedy in case of infraction of the 3rd Article of the Agreement of the 1st August,

---

* See Law Officers' Report of March 23 under "General."

1904

1903, is to be found under Article 1 of that Agreement. It appears to us that any such proposed infraction might, in a suitable case, be restrained by injunction.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 13, 1904.

No. 35.

[June 18, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen,
Foreign Office, April 14, 1904.

Russian Regulations as to naval prizes.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit, for your information, and for such observations as you may be good enough to offer, a translation of the Regulations issued by the Russian Government in regard to naval prizes, together with instructions on the procedure to be observed in stopping, examining, and seizing, and also in removing and delivering captured vessels and cargoes.

The portion of Article 2 of the General Regulations which refers to the confiscation of neutral merchant-ships for carrying certain articles or quantities of contraband is not in accordance with the usual practice of Prize Courts in such cases, the usual penalty for carriage of contraband being the confiscation of the contraband cargo itself, and the loss of the freight thereon, except under special conditions.

Again, Article 14 (p. 5), which provides for the handing over of contraband at sea, would appear to be a new departure. Delivery of the contraband does not seem to be compulsory—i.e., if the captain of the ship declines to hand over the contraband, the vessel must be taken in for adjudication.

It would not be difficult to find arguments to show that this method of proceeding may, in cases in which the cargo was so loaded as to render it possible of adoption, be a distinct benefit to shipowners. The size of modern cargo-steamers is so great that they might prefer handing over a small quantity of contraband or suspected goods at once, to incurring the expense and delay of adjudication. Another possible case might be that of contraband fraudulently shipped under another name, which the innocent master of the merchant-vessel might well prefer to surrender when its true nature was discovered.

Article 21 (Destruction of Prizes).—This rule, as drafted, would appear to refer both to captures from the enemy and from the neutral. As regards capture from the enemy, the rule does not seem to go beyond what, in strict right, a belligerent may claim to do, and what may not be unreasonable for a country in the position of Russia, with no ports to which she can take prizes, and in view of the fact that neutral Powers in the main object to prizes being brought within their territorial waters.

On the other hand, as regards neutral vessels, this rule would appear wholly contrary to British practice, which is to treat the destruction of a neutral vessel as of itself sufficient to require full restitution, costs, and damages, on the principle that if a captured neutral vessel cannot be taken into port for adjudication, she should be released. The principle embodied in Article 40 (p. 21) is in direct contradiction of this doctrine.

Articles 22 (p. 6), and 42 (p. 22).—These Articles seem to be framed under the assumption that entry into a neutral port will not release the prize.

It appears to Lord Lansdowne not unlikely that it may be found impossible to maintain the rule that prizes must not be brought into neutral waters. Such prizes must be taken under their own steam to port for adjudication, as they cannot be towed; and, in the case of a lengthy voyage, this might necessitate their being permitted to recoal at a neutral port, unless the contraband cargo chanced to be coal. If this were not allowed, it would, for example, clearly be impossible for Russia to take into a port of her own a neutral vessel captured, say, off Hong Kong; since access to East Asian ports is at present prevented by the loss of the command of the sea in those waters, and consequently Libau would be the nearest Russian port available. It may be urged that it is obviously more to the advantage of a neutral Power to allow the prizes of a belligerent a modified use of its ports (e.g., on the terms that ships of war are allowed to use them) rather than to leave the latter no option but the destruction of the neutral vessel before adjudication.

It cannot be expected that belligerent nations will recognize as binding on them a course of conduct with which it is impossible for them to comply; their responsibilities must be measured by what is possible.

Articles 22, 51, 56, 62, and 71, and section 43 (p. 22).—These Regulations provide for the constitution of Prize Courts on board the fleet, whether at sea or in harbour is not quite clear. They involve a departure from the general practice of nations. Lord Lansdowne, however, sees no cause for thinking that such Courts are to be made use of at present. The language of Article 71 appears to suggest that they are not to exercise any important jurisdiction over neutral property, other than release and sale by consent of parties interested.

If the constitution, situation, and procedure of these Courts be correct, it is difficult to see on what principle a substantial protest could be based on the fact that a belligerent Power erects its Prize Court of First Instance on a vessel, and not in a building; and Lord Lansdowne inclines to the opinion that any protest should be deferred until it can be shown that there is a palpable injustice.

Article 31, though somewhat obscurely drafted, seems to embody the principle that, in the event of a Russian war-ship violating the territory of a neutral State by capturing a vessel within the territorial waters of the latter, the matter is one for diplomatic negotiations between the two Governments, and not one for a Prize Court. This view is quite in accordance with the fundamental principles of international law.

Articles 50–57.—These Articles, relating to the constitution of Prize Courts, appear to Lord Lansdowne to be open to criticism. The Court consists not of a Judge, but of a Board of officials, and his Lordship feels great doubt whether the Courts so constituted will be found qualified to give a trustworthy and impartial decision on legal problems which may be very complex; the constitution of the Supreme Court of Appeal seems equally unsatisfactory.

The constitution of Admirals' Prize Courts is a matter of less importance, since they appear to be little concerned with neutral vessels and goods.

Article 60.—It is not clear under this Article whether parties may be represented by an agent or counsel specially qualified to conduct their case.

It appears, on the whole, to Lord Lansdowne that these Regulations generally do not call for immediate protest, except as regards the destruction of neutral vessels and the condemnation of neutral vessels carrying more than 50 per cent. of contraband; but it is a matter on which his Lordship would be glad to receive your views.

I am accordingly to request that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion—

1. Whether a protest should at once be made with reference to the provisions in the Regulations as to the destruction of neutral vessels, and as to their condemnation for carrying contraband amounting to more than half the cargo;
2. Whether a protest should at once be made with regard to other matters contained in the Regulations;
3. Whether, in your opinion, it might not, having regard to the conditions of modern maritime warfare, and especially to the universal use of steam power by public ships and the general adoption of that means of propulsion by merchant-vessels also, be desirable to modify the British rule that prizes may not be admitted to neutral waters, in view of the necessity for coaling, which did not exist when that rule was originally laid down; and
4. If so, whether the protest of his Majesty's Government against the destruction of neutral vessels would be accompanied by an intimation that they will not refuse a limited supply of coal or water to prizes on their way to adjudication, or claim their release if brought into their harbours.

In this connection I am to inclose a telegram which has since been received from His Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, stating that the Russian Government propose to establish Prize Courts at Vladivostock, Port Arthur, Sebastopol, and Libau.

Lord Lansdowne presumes that His Majesty's Government have no grounds for objecting to the establishment of a Prize Court at Sebastopol, provided that its scope is confined to the adjudication of seizures in the Black Sea—a possible, though not likely, contingency. His Lordship, however, observes that the Russian Prize Regulations seem to contemplate (Article 15, p. 5) the detention of ships and goods under certain conditions by merchant-vessels, in which latter category the Russian Government claim to include vessels of the Russian Volunteer fleet.

1904

In advising Lord Lansdowne on the points specifically mentioned, his Lordship will be glad if you will at the same time favour him with any observations of a more general nature which may occur to you on a perusal of the papers.

I am to add that the draft of this letter has been submitted for the approval of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, who concur generally in its terms. (See Admiralty to Foreign Office on the 8th April, 1904.)

I am, &c.
(Signed) CHARLES HARDINGE.

List of Papers.

Russian Naval Prize Regulations (translation).	Date of confirmation	March 11, 1895.*
Sir C. Scott	(Treaty. Telegraphic)	March 27, 1904.
Ditto	(Treaty. Telegraphic)	March 18, „
Admiralty	.. .. ..	April 8, „

Report.

1. We do not think that the provisions as to destruction of captured vessels are meant to refer to neutral vessels seized for carrying contraband. We think, however, it might be well that His Majesty's Government should inform the Russian Government that they so read the Article.

We think that the provisions as to condemnation of the vessel carrying contraband go too far, as they might apply where there was no complicity. We think that a protest may properly be addressed to the Russian Government on this point.

2. No other protest appears to be at present necessary.

3. We do not think that the British Regulations against carrying prizes into British ports are to be read as prohibiting prizes putting into such ports if in want of supplies. We may refer to the observations on the similar Regulations of 1870 made by the then Law Officers of the Crown, which are quoted in the despatch of the Admiralty in November 1870 ("State Papers" 1870–71, vol. lxi, p. 1093). We do not think that any modification of the British rule is necessary. It is directed against the lax practice which formerly prevailed of utilizing neutral ports for keeping prizes pending adjudication—not against the extension of hospitality to prizes in need of it on their way to the port of adjudication.

4. We do not think any such intimation desirable.

5. We do not think that any objection can be made to the establishment of a Prize Court at Sebastopol taken by itself.

We have no further observations to add.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
June 18, 1904.

No. 36.

[July 2, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, June 10, 1904.

Seizure of "Frankby" by Russian Squadron.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to inclose, for your consideration, the accompanying correspondence with Messrs. MacVicar, Marshall, and Co., with regard to a claim for 834*l*. 17*s*. 3*d*. made by them against the Russian Government for the seizure and detention of the steam-ship "Frankby" by the Russian squadron in the Gulf of Suez on the 21st February last.

---

* For original text see Sir C. Scott's No. 4, Treaty, of February 18, 1904.

It will be observed from the statement setting forth the facts on which the claim is based, that the "Frankby" sailed from Barry, South Wales, on the 3rd February, 1904, with a cargo of coal for Japan. She left Suez on the 18th February, and, while proceeding through the Red Sea, was met and stopped by a Russian squadron, which she was ordered to follow towards Suez. After stopping several times, and anchoring for an hour south of Ras Gharib, the "Frankby" was finally directed to anchor about 20 miles from Suez, and on the 28th February was released. In order to procure the necessary coal and stores for continuing her voyage, she put into Suez, which port she finally left on the 29th February.

As some doubt existed as to the exact position of the "Frankby" at the time of her seizure, Messrs. MacVicar, Marshall, and Co. were requested to ascertain from the master whether the vessel was within or without the territorial waters of Egypt when she was stopped by the Russian squadron. As a result it has now been ascertained that on the 21st February, the date of her seizure, the "Frankby" was on the high seas.

It will, however, be seen from the letter from Messrs. MacVicar, Marshall, and Co., of the 19th May, that on the 24th and 25th February, the "Frankby" while in company with the Russian squadron, was within Egyptian territorial waters.

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to—

1. Whether there is a case for formal representation to the Russian Government by His Majesty's Government on behalf of Messrs. MacVicar, Marshall, and Co., and

2. If so, on what grounds their claim can most advantageously be supported.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Messrs. MacVicar, Marshall, and Co.	April 21, 1904.
(B.)	Ditto (with statement of claim and vouchers, &c.) ..	April 30, „
(C.)	Ditto	May 19, „

Attorney-General's Opinion.

In my opinion this is not a case for formal represention to the Russian Government on behalf of Messrs. MacVicar, Marshall, and Co.

War was known to be imminent when the vessel left Barry, and had broken out ten days before she left Suez. Having regard to the destination of the vessel and the nature of the cargo, the Russians were quite entitled to take the vessel and cargo to Sevastopol for adjudication. If they had done so I think that the cargo, and probably the vessel, would have been condemned. I do not think that Messrs. MacVicar, Marshall, and Co. can properly complain of the lenity of the Russian Government in releasing their vessel, nor do I think that the delay forms a substantial ground of complaint.

If the facts led to the inference that the vessel was stopped by the Russians, not with the intention of sending her in for adjudication, but merely for the purpose of inflicting annoyance by detention, the case would assume another aspect. But it would be difficult in any case to prove this, and there is nothing in the facts before me to justify any such inference.

Messrs. MacVicar, Marshall, and Co. appear to me to have got very easily out of an awkward situation, and I cannot advise that their case should be taken up by His Majesty's Government.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

1904

Solicitor-General's Opinion.

In my opinion a formal representation should be made to the Russian Government on behalf of Messrs. MacVicar, Marshall, and Co.

It was the duty of the Russian squadron upon seizing the "Frankby" either at once to release her or to take her before a Prize Court for adjudication without any unreasonable delay, but they were not justified in detaining her for several days.

It will no doubt be contended by the Russian Government that the release was granted ex gratia, and that the document signed by the captain relieves them from liability for damages; but I think that such a contention is not a sound one, as the captain was not a free agent in the matter.

It may be that the Russian Government will be able to satisfy His Majesty's Government that the case might be looked upon as one of lenient rather than improper treatment, but I think, under the circumstances attending this war, it is important that His Majesty's Government should give no countenance to the practice of seizing and detaining neutral ships as a punishment, when there may be no intention of taking them before a Prize Court.

(2.) I think the claim should be based upon the grounds above stated.

(Signed) EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 2, 1904.

No. 37.

[August 11, 1904.]

Messrs. M. Samuel and Co. to the Marquess of Lansdowne.

Your Lordship, 19–21, Billiter Street, London, August 9, 1904.

"Thea" sunk by Russians during war. Owners hold charterers responsible for carrying contraband.

WE have the honour to inform you that the German steamer "Thea" was chartered by our Japan firm, Messrs. Samuel, Samuel, and Co., for coasting employment in Japan, and that she was not to be used for the conveyance of contraband of war.

It appears, from reports received, that the vessel was sunk by the Vladivostock squadron on the 25th July, without any official inquiry as to the nature of her cargo. The Prize Court is reported to have subsequently held an inquiry and decided that, owing to the nature of the steamer's cargo, the Russian cruisers were justified in sinking the boat.

The owner writes that, under these circumstances, he will hold Messrs. Samuel, Samuel, and Co. responsible for the loss sustained in consequence of the sinking of the steamer.

We have not, as yet, received any particulars with regard to the seizure from our Japan friends, but in the meantime have the honour to request that your Government will hold the Russian Government responsible for this illegal act, as we maintain that the Russian war-ships had no right to sink the steamer without an inquiry being first made by the Prize Court as to the nature of the cargo.

We remain, &c.
(Signed) M. SAMUEL AND Co.

Minutes.

Under these circumstances ought we not to put in a protest as in the case of the "Knight Commander"?

E. G.

It appears that the "Thea" was chartered by Messrs. Samuel from her German owner, and that during the pendency of the charter-party she was sunk by a Russian man-of-war on grounds similar to those by which the Russian Government seek to justify the sinking of the "Knight Commander." In these circumstances it seems to me (1) that the owner cannot hold Messrs. Samuel responsible for the destruction of his vessel; and (2) that even if he could do so on the ground that the sinking of the "Thea" was the natural consequence of some breach of the charter-party on the part of Messrs. Samuel it would not be a case for His Majesty's Government to represent to the Russian Government.

So far as the ship is concerned His Majesty's Government have nothing to say in the matter one way or the other. So far as British-owned cargo is concerned, His Majesty's Government might, on the ground that the sinking of the vessel was unlawful, present a claim for compensation.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, August 10, 1904.

I agree as to the course to be taken.

There is at present nothing to show that the loss falls on Messrs. Samuel as between them and the German owner, and primâ facie it is for the German Government to take action.

R. B. F.

August 11, 1904.

E. G.

No. 38.

[August 15, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, July 29, 1904.

Russo-Japanese War.

Transmission of cypher telegrams by belligerents over neutral cables.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit, for your consideration, the accompanying letter from Sir Spencer Walpole, K.C.B., with its inclosures (Paper A), with reference to the dispatch of cypher telegrams over the Pacific Cable.

I am to explain that the ownership of the Pacific Cable is distributed between the Government of this country and those of various Colonies, but that the use of the cable is open to the public at large at a fixed tariff; the management of the cable is intrusted to a Board, of which Sir S. Walpole is Chairman. (See 1 Ed. 7, c. 31, and 2 Ed. 7, c. 26.)

There is an operating station for the cable on Fanning Island, in the Pacific, where a superintendent and a small number of employés are maintained, and Sir S. Walpole thinks it likely that, in the event of the Baltic Fleet being sent to the Far East viâ Cape Horn, the Russians might desire to send telegrams by the cable in cypher, and is anxious to provide the staff at Fanning Island with the necessary instructions.

The rights and duties of neutrals with regard to the use of submarine cables for the dispatch of messages by belligerent cruisers were considered by your predecessors at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, and a copy of their opinion (Paper B) is inclosed; instructions (Paper C) in accordance with that opinion were subsequently forwarded to all the Colonial Governors.

The Pacific Cable, however, was not constructed at that time, and no further instructions have since been issued.

Your recent opinion on the carriage of goods for belligerent forces over a State railway belonging to a neutral Power is also inclosed (Paper D), as the question raises somewhat similar considerations to those applicable to the use by belligerents of Government cables.

I am to request that you will take the papers into your consideration, and will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion whether the instructions to be sent to Fanning Island should follow the lines of those issued in 1898, omitting the last paragraph, or whether you consider that any, and, if so, what modifications should be introduced.

1904

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may be good enough to offer on the papers submitted herewith.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ELDON GORST.

List of Papers.

(A.) Sir Spencer Walpole	July	22. 1904.
(B.) Law Officers' Report (Confidential No. 7199, p. 74)	May	7, 1898.
(C.) Circular to Governors of Colonies (Confidential No. 7267, p. 321)	May	17, 1898.
(D.) Law Officers' Report (China)	April	6, 1904.

Report.

We think that the rules laid down in the Circular of the 17th May, 1898, and marked (a), (b), and (c),* would be the proper instructions to send to Fanning Island in answer to Sir Spencer Walpole's letter.

We should add, however, that the mere announcement of the arrival of the fleet at Fanning Island may be of the greatest value for the purposes of the campaign. Such an arrival would, from any ordinary port, be made known by the ordinary channels of information. If the circumstances at Fanning Island are such that it might not be made known except by message from the fleet, we think that to permit any, even the most innocent, messages might be giving valuable assistance to one belligerent.

We are not in possession of the facts sufficiently to enable us to advise on this possible aspect of the case.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
August 15, 1904.

---

* Annex.

(a.) A belligerent man-of-war should be prevented from using the telegraph for the purpose of sending, whether in cypher or otherwise, messages, of which the object is to direct or influence warlike operations.

(b.) A belligerent man-of-war may, however, use the telegraph for messages which do not relate to the proceedings of the belligerents, or for messages which are not in cypher narrating past operations and bonâ fide intended for general publication as news.

(c.) The officers in command of belligerent men-of-war should be informed that it is a condition of their being permitted to use a Colonial port that they shall abstain from transmitting or procuring the transmission of any telegrams which concern the conduct of warlike operations.

No. 39.

[August 25, 1904.]

(No. 1.)

Colonial Office to Foreign Office.

(Confidential.)

Sir, Downing Street, August 12, 1904.

Vessels of Russian Volunteer Fleet: Treatment of in Straits Settlements.

I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Lyttelton to transmit to you, for the consideration of the Marquess of Lansdowne, a copy of a telegram from the Governor of the Straits Settlements respecting the attitude to be adopted towards vessels of the Russian Volunteer fleet.

The despatch of the 15th July, referred to in the telegram, was one forwarding copies of your letter mentioned above, and of the Foreign Office Memorandum of the 18th June referred to in the despatch to His Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, which formed an inclosure to that letter.

I am, &c.
(Signed) C. P. LUCAS.

Inclosure.

Sir J. Anderson to Mr. Lyttelton.

(Telegraphic.) P. [Received August 10, 1904.]

REFERRING to your Secret despatch of 15th July. Is it recognized by His Majesty's Government that a Russian Volunteer vessel may enter a colonial port as a merchantman, take a cargo on board of warlike material and armament, and when immediately outside colonial waters can claim to be a commissioned vessel? We have no means of ascertaining the nature of the cargo taken on board. Unless we are assured that a vessel claiming to be a merchant-vessel will not alter her character until a Russian port is reached, I submit that it is my duty to search her, and also all cargo put on board here, in order that a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act may be avoided.

Minutes.

In the Memorandum given to Count Benckendorff on the 18th June, Lord Lansdowne stated that so long as the Volunteer fleet vessels are not commissioned or fitted out for a warlike purpose we had no desire to interfere with them, by which I understand that they are to be treated as merchant-ships pure and simple (See Part I, No. 754).

See also despatch to Sir N. O'Conor No. 23 of the 7th July (No. 27), which was sent to Colonial Office, and by them to Singapore.

Since then, however, events have occurred which were not then anticipated—i.e., the assumption of the status of a "public ship" by a Volunteer fleeter, after passing through the straits as a merchantman.

These circumstances have led, inter alia, to instructions being sent to Singapore and other places in the East not to give them any coal, as a sort of punitive measure.

We may hope that, after the verbal assurances given at Constantinople and St. Petersburgh, these changes of status may not recur. If they do, it is a matter for His Majesty's Government to deal with rather than Singapore.

If a Volunteer fleet ship came to Singapore flying the Imperial flag and claiming the status of a public ship, it would infringe the Foreign Enlistment Act to increase her armaments.

If she arrived in the garb of a merchantman, it would be no breach of the Act for her to take warlike stores on board, and what she might do after leaving Singapore does not concern Singapore. But, under the instructions sent on the 14th July, she cannot have coal.

If I had been here at the time those instructions were sent, I should have ventured to suggest that they should apply to the "Smolensk" and "Petersburg" only, rather than to the Volunteer fleet generally, as, if a Volunteer fleet ship (other than those two) is refused coal, and is not got up as a public ship, the Russians will make a grievance of it.

I am not quite sure as to the best answer to Sir J. Anderson's inquiry. How would it be to say that His Majesty's Government trust the contingency he apprehends may not recur, but that the ships should be dealt with according to the character they assume on arrival, and the flag they fly? The character they may subsequently assume does not concern the Colony, but is a wider question, which would have to be considered if and when it arose.

Mr. Hurst. W. M.

Foreign Office, August 18, 1904. F. A. C.

1904

I understood that, by arrangement between Russia and Turkey, no more Volunteer cruisers were to pass the Dardanelles under the mercantile flag without an assurance from Russia that that flag would be maintained till the end of the voyage.

Is this not so ?[*]

If it is, and if the arrangement is satisfactory to this country, I think we can give Sir J. Anderson a categorical answer.

The Volunteer fleet will be divided into three classes :—

(a.) The "Smolensk" and the "Petersburg."

(b.) Vessels coming from the Black Sea under the mercantile flag, but having proceeded to the end of their voyage, and been commissioned as war-ships in a Russian port.

(c.) Vessels flying the mercantile flag.

I think I have seen an opinion expressed by the Attorney-General that the procedure detailed in (b) is permissible.

Instructions have already been sent to Sir J. Anderson to refuse coal to a vessel of the Volunteer fleet, and to refer home; but this telegram raises other questions, viz., the right to search vessel and cargo to prevent a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

If the vessel comes into Singapore flying the Russian naval flag, she must be either (a) or (b). (a) are believed to be going home viâ the Cape, and should, I suppose, be refused any sort of supplies anywhere; consequently, they are not likely to enter any British port.

(b) will be duly commissioned ships, therefore the Foreign Enlistment Act will not apply; at any rate, there could be no question of searching.

(c.) If the vessel is flying the mercantile flag, she must be treated as a merchantman for all purposes, so long as the Russian assurances hold good.

(c) is the only class referred to in Sir J. Anderson's telegram, and therefore all the answer needed seems to me to be that Russia has given such assurances, and therefore there will be no need to fear a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

C. J. B. H.

Foreign Office, August 20, 1904

---

[*] Yes, they gave a general assurance verbally.

W. M.

Qy. Reply accordingly. The "Smolensk" and "Petersburg" are now out of the way, and there seems now no reason to fear a Volunteer fleet vessel taking on board munitions of war at Singapore as a merchantman, and then transforming herself into a cruiser.

F. A C.

Foreign Office, August 20, 1904.

We need not trouble ourselves about class (a).

As to (b), I should not like, unless I were fortified by the Attorney-General's opinion, to lay down that a Volunteer fleet vessel which had come out of the Black Sea flying the merchant flag had a right, while war was in progress, to convert herself, even in a Russian port, into a warlike vessel; but I don't think the point really arises on this paper. It is, however, I think, clear that a vessel belonging to class (b) must be treated as an ordinary ship of war, and that, in regard to coaling, she will be subject to the new Admiralty instructions.

Vessels falling under class (c) are those to which the assurances [state briefly] recently given by the Russian Government have reference; but as there may be a doubt as to the character of the vessel I should say that the captain should be required to sign a declaration as to the destination of the ship and the nature of her employment throughout the whole of her intended voyage, before she is allowed coal or any other facilities. I am, of course, assuming that the vessel is a merchantman known to belong to the Volunteer fleet, and not an ordinary merchantman.

The answer to Sir J. Anderson's first question is, of course, in the negative.

Unless the matter is very urgent, I should like the Attorney-General to be consulted.

L.

Foreign Office, August 23, 1904.

I approve of the proposed despatch, with the addition of a few words which I have pencilled in at the end.

I do not think that it can be admitted that a vessel adapted for warlike purposes, as those of the Volunteer fleet are, can, after passing the Bosphorus as a merchantman, be commissioned for war on reaching a Russian port. The case might be different with an ordinary merchant-vessel which afterwards, in a Russian port, underwent structural alterations, adapting her for war, in a Russian port. I should be disposed to say that a vessel of the Volunteer fleet which gets through the Bosphorus under the merchant flag should not become a vessel of war till she has returned to the Black Sea. But the point does not arise on the telegram from Sir J. Anderson.

R. B. F.

August 25, 1904.

(No. 2.)

Foreign Office to Colonial Office.

Foreign Office, August 26, 1904.

Sir,

I HAVE laid before the Marquess of Lansdowne your letter of the 12th instant, inclosing a telegram from the Governor of the Straits Settlements respecting the treatment in that Colony of vessels of the Russian Volunteer fleet.

I am directed by his Lordship to state in reply, for the information of Mr. Secretary Lyttelton, that, as the questions raised by Sir John Anderson involved points of some difficulty, his Lordship considered it advisable to consult His Majesty's Attorney-General before replying.

Lord Lansdowne is of opinion that the answer to Sir John Anderson's first question is clearly in the negative.

With regard to the concluding portion of the telegram, the position is somewhat modified by the assurances that have been given to the Porte by Russia that vessels of the Russian Volunteer fleet passing the Dardanelles under the mercantile flag will not change that flag or take belligerent action until the end of the voyage, but his Lordship considers that as there may be a doubt as to the character of the vessel, the captain should be required to sign a declaration as to the destination of the ship and the nature of her employment throughout the whole of her intended voyage before she is allowed to ship cargo, or take coal, or is given any other facilities.

If this course were adopted it would probably be found unnecessary to put in force the special powers given by the Foreign Enlistment Act [and it is not desirable to do so[*]].

I am, &c.

(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

---

[*] Added by the Attorney-General.

1904

No. 40.

[June 22 to August 29, 1904.]

(No. 1.)

Prince Louis of Battenberg to Foreign Office.

Admiralty, June 17, 1904.

Dear Sir Thomas,

Russian Port Arthur fleet: procedure should it take refuge at Wei-hai Wei.

APROPOS of the telegram from Pakenham, through Sir C. MacDonald, of the possibility of the Russian Port Arthur fleet, on that place falling, taking refuge at Wei-hai Wei. The more I think of it the more I feel that it is likely. In any case our Commander-in-chief in China (Naval) should have precise orders as to what to do under such circumstances.

Lord Selborne and the other members of the Board are away, so I am writing to you on my own account to save time, and anticipate any official application from here to Foreign Office which may follow.

If the Russians do bring the remnants of their fleet, after running the Japanese naval gauntlet, into our port, it would presumably be an analogous case to that of Bourbaki's army in Switzerland in 1870. What should we do? Should we clear out the crews, house them on shore after taking charge of their movable arms and ammunition, and place "ship-keepers" on board the ships? Would the ultimate ownership of this fleet be decided by the terms of peace, or would we, eo ipso, hand them back to Russia after the war?

I assume that if they come to Wei-hai Wei for this express purpose, we cannot well refuse, and could not well drive them to sea and into the arms of the Japanese fleet waiting outside after twenty-four hours.

Believe me, &c.

(Signed) LOUIS BATTENBERG.

Minutes by Mr. Davidson.

I should have thought that it was not very likely that the Russian fleet would have attempted to take refuge at Wei-hai Wei; but desperate cases sometimes evoke the employment of desperate remedies, and possibly if they found themselves hotly pursued by the Japanese fleet and with the certainty of destruction by, or surrender to, a superior force before them if they kept in the open sea, they might turn aside as a last resource into neutral territorial waters in the hope thereby, to some extent, to embarrass the pursuing fleet and to alleviate their own ultimate fate.

Assuming that, dum fervet opus, they should be so minded, it is quite certain that we have no forces on the spot which could prevent them from carrying out their intention—unless of course the China squadron could be got to Wei-hai Wei in time and it were worth while to withdraw it from elsewhere on the chance of its being required for this purpose.

It is however also, as it seems to me, quite certain that the Japanese Admiral would not pursue the Russian fleet into British territorial waters, or in any way knowingly violate those waters by firing across or into them, &c.

The practical question remains as to what should be done if the Russian fleet should once enter British waters and refuse to go out again into the jaws of the enemy who will be awaiting them outside.

Prince Louis seems to think that the treatment of Bourbaki's army would afford a precedent in this case; but I venture to doubt whether the cases are really quite similar, and whether analogies drawn from land warfare can safely be applied in regard to sea warfare, which differs from war on land in many important essentials. At sea the theatre of war is the high seas, which are the common property of all mankind, and retreat is open to an inferior fleet, which is being pressed, in many different directions. On land a retreating army is bound to follow the line of least resistance, and that line can be, to a great extent, dictated by the pursuing enemy, so that at last it leads to a neutral frontier.

There is, so far as I can discover at a few hours' notice, no precedent at all for interning a fleet of ships in a neutral port. It must be remembered that if there be any analogy between war-ships and fighting appliances on land, then our ships are to be compared to fortresses.

Land fortresses, being incapable of movement, cannot be interned in a neutral State; but these sea fortresses, which battle-ships (and also other war-ships in smaller degree) really are, can be so interned.

There is a great distinction between the internment of these floating fortresses and the internment of the men who man them.

So long as the men are put out of action till the end of the war it is rather a convenience than otherwise to the belligerent which drove them over the neutral frontier that they should be put out of action in that manner. But the interning of a floating fortress or battle-ship (as distinct from the crew which manned her) would deprive the successful belligerent of the legitimate fruits of his victory, and of the chance which he had almost reduced into possession, of capturing the vessel and using her in his own service for the rest of the war.

It would plainly be most unfair to the Japanese fleet that a number of Russian vessels, of which they were in hot pursuit and on the eve of capture, should be able to secure internment for the rest of the war by the expedient of taking refuge in neutral waters.

As for the twenty-four hour rule, I do not think that it was meant to apply or that it ought to be applied to a case like this.

It seems to me that if the Russian fleet, as a whole, attempts to enter British territorial waters with the palpable object of escaping capture by their enemy—this is an improper use of neutral territorial waters which we have not only the right to prevent, but also a duty to prevent.

The case of an individual ship in a sinking condition, making good her escape into a neutral port, is not at all analogous to that of a whole fleet making use of neutral waters in order to avoid defeat and capture by a very superior enemy force.

By allowing such a fleet to enter neutral waters, the neutral would be giving one belligerent very material aid and assistance—as against the other—and not merely affording such small succour as the dictates of humanity suggest.

I understand that the China fleet, or a strong squadron of it (four battle-ships and four cruisers) is already under orders to proceed to Wei-hai Wei at the end of the month. In these circumstances it might be well to expedite their movements as much as possible so that they may arrive there somewhat earlier.

Subject to the opinion of the Law Officers, I think, as at present advised, that the Russian fleet ought not to be allowed, in the circumstances indicated by Prince Louis of Battenberg, to enter British territorial waters, that if they succeed in doing so they ought to be directed to leave at once, and that if they do not leave we are entitled, and also in strictness possibly even bound, to turn them out by force.

Short of that, I think, if they preferred, instead of going out to fight again, that their crews should be interned and their ships handed over to the Japanese. We need not object to that solution, which doubtless the Japanese would accept.

In any case, if they refused to leave after warning and we did not wish, either for reasons of policy or otherwise, to compel them by force to do so, we should clearly, I think, as a minimum measure, be obliged to intern the ships till the end of the war, when their ultimate disposal would no doubt be dealt with in the terms of the Treaty of Peace.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, June 18, 1904.

See the Attorney-General's letter to me of to-day's date, with which the Solicitor-General agrees.

The prohibition of the use of Nassau and the ports of the Bahamas by either the Federal or Confederate ships during the War of Secession, was made as soon as it was recognized that a state of belligerency existed, on the 31st January, 1862.

(See "State Papers," vol. li, p. 265.)

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, July 1, 1904.

[The substance of the above was referred to the Law Officers in a private note.]

1904

(No. 2.)

Solicitor-General to Mr. Davidson.

Dear Davidson, June 22, 1904.

THE Attorney-General says that late last year he wrote an opinion on the question of allowing Russian vessels to stay at Malta for repairs, and which has a bearing on the present question. Could you let me have the papers?

I think there was a question in China of a Russian vessel which refused to leave as the Japanese were watching for it, and some arrangement as to dismounting the guns was arrived at. Have you any information on this at the Foreign Office—it might be useful?

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) EDWARD CARSON.

(No. 3.)

Mr. Davidson to Solicitor-General.

My dear Solicitor-General, Foreign Office, June 23, 1904.

HERE are the papers which the Attorney-General wants.

I don't know how far you will agree, but it seems to me that the case of a whole Russian fleet taking refuge in British territorial waters in order to escape the hot and instant pursuit of a greatly superior Japanese force is a totally different thing from a belligerent torpedo-boat putting into a neutral port in order to obtain some small repairs which may be necessary in order to enable her to continue her voyage and keep the sea.

If we let the Russian fleet in and the Japanese fleet stays outside, what are we to do if, after the expiration of the allotted time, the Russian fleet remain passively inactive, and refuse to get up steam or weigh anchor? Are we to turn them out by force into the maw of the Japanese fleet?

It would place us in a very inconvenient predicament.

Yours very sincerely,
(Signed) W. E. DAVIDSON.

(No. 4.)

Attorney-General to Mr. Davidson.

My dear Davidson, July 1, 1904.

IF the contingency should occur that the Russian fleet, pursued by the Japanese, takes refuge in the harbour of Wei-hai Wei, I think the Commanding Officer should be notified that he must either leave Wei-hai Wei at the expiration of twenty-four hours or remain interned there for the remainder of the war. This course would be analogous to that pursued by His Majesty's Government with regard to the gun-boats proposed to be docked at Malta before the commencement of the war and by China with regard to the Russian gun-boat at Shanghae during the war. It is an application to vessels of war of the principles applied to the armies of belligerents with their artillery, &c., entering neutral territory subject to the relaxation as to twenty-four hours' stay which usage has established in the case of vessels. It would, of course, be necessary to have a sufficient force at hand to see to the fulfilment of the terms imposed upon the Russian fleet.

It was open to His Majesty's Government to have forbidden access to Wei-hai Wei by war-ships of either belligerent, as was done by Great Britain with regard to the Bahamas during the War of Secession, and by Austria with regard to Cattaro during the Crimean War.

Such a prohibition might still be issued by His Majesty's Government, and its justification might be found in the proximity of Wei-hai Wei to the belligerents, as in the case of Cattaro and the Bahamas. It is, however, a grave question of policy whether such a prohibition should be issued at a time when it would probably operate against the Russians only. It is, moreover, doubtful whether such a prohibition would prevent the Russian fleet, if pursued by the Japanese, from taking refuge in Wei-hai Wei, and it would be a difficult and ungracious task to exclude them by force. It is, indeed, open to doubt whether such a prohibition could properly be enforced against vessels taking refuge in neutral waters from hostile pursuit. In the analogous case of troops taking refuge in neutral territory it would be a very strong measure to refuse them entrance and throw them back into the power of the pursuing army. The question is really one of policy.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

I agree.

(Signed) EDWARD CARSON.

(No. 5.)

Memorandum by the Attorney-General respecting Wei-hai Wei.—(Received July 28.)

WEI-HAI WEI must be considered as being at present a British port.

Three propositions are submitted with regard to hostilities in the ports of a neutral Power:—

1. It is not only the right, but also the duty of the neutral Power to prevent such hostilities.

2. There may be circumstances which disentitle the belligerent whose vessels have been captured in neutral waters to demand that the neutral Power should have the wrong redressed.

3. Under no circumstances should the neutral Power authorize the commission of hostilities in its waters.

Proposition 1. The first of these propositions is laid down by almost every writer on international law, and although up to past the end of the eighteenth century the rule was frequently violated in practice ("International Public Law," by Harris Taylor, p. 699, paragraph 640), it is not now open to dispute.

I quote only a few passages:—

> "It is not only the right of the neutral State to protect the property of the belligerents when within the neutral jurisdiction, but it is a part of the duty of neutrality to defend such property while under neutral protection, and to punish any and every offence against the rights of neutrality, even, if necessary, by resort to force."—(Halleck's "International Law," 3rd edition, Sir S. Baker, vol. ii, p. 171.)

> "L'État neutre doit s'opposer sur son territoire à tout acte qui serait l'accomplissement, la continuation, ou la préparation d'une opération de guerre de la part des belligérents."—(Despagnet, "Droit International," p. 694, Article 676.)

> "L'État neutre n'a pas seulement le droit de voir respecter son territoire par les belligérents; il a le devoir de le faire respecter. Il manquerait à l'impartialité; il favoriserait l'une des Parties en guerre, s'il tolérait que l'autre y accomplît ou y préparât des actes d'hostilités.

> "L'État neutre doit donc s'opposer, au besoin par la force, à ce que ses eaux territoriales ou ses ports deviennent le théâtre de combats ou de captures. Il doit, si sa neutralité est violée, demander réparation à l'État belligérent en faute."—("Le Droit de la Guerre Maritime," Dupuis, paragraph 320, p. 429.)

The following passages may also be referred to in support of the proposition that it is the duty of the neutral State to enforce respect for the neutrality of its waters and to exact reparation if it be violated:—

"Wheaton's International Law," 3rd English edition, pp. 567–569, paragraph 431.
Ortolan: "Diplomatie de la Mer," pp. 288 and 289.
Rivier: "Droit des Gens," vol. ii, pp. 401 and 402.
Such references might be multiplied almost indefinitely.

Proposition 2. There are, however, circumstances which may disentitle the belligerent whose vessel has been captured in neutral waters to appeal to the neutral for redress.

1904

If the captured vessel herself began hostilities in neutral waters, it was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of "The Anne" (3 Wheaton, at p. 447) that the capture which ensued was not an injury for which redress could be sought from the neutral Sovereign.

In like manner in the case of "The General Armstrong," an American vessel which had been captured by the British in Portuguese waters, the President of the French Republic, by his Award, disallowed the claim of the United States against Portugal upon the ground that "The General Armstrong," though it had not initiated hostilities, had, instead of at once appealing to the protection of the Portuguese Governor, resisted force with force, and had so disentitled the United States' Government to claim that redress from the Portuguese to which it would otherwise have been entitled. (Ortolan: "Diplomatie de la Mer," vol. ii, pp. 300–301, and Appendix No. XXVI, pp. 547 and 548.)

In like manner it may be reasonably contended that a belligerent who has entered the port of a neutral Power in defiance of a prohibition reasonably issued is not entitled to demand that the neutral State should afford its ships protection or exact reparation if they are attacked.

All such cases may be regarded as falling within the qualification of the general rule which is indicated by Mr. Hall in the following passage in his work on International Law, 5th edition, p. 625:—

> "A neutral State which overlooks such violations of its neutrality as it can rightly be expected to prevent, or which neglects to demand reparation in the appropriate cases, becomes itself an active offender. It is bound, therefore, to give satisfaction in some form, if satisfaction be required, to the belligerent whose interests have been prejudiced by its 'lâches.'"

In such cases the neutral State can hardly rightly be expected to take measures to prevent such violations of neutrality, nor can such cases be regarded as appropriate for a demand by the neutral for reparation.

Proposition 3. With regard to Wei-hai Wei, however, the real question is not what would be the rights of Russia if the Japanese were without any communication with Great Britain to follow the Russians into British waters and to capture them there.

Japan would not conduct hostilities in British waters unless she had the consent, express or implied, of Great Britain, and certainly no one in Europe would believe that such action on her part was without the authority of her ally.

Ought Great Britain to authorize such action by Japan?

It deserves consideration whether she should, in view of her duties to Russia, to other neutrals, and to herself:

As regards Russia—to authorize expressly or impliedly the entry by the Japanese into a British port, and the capture of the Russian fleet there would be an act inconsistent with neutrality—

> "It is," says Professor Lawrence ("Principles of International Law," 3rd edition, p. 535), "a grave error to suppose that neutrals are endowed with large privileges and armed with large powers to use or toss away as they please. Their duty is to indicate their neutrality. Respect for it is not a matter between them and the offending belligerent only. It concerns the whole family of nations, and most of all the Power which is most likely to be injured by a failure to insist upon it."

To authorize such action by Japan at Wei-hai Wei is a very different thing from a mere failure to prevent it.

As regards other neutral countries—if there are any merchant-vessels under the flag of such countries in Wei-hai Wei they might be injured during the fight that would follow upon an entry by the Japanese for the purpose of seizing the Russian fleet, and the same thing might happen to war-vessels of other neutral Powers if they chanced to be there. It is not easy to see what answer this country would have to a demand for compensation for damage so occasioned. Every Power is bound to keep order in its own ports, and would be liable to other Powers for any failure in this respect.

As regards Great Britain herself, a battle could not take place in the harbour of Wei-hai Wei without danger of damage to British vessels in the harbour and to British property on shore. The danger of such damage is one of the reasons given for a strict enforcement of neutrality in neutral waters.

But apart from the danger of such material damage, it may deserve consideration whether it is consistent with the position of this country as a Great Power to set the example for the first time of authorizing the use of its waters for the purpose of hostilities.

What, then, should be done in the perhaps improbable event of the Russian fleet taking refuge in Wei-hai Wei?

It is submitted that the proper course is that the ships and their crews should be interned for the rest of the war. Bluntschli ("Droit International Codifié," 5e édition, Article 777) draws no distinction in this respect between the case of war-ships and troops taking refuge in neutral territory, and there does not appear to be any difference in principle between the case of war-vessels and that of the artillery of a refugee army which might be of the greatest possible service to the pursuers if it fell into their hands. Such internment would put the ships out of action for the rest of the war, and Japan, if successful, might make it a term of the Treaty of Peace that they should be surrendered to her.

As, in the supposed case, the Russian fleet would have to come to Wei-hai Wei in the face of our prohibition, the internment might take place at once without their being given the option of leaving within twenty-four hours, which would otherwise be accorded.

(Initialled) R. B. F.

(No. 6.)

Admiralty to Foreign Office.

Admiralty, July 28, 1904.

Sir,

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to transmit, for the information of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, copy of a telegram of this date—No. 199—which has been sent to the Commander-in-chief, China, at Wei-hai Wei.

I am, &c.
(Signed) EVAN MACGREGOR.

Inclosure.

Admiralty to Vice-Admiral Sir G. Noel.

Admiralty, July 28, 1904.

(Telegraphic.)

THE moment has now come for you to return to Wei-hai Wei immediately with the fleet.

Both the Russian and the Japanese Governments have been informed that their ships will under no circumstances be allowed to enter Wei-hai Wei while the war lasts. You are, therefore, to use all the means in your power, except force, which in this case you are on no account to use, to prevent their entering; and, if you see any Russian or Japanese ship approaching Wei-hai Wei with a view to entering the harbour or the territorial waters, you must, if possible, communicate with her and explain both that Wei-hai Wei is closed to her and all belligerent ships and also that the certain penalty for an infringement of the Order will be that you will intern the crew and yourself take charge of the ship without giving her any option of leaving within twenty-four hours. If, notwithstanding, any Russian or Japanese ships do enter the harbour or the territorial waters of Wei-hai Wei, you are accordingly to immediately yourself take charge of the ships and to intern the crews, and no option is to be given them of leaving Wei-hai Wei within twenty-four hours.

In the case of a ship which is actually in danger of sinking, you may admit her into the harbour or territorial waters at your own discretion, but you must take charge of the ship and intern the crew just the same.

1904

(No. 7.)

Mr. Hurst to the Attorney-General.

Foreign Office, August 27, 1904.

Dear Mr. Attorney-General,

THE Admiralty have been consulted as to the points you raised about belligerent war-ships entering Wei-hai Wei and the issue of a Proclamation by the Commissioner on the lines of that issued in the Bahamas.

Their reply has now been received, and they are anxious that no fresh instructions should be issued.

Before the letter goes to Lord Lansdowne, Mr. Campbell would like you to see it, in case you still fear that the instructions are not quite adequate.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) C. J. B. HURST.

(No. 8.)

Attorney-General to Mr. Hurst.

Bradbury Private Hotel, North Berwick,
August 28, 1904.

(Private.)

My dear Hurst,

I AM afraid we may get into a mess over the directions if something is not done.

The telegram No. 199 was sent in an emergency, to meet the case then apprehended.

Even Lübeck—which Perels, I think unjustly, attacks for undue stringency (French translation by Arendt, pp. 244–245)—exempted vessels in distress from sea perils. Kaltenborn's monograph on the Lübeck case ("Kriegschiffe auf neutralem Gebiet") is worth looking at on the whole subject.

Yours always,
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Annex (A).

Minute by the Attorney-General.

I THINK that the question of these directions should be further considered.

The directions in telegram No. 199 (28th July, 1904) were drawn up in view of the emergency, which was then apprehended, that the Russian fleet might seek refuge from Admiral Togo at Wei-hai Wei.

The question, I suggest, is whether, when the immediate danger of such a contingency shall have passed away, the directions are in a form suitable for use during the remainder of the war.

They enjoin that, in the case of a ship which is actually in danger of sinking, the Commander-in-chief may admit her at his discretion, but he must take charge of the ship and intern the crew.

This is quite applicable to the case then in contemplation, viz., vessels taking refuge from a victorious enemy and damaged in the conflict.

But is it intended that a belligerent vessel, whether Russian or Japanese, which has, say, touched a rock, and necessarily puts into Wei-hai Wei for safety, is to be disarmed, and, with her crew, detained for the rest of the war?

Any such claim would give rise to the strongest remonstrances, and I cannot see on what ground a position so inconsistent with the comity of nations could be defended. To impose the penalty of internment on a vessel seeking asylum under such circumstances merely from perils of the sea is, so far as I know, without precedent, and it is certainly inconsistent with international usage.

I am far from suggesting that the Bahamas precedent should be followed in its entirety. It seems to be quite proper to retain internment for cases in which vessels are seeking the safety of neutral waters in flight before the enemy. And it may well be that the Bahamas precedent should not, for special reasons, be followed throughout in other respects. What I submit for consideration is that the directions, framed for a particular emergency, should be recast, in view particularly of the necessity of making some discrimination in respect of vessels in distress from sea perils, if they are to govern our action at Wei-hai Wei during the ensuing period of the war.

R. B. F.

Bradbury Private Hotel, North Berwick,
August 29, 1904.

(No. 9.)

Foreign Office to Admiralty.

(Confidential.)

Foreign Office, September 6, 1904.

Sir,

THE Marquess of Lansdowne has had under his careful consideration your letter * * * on the subject of the treatment to be accorded to any Russian or Japanese war-ships seeking asylum in the harbour or territorial waters of Wei-hai Wei. You express the conviction of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty that any modification in the clear and precise orders already issued to the Commander-in-chief would be extremely undesirable, and, in practice, would result in confusion and complications.

Before replying, Lord Lansdowne considered it advisable to submit your letter to the Attorney-General and to obtain his opinion.

I am now directed to point out that the instructions issued on the 28th July to the Commander-in-chief were drawn up in view of the emergency which was then apprehended that one of the belligerent fleets from Port Arthur might be driven, as the consequence of a naval encounter, to take refuge at Wei-hai Wei, and that, were it closely pursued by the other, active hostilities within British territorial waters might result—a contingency which it was most desirable to avert.

Lord Lansdowne would, however, suggest, for their Lordships' consideration, the question whether, now that the immediate danger of such a contingency has passed away, the orders issued to the authorities at Wei-hai Wei are in a form suitable for use during the remainder of the war. They enjoin that, in the case of a ship actually in danger of sinking, the Commander-in-chief may admit her at his discretion; but he must take charge of the ship and intern the crew for the remainder of the war. It appears to Lord Lansdowne that these conditions are quite applicable to the case then in contemplation, namely, that of vessels damaged in the conflict and taking refuge from a victorious enemy; but that if a Russian or Japanese ship, which, in the ordinary course of cruising, struck upon a rock or was caught in a gale, were refused shelter at Wei-hai Wei, or elected to continue her voyage in preference to disarmament, with the result that she foundered with all hands, His Majesty's Government would be placed in a position of great difficulty. In such circumstances a refusal to grant the usual measure of hospitality, or an enforcement of the penalty of internment, would be inconsistent with the comity of nations, and would certainly give rise to the strongest remonstrances. Lord Lansdowne is, moreover, advised that vessels in distress from perils of the sea are exempted from the penalty of internment, according to all writers on international law, and that no precedent can be found for so strict an interpretation of the duties of neutrals. I am to invite a special reference to pp. 244–45 of Arendt's French translation of Perel's "Manuel de Droit Maritime International," where he discusses the Ordinance issued by the Senate of Lubeck in the war of 1848–50 between Denmark and Schleswig-Holstein, and also to Kaltenborn's monograph ("Kriegsschiffe auf Neutralen Gebiet") on the same subject.

It is not contended that the precedent of the Bahama Islands should be adopted in its entirety, and it appears to Lord Lansdowne that it would be quite proper to allow the instructions as to internment to hold good in cases in which vessels are seeking the safety of neutral waters to avoid capture by the enemy; but I am to suggest that, having regard to the desirability of making some discrimination in favour of vessels which are merely in distress from sea perils, the directions framed for a particular emergency should be re-cast, if they are to govern the action of His Majesty's Government at Wei-hai Wei during the remaining period of the war.

I am, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

1904

(No. 10.)

Admiralty to Foreign Office.

(Confidential.)

Admiralty, October 10, 1904.

Sir,

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to transmit, for the information of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, copy of a telegram, dated to-day, sent to the Commander-in-chief, China, verbal concurrence having been obtained from the Foreign Office.

I am, &c.
(Signed) EVAN MACGREGOR.

Inclosure.

Admiralty to Vice-Admiral Sir G. Noel.

(Telegraphic.)

Admiralty, October 10, 1904.

REFERRING to Admiralty telegram of the 28th July, it has now been decided by His Majesty's Government that, should a vessel belonging to either belligerent put into Wei-hai Wai from stress of weather, and not for the purpose of escaping the enemy, she is not to be interned, and the usual instructions as to belligerents visiting neutral ports observed. The facts of each particular case to be decided upon by you or the Senior Naval Officer present.

No. 41.

[September 2, 1904.]

Mr. Hurst to Sir R. Findlay.

Dear Mr. Attorney-General,

Foreign Office, August 31, 1904.

* * * * * *

Coaling of vessels of Russian Volunteer fleet at Zanzibar. International position of that State

A telegram has been received from Mr. Cave (British Agent at Zanzibar) reporting that two vessels had been sighted lying off Zanzibar and believed to have coal for Russian Volunteer fleet cruisers.

Anxious to know what steps he should take if Russian war-ships attempt to coal in Zanzibar waters, he suggests he should object to coaling within them, but take no action if the coaling goes on outside territorial waters.

Zanzibar does not issue a Proclamation of Neutrality when a war breaks out. At the beginning of this present war no coaling rules were published there, nor were instructions sent to the officials either then or in July, when the most recent interpretation of the rules was communicated to the Colonies and other possessions.

When the "Smolensk" recently reappeared in African waters, however, it was thought desirable to send to Zanzibar the orders issued to certain ports in July during the "Malacca" crisis not to give any coal to vessels of the Volunteer fleet, but to refer home for instructions at once.

This produced the following telegram from Mr. Cave:—

"Mr. Cave to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received August 24, 4·45 P.M.)

"(Treaty.)
"(Telegraphic.)

"Zanzibar, August 24, 1904, 4·35 P.M.

"In the eventuality of Russian Volunteer steamer wishing to coal here, they would probably endeavour to obtain supply from French firm here, and there is every reason to believe that French Consul would put forward pretensions that this firm has a right to furnish supplies sufficient to carry steamer to the nearest port of its own country. If this should occur should strong line be taken up?"

The answer sent was as follows:—

"The Marquess of Lansdowne to Mr. Cave.

"(Treaty.)
"(Telegraphic.)

Foreign Office, August 28, 1904, 11 A.M.

"Your telegram 24th August.

"Having regard to doubts as to status of Volunteer fleet steamers, Zanzibar Government will be fully justified in refusing them leave to coal, until we have been made aware of the precise circumstances under which any particular vessel has applied. We shall support them in so acting."

The present telegram (received 26th August) raises the general question of coaling, and it becomes necessary to determine what rules, if any, are to be enforced.

If the coal is intended as a supply for Russian cruisers, it will be drawn on by any that require it, whether Volunteer fleet vessels or not.

As I have said above, no notification has been made as to the limits within which war-vessels may use Zanzibar waters or take in supplies of coal.

Are we to enforce the stringent British rule as interpreted by the July instructions?

If so, it must be enforced on all alike—French, Germans, &c.—who may desire to supply coals to a Russian ship.

Our rule is more stringent than that enforced by France. What the German rule is we do not know, and the question is—

1. Should we be entitled to interfere with the freedom of trade engaged under Treaty with Zanzibar by France and Germany by enforcing on behalf of the Sultan a more stringent rule than is applied to Frenchmen and Germans in their own country?

I inclose in this connection a Report you gave on a somewhat analogous case that arose in China when China attempted to forbid the export of contraband altogether.

2. Would it be desirable that the Sultan should issue at this late stage of the war a set of coaling rules?

3. If no notification or rules are issued, to what extent should we be entitled to go beyond the rule that is universally recognized in international law, that neutral territory must not be made a base of operations?

4. Lastly, there is the question should we be entitled to stop the use of Zanzibar waters by colliers habitually using those waters, but actually delivering the coal to the cruisers (whether genuine or Volunteer fleet) on the high seas?

I add a separate Memorandum explaining the present international position at Zanzibar, which I hope may be adequate.

Very truly, &c.
(Signed) C. J. B. HURST.

Inclosure.

Memorandum respecting the Position of Zanzibar.

ZANZIBAR was independent till 1890, but all European Powers had Treaties with her which gave them extra-territorial rights. In 1890 Great Britain declared a Protectorate which has been specifically recognized by France and Germany in Treaties, and acquiesced in by other Powers.

By Article 2 of an Agreement of the 14th June, 1890, the Sultan of Zanzibar "agrees that all his relations, of whatever sort, with foreign Powers shall be conducted under the sole advice and through the channel of His Majesty's Government."

By Article 1 he accepted the British Protectorate.

The Treaty rights of foreign Powers were not affected by this arrangement.

By the Samoa Agreement of 1899 Germany renounced her right of extra-territoriality in Zanzibar, but such was not to become effective till other Powers abandoned theirs.

France has agreed to close her Consular Court and recognize the British Tribunals on the 15th September of this year. Italy has agreed to the cesser of her Consular jurisdiction, and negotiations with other Powers (excluding those, like Russia, whose rights of jurisdiction, depends on most-favoured-nation clauses) are in progress.

1904

Trade rights, however, will not be effected.

C. J. B. H.

Foreign Office, August 31, 1904.

Memorandum by Sir R. Findlay.

I ASSUME that it is intended to adhere to the policy laid down in Lord Lansdowne's telegram to Mr. Cave of the 28th August as to the Volunteer fleet, and that the questions now put relate to the general question of coaling apart from the special status of the Volunteer fleet.

Question 1.

Treaty rights to trade in Zanzibar must be subject to any restrictions which the Sultan thinks desirable to preserve his neutrality, so long as such restrictions are in themselves of a reasonable nature.

Moreover, the question here is not so much of the right of French and German merchants to supply coal as of the right of the belligerent vessel to use Zanzibar for coaling purposes.

I do not think that the Treaties bind Zanzibar to extend to French and German merchants the same liberty to supply coal which they would enjoy in their own countries respectively. They must submit to whatever Regulations are reasonably required, having regard to the circumstances of Zanzibar.

How far His Majesty's Government should proceed in the way of restricting coaling facilities there by their advice to the Sultan is a question of policy.

Question 2.

I regard the new coaling Rules of His Majesty's Government as reasonable in themselves, but should think it very doubtful whether, as a matter of policy, it is desirable that the Sultan should be advised to adopt them at present.

Having regard to the conflict of interests at Zanzibar, it is possible that other Powers might contend that they are unreasonable. The British Rules as to coaling have always been more severe than those of other countries except the United States, and they are now still more stringent.

I should be disposed to say that it would be better at present to go on without any special Rules, and, while preventing any action which is an infringement of general international law, to reserve for future consideration the question of any and what Rules if circumstances should arise making more specific Regulations necessary.

Question 3.

In the absence of Rules, I think that in the matter of coaling the principle of not allowing neutral territory to be made a base of operations should be applied in Zanzibar.

Question 4.

This question must be answered, in my opinion, in the affirmative. In the case supposed, the Russians would be using Zanzibar as a base of operations for the colliers kept there to attend on their cruisers.

(Initialled) R. B. F.

September 2, 1904.

No. 42.

[September 9, 1904.]

Foreign Office to Sir R. Finlay.

Dear Mr. Attorney-General, Foreign Office, September 8, 1904.

Russian colliers passing Dardanelles to wait on the "Teretz."

A RATHER difficult question has arisen with regard to the Dardanelles, upon which Lord Lansdowne would be glad to have your opinion.

The papers about everything to do with the Dardanelles are so voluminous that we should have preferred to make it the subject of the usual official reference if there were time, but unfortunately it is a matter that does not admit of very great delay.

A Russian cruiser called the "Teretz" is on her way from the Baltic, and is believed to be going to the Red Sea. She left Lisbon (it now appears) on the 6th September.

Some of the vessels of the Volunteer fleet now in the Black Sea are suspected of being under orders to join her; they are laden with coals, and would provide her with the fuel necessary to enable her to conduct operations there. They have left Sevastopol and are now lying at Odessa, so far as can be told, ready to start when ordered.

The question is, are we entitled to make the Porte refuse to allow them to pass through the Dardanelles?

You will remember that the Porte now compels Russia to undertake that a Volunteer fleet vessel passing the Dardanelles under the mercantile flag shall continue to fly that flag till the end of her voyage, and will not undertake belligerent action.

Assuming that this undertaking will be respected, the question still remains whether a Volunteer fleet vessel laden with coal for the use of a Russian cruiser legitimately at work in the Red Sea, and while flying the mercantile flag, is "a ship of war" within the meaning of Article I of the Convention of Paris of 1856.

I have not been able to find any case very precisely in point.

Correspondence and protests relating to men of war (i.e., fighting ships) that for some reason or other were allowed to pass the Dardanelles does not seem to me to be in point, but I may say that there are one or two cases where a war vessel has been granted a Firman without anybody objecting, if wholly unarmed and employed on a peaceful errand—e.g., Her Majesty's ship "Ariadne" in 1869, fitted up as a yacht and wholly unarmed, carrying the Prince and Princess of Wales, and one or two other instances.

There has also been from time to time correspondence about vessels of the Volunteer fleet carrying troops, either as drafts or as guards to convicts, and the attitude seems generally to have been taken by His Majesty's Government that such vessels were not allowed by the strict letter of the Treaties to pass; but there is this distinction, I think, between that case and the present: a transport full of armed men is a unit capable of fighting, i.e., capable of endangering the peace of Turkey, a cargo of coal by itself is not. I am bound to say, however, that the attitude of His Majesty's Government to the passage of the Volunteer fleet vessels during the last fifteen years seems to have been rather wanting in definite purpose, and I am not sure that I quite understand it.

It is a little difficult to find a valid reason why the fact that Russia is at war with Japan but at peace with Turkey should affect her rights in the Dardanelles, and should limit them more closely than when she is at peace with everybody. We have never, so far as I know, objected to the Volunteer fleet vessels carrying coal through the Dardanelles.

You will see in the Memoranda that I inclose that in 1813 we considered ourselves entitled to obtain supplies of corn for our troops through the Dardanelles; but these would presumably have been carried in ordinary merchant-vessels; however, it seems to show that the vessel does not infringe the Rules of the Dardanelles by reason of her carrying supplies for a belligerent, and one of the ways in which the question in this case may be put is, whether these vessels are doing anything more than carry supplies for a belligerent.

The fact that, if, when they arrive at the Canal, they are shown to be fleet auxiliaries they will be treated as war ships, and limited in their coaling facilities under the Canal Rules, seems to me to raise different questions—I cannot see why a vessel may not be a fleet auxiliary when she reaches Port Saïd, without being a "ship of war" when she passed the Dardanelles.

1904

You will, I am afraid, think I am sending you a most alarming number of printed documents, but the difficulty has been to make a selection; and the reason why I send the largest is because it contains the Protocols in English instead of in French, as they are printed in the State Papers.

Very truly, &c.
(Signed) C. J. B. HURST.

Memorandum by Sir R. Findlay.

I THINK that the vessels of the Volunteer fleet, flying the merchant flag and under the engagement referred to, cannot be treated as ships of war within the meaning of the Treaty of 1856 merely because they carry coals to be used by Russian cruisers.

They should, however, be treated as belligerent vessels as regards coaling facilities.

Both these questions were considered in August in consultation between the Prime Minister, Lord Lansdowne, the Lord Chancellor, and myself, and the conclusions above indicated were arrived at. I think them correct on the ground that vessels which are merely colliers in attendance upon cruisers are not themselves ships of war under the Treaty, but they are engaged in belligerent operations, and therefore subject to the Coaling Regulations.

R. B. F.

Bradbury Private Hotel, North Berwick,
September 9, 1904.

No. 43.

[September 23, 1904.]

(No. 1.)

Foreign Office to the Attorney-General.

Dear Mr. Attorney-General, Foreign Office, September 22, 1904.

Russo-Japanese War. As to protesting against coal being absolutely contraband

THE contraband negotiations with Russia have entered on a new phase, as we are now told that coal remains unconditionally contraband. Mr. Campbell has asked me to send you these papers as the situation will have to be carefully considered, and he feels sure that Lord Lansdowne would like to have your observations as to what ought to be done.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) C. J. B. HURST.

(No. 2.)

Memorandum by the Attorney-General.

THE greater number of the articles mentioned in clause 6 have been generally recognized as absolutely contraband.

His Majesty's Government will, I presume, adhere to the protest already made as to coal being put in this category. This, however, is not so important from our point of view as the question of food-stuffs, as to which the admission made is of great value.

(Initialled) R. B. F.

Balmoral Hotel, Edinburgh, September 23, 1904.

Annex.

VI. The following articles are deemed to be contraband of war:—

1. Small-arms of every kind, and guns, mounted or in sections, as well as armour-plates;
2. Ammunition for fire-arms, such as projectiles, shell-fuses, bullets, priming, cartridges, cartridge-cases, powder, saltpetre, sulphur;
3. Explosives and materials for causing explosions, such as torpedoes, dynamite, pyroxyline, various explosive substances, wire conductors, and everything used to explode mines and torpedoes;
4. Artillery, engineering and camp equipment, such as gun carriages, ammunition waggons, boxes or packages of cartridges, field kitchens and forges, instrument waggons, pontoons, bridge trestles, barbed wire, harness, &c.;
5. Articles of military equipment and clothing, such as bandoliers, cartridge boxes, knapsacks, straps, cuirasses, entrenching tools, drums, pots and pans, saddles, harness, completed parts of military uniforms, tents, &c.;
6. Vessels bound for an enemy's port, even if under a neutral commercial flag, if it is apparent from their construction, interior fittings, and other indications that they have been built for warlike purposes, and are proceeding to an enemy's port in order to be sold or handed over to the enemy;
7. Boilers and every kind of naval machinery, mounted or unmounted.
8. Every kind of fuel, such as coal, naphtha, alcohol, and other similar materials.
9. Articles and material for the installation of telegraphs, telephones, or for the construction of railroads.
10. Generally, everything intended for warfare by sea or land, as well as rice, provisions, and horses, beasts of burden and others which may be used for a warlike purpose, if they are transported on the account of or are destined for the enemy.

No. 44.

[September 30, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Attorney-General.

Dear Mr. Attorney-General, Foreign Office, September 29, 1904.

German colliers at Teneriffe for Russian war vessels.

LORD LANSDOWNE would like you to see this telegram about the vessels (German) that have arrived at Teneriffe with coal that is believed to be for the Russian ships.

It seems to me that the following sentence from the Chancellor's judgment in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Company (1899 A.C. 143, at p. 160) is instructive in connection with the interpretation of these words—"employed in the military or naval service":—

"It is . . . the character of the use as a use by some person having the dominion and control over the place, and conducting the business of a betting establishment with the persons resorting thereto."

The Russians do not seem to me to "employ" or "use" the ship merely because they own the coal she is carrying: there must be something more.

Whether neutrality necessitates the strict enforcement of the Foreign Enlistment Act in this case is another matter, but, if the colliers are in Russian employment, it would have to be considered whether they were making British ports a base of supplies.

I am also to send you a despatch from St. Petersburgh on the contraband questions, viz., about the status of coal and cotton.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) C. J. B. HURST.

Memorandum by the Attorney-General.

I AGREE with the view expressed in the Report of the Law Officers, dated the 25th July, 1870. I think that the result would be the same, even in the absence of a charter to the belligerent Government, if the bargain was that the colliers should attend on the fleet for the purposes of coal supply. It may be a nice question of fact whether in any particular case there is to be such an attending on the fleet. It appears to me that the delivery of coal to a fleet at sea would, ordinarily speaking, involve such an attending on the fleet, and that there might be an infringement of the Foreign

1904

Enlistment Act, even if the collier were in no other sense put under the orders of the belligerent than by being instructed to wait upon his fleet for this purpose.

I agree with Mr. Hurst's suggestion as to the steps to be taken by way of precaution in the future. Some case will, no doubt, be necessary to see that the assurances given as to the nature of the work on which such colliers are to be employed can be relied on.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Rusack's Marine Hotel, St. Andrew's, N.B.,
September 30, 1904.

No. 45

[October 5, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Attorney-General.

Foreign Office, October 4, 1904.

"Smolensk" and "Petersburg": Conversion into war-vessels after leaving Black Sea.

Dear Mr. Attorney-General,

A STATEMENT in a Russian newspaper article sent home by Sir C. Hardinge has given rise to some discussion here as to whether the "Smolensk" and the "Petersburg" can be converted into recognized war-ships at Libau, and we are somewhat puzzled by an apparent discrepancy between a telegram sent to Sir N. O'Conor at the beginning of August, and in the terms of which Lord Lansdowne believes you concurred, and the opinion that you gave on the 25th August in connection with a telegram from Sir John Anderson as to the treatment to be meted out to Volunteer fleet vessels in general at Singapore.

We have not at any time told the Russian Government that the "Smolensk" and the "Petersburg" must be sent back to the Black Sea, even when we understood that the orders conveyed to them by the British cruisers directed them to return to the Baltic, and might consequently be taken to have known whither they were being sent.

The views contained in your Minute of the 25th August were owing to my having expressed the opinion that Sir John Anderson might safely treat Volunteer fleet vessels as war-ships or merchantmen according to the flag they were flying, as in view of the assurances demanded by the Porte before they were allowed to pass the Bosphorus, they would not be flying the naval flag unless they had completed their merchant voyage and been commissioned as war-ships in a Russian port—a proceeding I understood you to consider legitimate, but I gather that I went too far.

The probability of the two notorious Volunteer fleet vessels being converted at Libau makes it necessary to consider the question.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) C. J. B. HURST.

The Attorney-General to Foreign Office.

Bradbury Private Hotel, North Berwick,
October 5, 1904.

My dear Hurst,

THE question under what circumstances a vessel which has got through the Bosphorus as a merchant-vessel is entitled to assume the character of a war-vessel, to my mind, turns largely on what was in fact her true character when she passed through the Bosphorus.

If she was genuinely a merchant-vessel requiring structural alteration to convert her into a vessel suitable for warlike purposes, her passage was rightful, and I cannot see any objection to her being subsequently fitted out and armed as a cruiser. The work of conversion could, of course, only be effected in a Russian port.

But if she were in fact fitted out as a vessel of war when she passed the Bosphorus, though her guns were in the hold, and was intended to be used as such when she got through, her passage was wrongful. She gets through by falsely representing that she was a merchant-vessel, when, in fact, she was a war-vessel, and to be used as such. I think, as at present advised, that we cannot well make a general admission that such a vessel can legitimately act as a man-of-war merely because she has reached Libau. The character of the vessel itself is not changed there, even if the commission is issued there.

In strictness, such a vessel may be held to the representation that she is a merchant-vessel, by which she got through the Straits—otherwise she is permitted to take advantage of her own fraud.

Equipment of the vessel for war in a Russian port seems to me an important element. The mere issuing of the commission leaves the vessel as she was when she passed the Bosphorus.

The "Smolensk" and "Petersburg" would appear to have been really war-vessels when they passed the Bosphorus as merchantmen. But I feel the full force of the observations on the question of policy as to the difficulty of insisting, after what has occurred, that these vessels shall not be recognized as war-vessels even after their return to Libau. The general question is a very important one, and possibly Lord Lansdowne might think a formal reference to the Law Officers desirable.

The view which I have above suggested does not appear to be necessarily inconsistent with the language of the telegram of the 2nd August, 1904, from the Marquess of Lansdowne to Sir N. O'Conor. My impression is that this telegram was sent after some conversation on the subject, in which I took part [Yes.—L.]. The distinction, however, which I have indicated in this letter was not so clearly present to my mind when this subject was first broached. I looked it up and had some conversation on it with the President of the Board of Trade a little later, before I left London in the middle of August.

Believe me, &c.
(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.

Minutes.

Mr. Campbell,

I annex the Attorney-General's answer about the fitting out of the Volunteer Fleet vessels as war-ships at a Russian port.

Any representations to be made with regard to these two vessels—now approaching Libau—would, I suppose, have to be made at once. The formal reference to the Law Officers would mean that the whole question would be thoroughly studied on their return to London, and it would be some time before the Report would be received.

[This opinion of the Attorney-General shows, I think, that His Majesty's Government would be entitled, if they thought it wise to do so, to say that the "Smolensk" and the "Petersburg," having passed the Dardanelles fraudulently, will not be recognized at any time in the future (and whether recommissioned or not) as war-ships.]

They would have in fact either to go back to the mercantile flag or lie and rot in Russian ports.

I think it would be well to refer the whole question formally to the Law Officers. The Attorney-General is extremely kind about answering these questions that are sent to him informally; and where the questions are difficult he ought, I think, to have, especially where he hints it himself, an opportunity of more thoroughly considering them.

C. J. B. H.

Foreign Office, October 7, 1904.

As regards the first part of the Attorney-General's Memorandum, no structural alterations are probably required to convert a Volunteer Fleet vessel into a cruiser; outwardly, at all events, they are said to be indistinguishable from a man-of-war.

With reference to the paragraph I have marked in blue in Mr. Hurst's minute,[*] there must come a time in the future when the "Smolensk" and "Petersburg" will have purged their offence of getting through the Dardanelles under false pretences; and when His Majesty's Government could no longer refuse to recognize them as commissioned war-ships, e.g., suppose them to be now employed as genuine merchantmen, and that in this capacity they several times enter, and emerge from the Black Sea, finally arriving at Libau (say) eighteen months or two years' hence, it can hardly be contended that the Russian Government would not then be entitled to issue commissions to them. If this be granted, the question arises as to how long their punishment—as it were—is to last. It cannot last for ever. They have been sent back to the Baltic in disgrace, and to address any further communication to Russia about them at present would seem to me very impolitic.

---

[*] Printed within brackets.

1904

But if Lord Lansdowne should think otherwise, he will, no doubt, like to have a formal reference made to the Law Officers before action is taken.

F. A. C.

Foreign Office, October 8, 1904.

I see nothing for it but to ask the Law Officers for their deliberate opinion.

I remain of the opinion which I have already expressed, that if the question be dealt with merely as one of policy, we could scarcely contend that these vessels were on account of their original offence to be for ever disqualified from taking part in military operations.

But we should have all the guidance available as to the legal aspects of the case.

L.

Foreign Office, October 9, 1904.

A formal reference to the Law Officers should, I think, now be put in hand. My own view, such as it is, has been and is that we cannot reasonably maintain, either having regard to considerations of policy or merely to considerations of international law, that the initial fault of these vessels has put them, beyond all recall, out of action for the rest of the war.

It seems to me that the limit of our contention in this direction should be that the original fraud vitiated the whole of their proceedings as alleged men-of-war during the continuance of the voyage, which began by their fraudulent issue through the Dardanelles under the guise of merchant-vessels.

If they terminate their present voyage in a Russian port outside the Black Sea, e.g., at Libau, and there fit out and are commissioned as Russian men-of-war, I do not think that we ought to protest as a matter of policy, or should stand on very firm ground—quâ matter of law and abstract argument—if we did so protest. I do not, however, think that a ship which has issued from the Black Sea as a merchant-ship, can, during the pendency of her then voyage, be commissioned as a Russian public ship* either on the high seas or in a non-Russian port.

We could, surely, however, not successfully maintain that a Russian merchant-vessel sailing from Odessa to Libau with a general cargo through the Sea of Marmora could not, after her arrival at Libau, be fitted out and commissioned at that port as a Russian public vessel. The general cargo and voyage to Libau might doubtless be merely devices to extricate her from the mare clausum of the Euxine, and to render her subsequently available as a man-of-war, but I think they would be devices which we could not defeat.

Going a step further, and assuming that a line of subsidized Russian mail steamers, which might be called upon for service as armed cruisers in time of war, ran between Odessa and St. Petersburgh, I do not think that we could object to such vessels being commissioned at St. Petersburgh, and taking their guns and ammunition on board there, as men-of-war, merely because they had left Odessa after war had broken out, and passed the Straits as merchant mail-steamers in pursuance of their ordinary avocation as such.

There comes a point, of course, where the line must be drawn, and it is not difficult to say that the "Smolensk" and the "Petersburg" clearly sailed over that line, although it is not easy to locate the exact spot at which it ought to be drawn.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, October 11, 1904.

---

* Probably, however, if another Russian man-of-war took out the commission and handed it over on behalf of the Russian Government to the Russian merchant-vessel on the high seas, which as the common property of all nations such a proceeding could not be impeached. But a commissioning within the territorial waters of some Power other than Russia would be a proceeding taken altogether outside of Russian jurisdiction, and within the exclusive jurisdiction of the other Power.

However, the question is in some obscurity, and I have been unable to find any definite authority on this point. It is not necessary for the moment to lay down any rule on it; and perhaps, having regard to the position of our own subsidized merchant cruisers, and the possible desirability which may arise hereafter of commissioning them in a foreign port, should war break out while they are on a voyage, it will be more convenient to leave it undecided and open.

W. E. D.

No. 46.

[October 28, 1904.]

(No. 1.)

Customs to Foreign Office.—(Received October 25.)

(Confidential.)

Custom-house, London, October 24, 1904.

War with Japan: Colliers loading in England for use of Russian war vessels.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Board of Customs to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Campbell's letter . . . . . . relative to the position of colliers loading coal in this country for the use of Russian war-ships, and to transmit, for the information of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, with reference thereto, the inclosed copy of a report by the Solicitor of this Department, in the terms of which the Board concur.

It will be seen from that report that, under the law as it now stands, this Department would have no power to detain a vessel until the master gave assurances that she was not under charter to a belligerent Government. The Board will be prepared, however, should the Secretary of State so desire, to issue instructions to their officers to inquire, in all cases of the clearance of a vessel with coal under suspicious circumstances, whether the port or place named in the official documents as the destination of the vessel is the port or place at which the cargo is to be discharged or is a port of call only, or whether the vessel is proceeding to sea with open or sealed orders. Should the result of the inquiry be such as not to allay the suspicions entertained regarding the cargo, the facts could be at once communicated to the Foreign Office for such directions as the Secretary of State might see fit to give. Pending the receipt of such directions, however, the Board could not, as already indicated, order the detention of the vessel or cause clearance to be withheld.

In the event of the detention of a vessel being ordered by the Secretary of State under circumstances of this nature, it would be desirable that the Admiralty should be ready to render assistance to prevent the forcible departure of the vessel, if necessary.

I am to add that the Board are taking steps to ascertain as far as possible what cargoes of steam coal are suspected of being shipped at the present moment for the use of the Russian fleet, and that they hope to communicate the result to-morrow.

I am, &c.

(Signed) R. HENDERSON.

Inclosure.

Report by the Solicitor of Customs.

THERE has not been any Proclamation or Order in Council under section 8 of "The Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1879" (42 & 43 Vict., cap. 21), prohibiting the exportation of coal, which, it seems to me, especially in view of the opinion given by the Law Officers on the 25th July, 1870, might be held to fall within the expression "naval stores," as used in that section. In the absence of such a Proclamation or Order in Council, there is not, in my opinion, any power to refuse clearance to a ship carrying coal, and it seems to me that, if coal is to be regarded as contraband of war, it merely stands in that position, so that a person who ships coal does so at the risk of having the coal seized and the ship adjudged as a prize.

1904

With regard to the requirements of the Customs Law in reference to obtaining clearance, section 101 of "The Customs Consolidation Act, 1876" (39 & 40 Vict., cap. 36), requires the master of every ship, in which any goods are to be exported from the United Kingdom to parts beyond the seas, or his agent, to deliver an entry outwards of such ship verified by his signature in the form No. 6 in Schedule B to the Act, and containing the several particulars indicated in or required thereby. One of these particulars is the destination of the ship, and it is obvious that the true destination should be stated.

The master is also required to make a declaration, in the presence of the Collector, or some other officer of Customs, in reference to the ship, in which the ship's name and destination have to be inserted, and in this document he declares that the particulars given are true. The master or other person authorized in writing by him is also required by section 128 of the Act to attend before the Collector, or other proper officer of Customs, and to answer all such questions as may be demanded of him concerning the ship, the cargo, and the voyage. In ordinary circumstances, I think that such statements in the entry and declaration as do not require explanation must be accepted as true, and that, unless the Collector or other officer, to whom the entry and declaration are delivered, has substantial grounds for believing any such statement made to be incorrect, there can be no inquiry merely with a view to test the accuracy of it. If it should transpire that there had been a misstatement, in any instance, then the master would be responsible, either under section 132, for the departure of the ship without being duly cleared, or under section 168, for making a false declaration or not truly answering a question.

If a vessel laden with coal is duly entered outwards for a definite destination, it would, in my opinion, be difficult, if not impossible, for the Collector or other officer of Customs to require the master to give assurances that the vessel is not under charter to a belligerent Government, and that her cargo will not be employed for coaling belligerent war-ships at sea, but if the circumstances are suspicious, it would, I think, be possible for him to inquire whether the port named as the destination of the ship is the port at which the cargo is to be discharged, or a port of call only, or whether the ship is proceeding to sea with open or sealed orders.

If such question is asked, and an answer is refused, or the answer given is such as to create any suspicion, or, in fact, suggests that the coal will or may be used for a belligerent ship, the Foreign Office could be at once informed of the facts with a view to such action being taken as that Office may think expedient.

I do not however, think that clearance could be refused, pending instructions from the Foreign Office, but upon this point I will, if desired, consult the Law Officers.

(Signed) N. J. HIGHMORE.

October 24, 1904.

Minutes.

We should communicate this correspondence to Admiralty sooner or later.

The question is shall we ask them to issue the instructions they are prepared to give?

W. M.

Foreign Office, October 25, 1904.

A copy of this letter might be sent to the Admiralty at once for their information.

If the instructions suggested were given by the Customs, we might no doubt obtain useful information; but it appears that whatever answers are given by the shipmaster as to where the coal is to be discharged, there is no power of refusing clearance or of detaining the vessel.

I think we should refer to the Attorney-General (with any observations Mr. Davidson may have to offer) with reference to his opinion of the 30th September.

F. A. C.

Foreign Office, October 25, 1904.

I rather think that it will be better to refer the papers to the Attorney-General at once, and to defer making any communication to the Admiralty until we have obtained his views.

I think that it is clear that a clearance could not be permanently refused to a vessel merely because she refused to give an undertaking which is not imposed by, or justified under, the Customs Law as a condition precedent to the grant of a clearance.

At the same time, the refusal of a vessel to give an undertaking in the terms mentioned (and to avail herself of an opportunity which is afforded her as much in her own interest as in that of the public) would naturally give rise to the suspicion that she might have the intention to violate the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

In such circumstances, I should have thought that there would have been nothing unreasonable on the part of the local Customs authorities if they suspended the issue of the clearance until they had had time to communicate with, and receive instructions from, head-quarters.

I cannot conceive any ship with bonâ fide neutral intentions refusing to give the required assurance; on the other hand, the refusal to give the assurance asked for would be primâ facie evidence of unlawful intentions and justification for further detention and ultimate prosecution, if that were eventually decided on.

I do not think that a vessel which refused to give such an assurance, and which was consequently detained temporarily without a clearance, would obtain serious damages in respect of such detention if an attempt were made to impeach it in a Court of Law.

On the other hand, if such an assurance were given, it would, in the event of the assurance being subsequently broken, afford some answer on the part of His Majesty's Government to the belligerent who subsequently complained, while the refusal to give it would afford some considerable justification for the institution of a prosecution under the Foreign Enlistment Act.*

The question is no doubt largely one of policy; but, on the whole, I think that it is to our interest to endeavour, within the limits I have mentioned, to obtain such assurances.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, October 26, 1904.

* I take it this is the real point ultimately—whether a prosecution under the Foreign Enlistment Act would have a reasonable chance of success.

F. A. C.

Foreign Office, October 26, 1904.

The Attorney-General should see these papers at once. He will, I dare say, be good enough to speak to me about them.

L.

(No. 2.)

Customs to Foreign Office.—(Received October 26.)

Custom-house, London, October 25, 1904.

Sir,

IN continuation of my letter of yesterday's date, I am directed by the Board of Customs to transmit, for the information of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, the inclosed copies of reports which they have received from the Collectors of this revenue at Cardiff, Newport, and Port Talbot, relative to certain cargoes of coal which it is suspected are destined for Russian war-vessels. It will be observed that no definite reasons for the suspicion are furnished by the officers, who can only be guided in the matter at the present stage by the rumours current among local shippers.

I am to add that the Board have instructed the Collectors to report immediately any special circumstance which may come to their knowledge in regard to those vessels named in the lists which have not yet left this country, and the same will be communicated to you without delay; but, as pointed out in my letter of yesterday, no steps would be taken by this Department to withhold clearance of the vessels so long as the usual Customs requirements are duly met.

1904

I am, &c.
(Signed) R. HENDERSON.

[Inclosure not printed.]

Minutes.

Pretty extensive. F. A. C.

I don't see that we can do anything at present.

It is, however, conceivable in certain contingencies, which we trust will not arise, that we might within the next few days wish to stop such of these vessels as have not already sailed, and the coal on board of which is probably Russian property.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, October 27, 1904.

We had better send a copy to Admiralty. F. A. C.

We may have to warn them, anyhow, that such operations are illegal. Attorney-General to see. L.

(No. 3.)

Messrs. Woods, Tylor, and Brown to Foreign Office.—(Received October 26.)

44, Leadenhall Street, London,
October 25, 1904.

Dear Sir,

IN this morning's "Standard" we read that the British steamer "Roddam" is lying at Vigo with a cargo of coal on board for the Russian Baltic fleet.

Some time ago we were approached by brokers here, who were indirectly acting for the Russian Government, asking if we would offer our boats at a remunerative rate of hire, to follow the Russian fleet with coal supplies, but we refused to entertain this business.

We respectfully call your attention to the above case of the "Roddam," and ask you if, under the existing circumstances, it is permissible for British owners to charter their boats for such purposes as following the Russian fleet with coal supplies.

Yours respectively,
(Signed) WOODS, TYLOR, AND BROWN.

Minutes.

Should we decline to advise, or write something calculated to alarm all persons engaged in this sort of business? It seems a favourable opening, if it is deemed politic to take advantage of it.

Mr. Davidson. W. M.

Foreign Office, October 26, 1904.

Following the fleet with coal supplies would surely bring them within the meshes of the Foreign Enlistment Act. L.

Foreign Office, November 1, 1904.

(No. 4.)

Minute.

Attorney-General,—

COLLIERS for Russian fleet.

Please see three papers:—

(A.) Report from Customs.
(B.) Report also from Customs as to number of ships taking coal on board.
(C.) Inquiry from Messrs. Woods as to legality of such proceedings.

L.

Foreign Office, October 27, 1904.

(No. 5.)

Memorandum by the Attorney-General.

I THINK that the answer to the letter of Messrs. Woods, Tylor, and Brown is that it is not permissible for British owners to charter their boats for the purposes mentioned. It might be added that before interfering in any particular case evidence of the intent so to employ the vessel would be necessary.

I cannot see that there is on these papers any evidence that would justify proceedings. There is suspicion—and it may be reasonable suspicion—but there is nothing in the nature of proof. I cannot recommend interference on these materials with any of the vessels named.

The officials at the ports should make inquiries, as far as possible, about any suspicious cases, and at once call the attention of the Foreign Office to any case in which there appear to be any materials which would justify action.

(Initialled) R. B. F.

October 28, 1904.

No. 47.

[October 29, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, October 18, 1904.

Gentlemen,

"Peterburg," "Smolensk," and other vessels of Volunteer Fleet. Commissioning of as ships of war after leaving Black Sea.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you, for your consideration, a despatch from His Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh (Paper A), inclosing an article which has appeared in the "Novoe Vremya" commenting on the proceedings of British cruisers, and on the attitude of the Egyptian authorities, towards the Russian Volunteer ships "Smolensk" and "Peterburg," and to invite your attention to the concluding sentence of that article which suggests that these two vessels, which have now arrived at Libau, are to be there commissioned in proper form as ships of war.

As you are aware, the action of these vessels (which, after emerging from the Black Sea under the mercantile flag, but with guns and warlike equipment in their holds, and proceeding to Suez, were armed and commissioned for the purpose of scouting for merchant-vessels carrying contraband) has formed the subject of considerable correspondence between His Majesty's Government and that of Russia, and, as a result of the negotiations between the two Governments, the vessels have received orders conveyed, at the request of the Russian Government, by one of His Majesty's ships, to repair to Libau. The question now arises whether, if they are recommissioned at that port, they should be recognized as regularly constituted ships of war.

1904

I am further to call attention to two telegrams, to and from His Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, dated the 2nd August (Papers B and C), in which it is stated that the Ottoman Government have, since the passage of these two ships, demanded, and, it is understood, received, verbal assurances from the Russian Government that "vessels of the Russian Volunteer Fleet, after passing the Straits under the commercial flag, shall not hoist the war flag nor commit any belligerent act until the end of their voyage." The concluding words of the Turkish telegram quoted in the message from Sir N. O'Conor appear to Lord Lansdowne to be ambiguous. His Lordship, as at present advised, is inclined to think that these vessels cannot be accorded the right to transform themselves into ships of war until they have visited some other Russian port outside the Black Sea and there received their equipment and commissions; but the opinion has also been expressed that such recognition should not be accorded until the vessels have again returned to the Black Sea.

Hitherto His Majesty's Government have refrained from insisting that the "Peterburg" and "Smolensk" should be sent back to the Black Sea. It was, however, understood that the orders delivered to them by His Majesty's ship "Forte" directed them to return to the Baltic, and it might consequently be argued that His Majesty's Government were aware, and had accepted without protest knowledge of the fact that their ultimate destination was not to the Black Sea.

Lord Lansdowne is disposed to think that it may be difficult to maintain, having regard to considerations of policy, that the initial fault of these vessels has put them, beyond all recall, out of action for the remainder of the present war. It would seem more reasonable to contend only that their original fraud vitiated the whole of their proceedings as alleged men-of-war during the continuance of those particular voyages which began with their fraudulent issue through the Dardanelles under the guise of merchant-vessels, and that a ship which has issued from the Black Sea as a merchant-vessel cannot, during the continuance of that particular voyage, be commissioned either on the high seas or in a non-Russian port as a Russian public ship.

It appears to Lord Lansdowne that there would in practice be great difficulty in maintaining the view that a Russian merchant-vessel bound from Odessa to Libau, viâ the Sea of Marmora, with a general cargo, could not, after her arrival at Libau, be fitted out and commissioned as a Russian public ship, even although the general cargo and the voyage to Libau were merely devices to extricate her from the Black Sea and to render her subsequently available as a man-of-war.

Similarly, assuming that a line of subsidized Russian mail-steamers (liable to be called upon for service as armed cruisers in time of war) ran between Odessa and St. Petersburgh, it would not, as it seems to his Lordship, be easy to take exception successfully to such vessels being commissioned at the latter port, and taking guns and ammunition on board there, merely because they had left Odessa after the outbreak of war, and had passed the Straits as merchant mail-steamers in pursuance of their ordinary avocation as such.

I am to request that you will take the inclosed papers into your consideration, and that you will favour his Lordship at your early convenience with your opinion—

1. Whether, in the event of the "Smolensk" and the "Peterburg," or either of them, being recommissioned, &c., as public ships at Libau or some other Russian port outside the Black Sea, without having previously returned thereto, His Majesty's Government would be justified in notifying to the Russian Imperial Government that they were unable to recognize these vessels, in virtue of a commission conferred in such circumstances, as duly constituted ships of war.

2. Should your answer to question 1 be in the affirmative, whether, if these vessels should return to the Black Sea and the Russian Government should dispatch them or other ships of the Russian Volunteer Fleet through the Dardanelles under the guise of merchantmen and under the merchant flag, though carrying in their holds the armament and equipment of men-of-war, His Majesty's Government should, in the event of such vessels being commissioned on their subsequent arrival at a Russian port, outside the Black Sea, notify to the Russian Government that they are unable to recognize them as duly constituted war ships.

3. Should you, in either or both cases, consider that a notification to the Russian Government would be desirable, his Lordship would be glad to be favoured with your further advice as to the terms in which such notification could most advantageously be couched.

4. His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any observations of a general character which you may be good enough to offer on the papers now submitted to you.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Sir C. Hardinge .. .. (And Minutes.)	(No. 132. Treaty)	September 26, 1904.
(B.)	Sir N. O'Conor ..	(No. 9. Treaty. Telegraphic)	August 2, ,,
(C.)	To ditto	(No 10. Treaty. Telegraphic)	August 2, ,,
(D.)	Mr. Hurst to the Attorney-General		October 4, ,,
(E.)	The Attorney-General to Mr. Hurst .. .. .. (And Minutes.)		October 5, ,,
(F.)	Sir C. Hardinge .. .. .. (Sent to Law Officers, October 26.)	(Telegraphic)	October 25, ,,
(G.)	Admiralty.. .. .. (Sent to Law Officers, October 29.)		October 27, ,,

---

Report.

As the passage of vessels of war through the Dardanelles and Bosphorus is forbidden by Treaty, the question in each case must be what was, in fact, the character of the vessel at the time when she passed through the Straits.

Any vessel which is genuinely a merchant-vessel may, with perfect propriety, be brought through the Straits, and no objection could be raised to the subsequent equipment and commissioning of this vessel in a Russian port as a ship of war. It would make, in our opinion, no difference even if there were, at the time she was brought through the Straits, the intention by such equipment and commission, afterwards to convert her into a ship of war. The passage of the Straits is forbidden only to a vessel which is then a ship of war. If the vessel was a ship of war at the time of her passage, and was allowed to pass through on the representation that she was a merchantman, her passage was wrongful, and we cannot see that the mere fact that she is afterwards commissioned as a vessel of war at a Russian port can make it right for her to take part in the war. Ex hypothesi, she would have remained in the Black Sea but for her representation that she was a merchantman, and it appears to us that she ought to retain that character during the war which was in progress when she so made her exit. If she retains her mercantile character she may return to the Black Sea, and then be converted into a ship of war, but would, of course, be confronted with the old difficulty if she attempted again to pass the Straits.

Whether a particular vessel is a ship of war may be a somewhat difficult question of fact in particular cases. If, as suggested, the vessels of the Volunteer Fleet are, in their structure, adapted for carrying guns and carry guns in their holds which can be mounted when the Straits are passed, we should say that they ought to be regarded as ships of war.

We answer the questions put as follows:—

To the First Question.—We think that in the event of the "Smolensk" or "Peterburg" being recommissioned as ships of war at Libau, His Majesty's Government would be justified in notifying to the Russian Imperial Government that they were unable to recognize these vessels as duly constituted ships of war. There can be no question of these vessels returning to the Black Sea if, as we understand is the case, they have flown and are now flying the flag of Russian men-of-war. In this respect, their case is even weaker than it would have been if they had adhered to the mercantile flag until they reached Libau.

To the Second Question.—As we have already indicated, we do not think that the case of the return of these two vessels to the Black Sea can arise. As to the general question put under this head, we think that in the case supposed, His Majesty's Government would be justified in notifying to the Russian Government that they cannot recognize such vessels as duly constituted ships of war.

1904

For the reasons indicated in the earlier part of this Report, we do not think that the mere issue of a Commission at a Russian port is, for this purpose, enough. It is necessary that by equipment there the vessel should have been transformed into a ship of war, and apparently the vessels of the Volunteer Fleet, being already vessels of war, would require no such transformation.

Whether such notification should be made in either, or in both, of the cases mentioned in the first and second questions, is a matter of policy. As indicated in your Lordship's Minute of the 23rd August, 1904, it might be dangerous to admit that a Volunteer Fleet vessel which had come out of the Black Sea flying the merchant flag had a right while the war was in progress to convert herself, even in a Russian port, into a warlike vessel. On the other hand, although the telegram of the 2nd August, 1904, to Sir Nicholas O'Conor mentions equipment in a Russian port as necessary for this purpose (a fact which is perhaps overlooked in some of the discussion which has taken place on this point), such equipment seems hardly applicable to vessels of the Volunteer Fleet if we are right in the view which we take as to their structure and armament. The effect of any such notification at the present crisis upon Russia on the one hand, and upon public opinion in England on the other, may be of importance.

To the Third Question.—If it should be determined that any such notification should be sent, its terms should be based upon the considerations contained in the general observations which we have prefixed to our answers to the specific questions.

To the Fourth Question.—We have no further general observations to make on the questions in Mr. Campbell's letter of the 18th instant.

With regard to the further papers containing the letter from the Admiralty of the 27th instant, which suggests that a warning should be addressed to the Turkish Government with regard to the eight Volunteer steamers now in the Black Sea, this again raises a question of policy.

We think that the suggestion of the Admiralty deserves careful consideration. Upon the facts stated, these vessels appear to be in reality ships of war, requiring no further equipment to act as such; and it appears to us that it would be dangerous to admit that by merely sailing round to Libau, and there receiving their Commissions, they can lawfully assume the character of public belligerent vessels. Possibly, having regard to what has occurred in the cases of the "Smolensk" and "Peterburg," the Turkish Government may see their way to prevent their exit.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Law Officers' Department,
October 29, 1904.

No. 48.

[November 10, 1904.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, October 25, 1904.

Further respecting rumoured transfer of "Teutonic" to foreign flag.

Gentlemen,

WITH reference to your Report, dated the 13th June last, relating to certain negotiations said to be then proceeding for the sale of the steam-ship "Teutonic," of the White Star Line, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list, from which it will be observed that His Majesty's Government have reason to believe that fresh negotiations are now in progress for the sale of that vessel.

I am to invite your attention to the correspondence which has passed between this Department and the Admiralty (Papers B and C) with regard to the powers of the White Star Company to dispose of the vessel under the two Agreements between the Company and His Majesty's Government, copies of which documents are inclosed for convenience of reference (Papers D and E).

A copy of the Report furnished by you on the 13th June last is also inclosed (Paper F).

I am to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion—

1. Whether, under the Subvention Agreement between the White Star Company and the Admiralty, the former have power to dispose of the "Teutonic" without the consent of His Majesty's Government prior to the 1st April, 1905, the date on which, under notice given to the Company by the Admiralty, this Agreement will terminate.

2. Whether, in view of the fact that, by clause 8 of the Agreement, the Company undertake not to transfer the "Teutonic" to a foreign flag without the previous consent in writing of the Admiralty, and in view of the opinion expressed by you in your Report of the 13th June last as to the remedy existing in case of attempted infraction of a like stipulation in the Agreement with the American "combine," any similar power of restraint is possessed by the Admiralty under clause 8 of the Subvention Agreement.

3. Lord Lansdowne would also be glad to be favoured with any observations of a general character which you may desire to offer on the papers now submitted to you.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Translation of telegram to General Director Ballin, Hamburg .	October 9, 1904.
(B.)	To Admiralty	October 14, „
(C.)	Admiralty	October 20, „
(D.)	Agreement of July 4, 1903.
(E.)	„ August 1, 1903.
(F)	Law Officers' opinion	June 13, „

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

THE Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs presents his compliments to the Law Officers of the Crown, and, with reference to Mr. Campbell's letter of the 25th ultimo, relating to the negotiations reported to be now in progress for the sale of the steam-ship "Teutonic," has the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to inclose a telegram which has been obtained, under the warrant of His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, and which refers to negotiations suspected to be in progress for the sale of the steam-ships "Teutonic," "Majestic," and "Aurania."

It is requested that this telegram may be taken into consideration together with the papers already before them, and that the Law Officers will favour Lord Lansdowne with their opinion in the matter at their early convenience.

Foreign Office, November 8, 1904.

Report.

1. It is clear that the fact of notice having been given to determine the Agreement does not affect the right of His Majesty's Government until the date specified in that notice, the 1st April, 1905, shall have arrived.

The provisions of clause 8 are by no means clear, but we think that, upon the whole, the provision in the first sentence against transfer to a foreign flag should be read as including a proposed sale to a foreign Company or person, as that would involve the vessels being put under a foreign flag.

We should point out, however, that, even on this construction, the provisions of the first sentence against transfer to a foreign flag might be avoided by selling to a British subject, in which case the sale could not be stopped unless the Admiralty chose to purchase, and the British purchaser might afterwards resell to a foreign Company or person.

1904

Upon the whole, we think that the Company have not power, under clause 8, to sell to a foreign Company or person direct without the consent of the Board of Admiralty.

2. We answer this question in the affirmative. We read the third sentence of clause 8, although its wording is somewhat peculiar, as meaning that, in the case of a sale or transfer which is rightfully carried out in accordance with the terms of the first and second sentences of clause 8, the Company shall be bound to substitute other vessels under clause 10 under pain of the forfeiture of one year's subvention without prejudice to any other remedy.

3. The only general observation which we have to make is that the use which may be made in this connection of clause 3 of the Agreement of the 1st August, 1903, may deserve consideration. Its provisions to guard against transfer to a foreign flag seem to be at once clearer and more comprehensive than those of clause 8 of the other Agreement.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
November 10, 1904.

[Post Office.] No. 48A.

[November 17, 1904.]

Post Office to Foreign Office.—(Received October 25.)

General Post Office, October 24, 1904.

Sir,

Stoppage of mail-packets by Russian war-ships. Donald Currie's questions.

WITH reference to your letter of the 10th May last, concerning the stoppage of the packet "Osiris" by a Russian cruiser in the Mediterranean, I am directed by the Postmaster-General to acquaint you, for the information of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, that Messrs. Donald Currie and Co., the Managers of the Union Castle Steam-ship Company, have applied to this Department for instructions as to what action should be taken in the event of the stoppage of any of their mail-packets by Russian war-ships. Messrs. Currie inquire whether, in such a contingency, the captains of their packets should raise a formal protest (a) against any attempt to overhaul the mails, or (b) against any attempt to remove bags of correspondence from a mail-packet; and perhaps the Marquess of Lansdowne will be so good as to advise Lord Stanley what reply should be sent to these inquiries.

I am, &c.
(Signed) H. BABINGTON SMITH.

Minutes.

Mr. Davidson.

W. M.

Foreign Office, October 26, 1904.

I should have said both (a) and (b) were covered by our letter of the 10th May, which went pretty fully into the whole question.

F. A. C.

Foreign Office, October 27, 1904.

It is quite clear that they are entitled to satisfy themselves in the ordinary way, and with certain limitations (i.e., not "breaking bulk," &c.) as to whether belligerent despatches are on board (a).

It is also clear that in no circumstances can they remove the suspect or tainted documents from the ship (b).

This, I think, the Russian Government has practically admitted with regard to the case of the mail bags which they took off the German mail-steamer, and subsequently put on board a British mail-steamer.

(I haven't got the papers here, and cannot therefore cite the reference, but the case is well known to the Treaty Department.)

W. E. D.

12 A Lower Grosvenor Place,
November 6, 1904.

Lord Lansdowne,

We suggest that the draft should be modified in the sense of the rider we have annexed to it.

No exemption for mail-steamers has yet taken its place in international law, and in point of law the mail-steamer must be taken in for adjudication in respect of one despatch of a contraband nature, although it would be infinitely more convenient for every one that the despatch should be removed, and the vessel allowed to proceed.

But we think that there is a tendency to relax the rules of law in the case of mail-steamers, and we suggest for consideration the possibility of giving an answer somewhat in the spirit of that given in the House of Commons with reference to the stoppage of the "Osiris."[*]

R. B. F.
E. C.

November 17, 1904.

Annex.

Draft of Letter from Foreign Office to Post Office.

Foreign Office. November 18, 1904.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Marquess of Lansdowne to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th ultimo, with regard to inquiries made by Messrs. Donald Currie and Co. as to what steps should be taken by the captains of their mail-steamers in the event of their stoppage by Russian war-ships.

In reply, I am directed to refer to the statement of the rules of law on this subject in the letter from this Department of the 10th May last relating to the detention of the P. and O. steam-ship "Osiris." I am to add that there is not by international law any right to remove bags or letters from a mail-packet, as no modification has been established of the rule of law which requires that a vessel carrying contraband must be brought into port for adjudication.

Belligerent rights in the case of mail-steamers should, however, be exercised with the utmost consideration, as the inconvenience caused by their stoppage and detention is extreme.

Messrs. Currie cannot be advised by His Majesty's Government as to the propriety of their making through the captain of the mail-steamer a protest in any particular case.

No. 49.

[November 25, 1904.]

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, November 14, 1904.

Gentlemen,

Coaling of Russian Fleet by "Roddam" at Vigo.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to inclose for your consideration a letter from the Commissioners of His Majesty's Customs, forwarding copies of papers relating to the clearance of the British vessel "Roddam" with a cargo of coal; which cargo, though apparently at first destined for St. Vincent and later on for Teneriffe, would seem to have been finally consigned to Vigo, at which latter port it is stated to have been transferred to the Russian fleet.

Previous correspondence in print respecting the question of the chartering of

---

[*] This refers to Sir Charles Palmer's question of the 10th May, 1904, which, however, does not specifically mention any particular mail-ship.

1904

vessels for the purpose of coaling belligerent ships outside British territorial waters is also inclosed for convenience of reference.

Lord Lansdowne, as at present advised, is disposed to think that it would be undesirable to institute proceedings in the present instance unless it is clearly incumbent upon His Majesty's Government to take this course. In his Lordship's view the line dividing ordinary cases of traffic in contraband of war between neutral traders and belligerents, from cases in which the neutral trader attends a belligerent fleet, and permits his vessels to become store-ships in the employment of the belligerent is not easy to draw; and his Lordship considers that as, in a case of this kind a jury would probably not be very ready to convict, the risk of an abortive prosecution is therefore particularly to be guarded against, and that it would consequently be both unwise and impolitic to institute proceedings unless on very clear and sufficient evidence that an offence has been committed.

I am to request that you will take this matter into your consideration and will favour his Lordship with your opinion whether, on the facts disclosed in the letter from the Board of Customs, there is sufficient evidence showing that the "Roddam" was instructed to wait upon the Russian fleet and to supply coal as required, to justify or require the institution by His Majesty's Government of proceedings under the provisions of "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870."

Lord Lansdowne would be glad at the same time to be favoured with any observations of a more general nature which you may desire to offer on the subject.

I am, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

Foreign Office to Law Officers of the Crown.

MR. CAMPBELL presents his compliments to the Law Officers of the Crown, and, with reference to his letter of the 14th instant, has the honour, by the direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit, for their information, a despatch from His Majesty's Consul at Dakar, reporting the arrival at that port of colliers stated to be in attendance on the Russian fleet.

It is requested that this despatch may be taken into consideration together with the other papers now before the Law Officers; and that his lordship may be favoured with their opinion upon the whole question of the supply of coal by British colliers to the Russian fleet at their earliest convenience.

Foreign Office, November 22, 1904.

List of Papers.

Board of Customs, November 8, 1904.
Printed Correspondence respecting Chartering of Vessels for Coaling Belligerent Ships outside Territorial Waters, 1870–1904.
Consul Cromie, No. 42, Africa, November 8, 1904.

Report.

In our opinion upon the facts disclosed in the letter from the Board of Customs, and the fact that the "Roddam" did attend upon the Russian fleet at Vigo, there is some evidence to support a prosecution under "The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870." The case is, however, far from clear. There is no obligation upon His Majesty's Government to institute such proceedings, and whether His Majesty's Government should do so is a question of policy. An abortive prosecution would be very unfortunate, and its institution against a British firm might lead to great pressure upon His Majesty's Government to detain German vessels loading in British ports presumably for the same purpose.

If a strong and clear case presented itself, it might be proper to prosecute in indication of our neutrality and in justice to those British ship-owners who have refused such lucrative but unlawful employment.

We cannot advise a prosecution in this case.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
November 25, 1904.

No. 50.

[December 21, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, November 16, 1904.

Gentlemen,

Vessel carrying contraband: as to her continued liability to seizure.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit, for your consideration, two letters which his Lordship has received from the North of England Protecting and Indemnity Association, (a) asking for an expression of the views of His Majesty's Government on the question of a vessel's continued liability to seizure by a belligerent in consequence of her having carried a contraband cargo on a previous voyage; and (b), inquiring whether certain suggested alterations and extensions of the Rules of the Association with regard to contraband are in conformity with the views of His Majesty's Government on the subject.

I am also to inclose the draft of the reply which his Lordship proposes to return to these inquiries, and to request that you will take the matter into your consideration, and will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion as to whether the terms of the proposed answer are right and proper.

His Lordship would also be glad to be favoured with any observations of a general nature which you may desire to offer upon the papers now submitted to you.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

North of England Protecting and Indemnity Association	..	August 25, 1904.
" "	..	November 10, 1904.
" "	..	November 25, 1904.	[Sent to L.O. Dec. 2.]
Draft reply.

Report.

We have indicated in black ink* upon the draft reply initialled by us some suggestions for consideration.

We think that, upon the whole, it would be better to avoid any reference to the Standing Interrogatories. We are by no means satisfied that these Interrogatories are not, upon this point, right; as the nature of the enterprises upon which the ship has been employed in the past may, in case of doubt, throw light upon the character of the adventure immediately in question. We think, however, that it is not desirable that the Foreign Office should express its views upon this subject, as the matter is one of some delicacy, and any expression of opinion might lend itself to misunderstanding and possible misrepresentation abroad, if the letter should be published.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON

Royal Courts of Justice,
December 21, 1904.

---

* Printed in italics

1904

Annex.

Foreign Office to the North of England Protecting and Indemnity Association.
[Sent December 23, 1904.]

Foreign Office, December , 1904.

Sir,

THE Marquess of Lansdowne has had under his consideration your letter of the 25th August last, asking for an expression of the views of His Majesty's Government on the question of a vessel's continued liability to seizure by a belligerent in consequence of her having carried contraband cargo on a previous voyage.

I am to express his Lordship's regret that your letter should have remained so long unanswered, and to explain that, as the case of the "Allanton," to which special reference is made in your letter, was still before the Prize Courts, it was considered preferable to defer replying until His Majesty's Government were aware of the decision of the Admiralty Council at St. Petersburgh.

It will, no doubt, be satisfactory to the Association to observe that the Court of Appeal has reversed the decision of the Vladivostock Prize Court, thereby disposing of the question so far as the "Allanton" is concerned. With regard to ~~the general question~~, your further inquiry, Lord Lansdowne ~~would deprecate any public discussion upon the subject, in view of the fact that the "Standing Interrogatories" which are administered under the British Prize Court Procedure, are apparently intended for the express purpose of eliciting information as to the behaviour of prizes during their previous voyages. In these circumstances, his Lordship thinks that it might be better, from the point of view of your Association, not to raise the question,~~ does not think it desirable to enter into a discussion of the general question of the possible appeal in such cases of carriage of contraband on a previous voyage.

I am also directed by Lord Lansdowne to acknowledge the receipt of your further letters of the 10th and 25th ultimo, and to inform you that the points raised therein are matters for the consideration of your Association in consultation with their own legal advisers, and that his Lordship is unable to undertake the responsibility of advising the Directors with regard to the scope and drafting of proposed alterations or extensions of the Association's Rules.

R. B. F.
E. C.

No. 51.

[December 26, 1904.]

Mr. Cave to the Marquess of Lansdowne.—(Received December 6, 12·30 P.M.)

(Treaty.)
(Telegraphic.)

Zanzibar, December 6, 1904, 11·10 A.M.

* * * * * *

Russo-Japanese war: Coaling of Russian fleet at Zanzibar.

In view of possibility of portion of Baltic fleet now at Jibuti calling at Zanzibar for coal, I request instructions as to whether any objection is to be taken to their obtaining supplies from, firstly, English, secondly, French coaling firm so long as they do not make Zanzibar a base of operations. The expression in the Declaration of Neutrality, "nearest port of her own country," is defined in Admiralty instructions as inclusive of a colonial port, and, consequently, even if Declaration can be held to apply to a British Protectorate, the Russian ships, whatever their destination, can press the demand for as much coal at Zanzibar as they can carry.

Minutes.

The telegram he refers to is No. 11 in Section 20 of Print, but has no particular bearing on the points now raised, and which are very difficult. [This refers to Foreign Office telegram to Mr. Cave of the 7th September.]

The following papers have an important bearing on them:—

Print, Section 18, No. 88, and Minutes.

Print, Section 19, No. 9, and Minutes; No. 47* (to Attorney-General); No. 74 (from Attorney-General).

At that time we were dealing with the two Volunteer fleet ships, now with the Baltic fleet. Moreover, since that date the Order in Council of the 24th October has been issued and was sent to Zanzibar on the 7th November, so it either has just got there or will shortly do so.

Mr. Cave, in alluding to the Declaration of Neutrality, means the letter to Departments, but the rules therein laid down do not apply to Zanzibar.

It appears to me that, as regards British coaling firms, we can deal with them now just as if they were in the waters of a British Colony. Possibly with foreigners too; but this is thinner ice. See Mr. Hurst's Memorandum of the 27th August.

The whole question, as the Attorney-General has said, is largely a matter of policy.

No coaling rules have been made for Zanzibar, nor has any Proclamation been issued there.

Can we, or should we, as the Protecting Power, put in force the new British principles in Zanzibar, and also orders like those in Colonial Office of the 2nd December to Colonies?

W. M.

Foreign Office, December 5, 1904.

In my opinion, based chiefly on the Attorney-General's Memorandum of the 2nd September (p. 59 of Section 19 of Print), we should be justified in advising Zanzibar to adopt our rule, and give no coal to a belligerent war-vessel on her way to the seat of war, and that this should be made applicable to French (or other foreign) coal merchants as well as British.

The Attorney-General then thought that it was very doubtful whether, as a matter of policy, we should advise the Sultan to adopt our new rules, on the ground that other Powers might contend that they were unreasonable; and probably Lord Lansdowne would like to know whether he is still, after the lapse of three months, of the same opinion.

I should be inclined to the view that, if we are legally on firm ground, it is reasonable that we should advise the Sultan to take the course which, after full consideration, we have thought right to adopt ourselves.

F. A. C.

Foreign Office, December 6, 1904.

I agree generally, but there are some special difficulties with regard to Zanzibar, as distinguished from other British Protectorates in Africa.

I think it is pretty clear that we should advise Zanzibar to adopt our rule, and, in case of need, to publish a Notice or Proclamation to that effect, which it will be incumbent on all Zanzibaris to observe, and of which infringements by persons amenable to the jurisdiction of the Sultan will be punishable in the Sultan's Courts.

British subjects and protected persons will, of course, be punishable in His Majesty's Court.

There is, however, another class of persons at Zanzibar who are at present justiciable neither in the Sultan's Court nor in the British Court. I allude to the subjects of Powers such, for instance, as Germany, who have not yet surrendered their extra-territorial jurisdiction.

These persons, if punished at all for a breach of the Sultan's Proclamation, will have to be punished by the German Court; and I am not satisfied that in practice, however it may be in theory, this method of restraint will be found thoroughly adequate.

It may therefore be desirable to take, as far as is possible, special precautions to prevent any breach of the Proclamation from taking place, and that can best be done by preventing any vessels from using, or from enjoying the hospitality of, the Sultan's port unless they give an undertaking not to infringe his Proclamation.

If, after such an undertaking has been given, a German shipper or a merchant-vessel owned by a German ship-owner should attempt to infringe it, then, I think, the Sultan's officials could prevent the infringement which was contemplated by using force sufficient for the purpose.

If the aggrieved German instituted proceedings against the Sultan's Government he would have to lay them in the Sultan's own Court, and the plea in reply thereto would be by alleging that what was done was an Act of State. Such a plea would be a complete answer to any one not a subject of the Sultan (and possibly might be according to the law and usage of the Zanzibar Constitution—in so far as it possesses such a thing—an answer to one of the Sultan's subjects).

1904

Force cannot be used in the case of a man-of-war or public ship, but such ships would only be admitted to the hospitality of the port on the distinct understanding that they will not use the port as a warlike base.

If there is reason to apprehend that Zanzibar may be tentatively approached for coaling or supply purposes by the Baltic fleet or by tenders and store-ships under the orders of that fleet, we must make up our minds on this question so as to be able to deal with it at once when the necessity arises, and I suggest the best means which occur to me for dealing with it.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, December 24, 1904.

I sent these papers to the Attorney-General at Nairn, whence he has returned them to me with a Memorandum (herewith) dated the 26th December, 1904.

The Memorandum is, I think, in general accord with my Minute, and if it becomes necessary to induce the Sultan to take any active steps at Zanzibar, I believe that the Attorney-General would agree in the course which is suggested in the Minute to meet that contingency.

It is well to be prepared beforehand for such an emergency, but there seems to be very little prospect now of the Baltic fleet—or of its coal tenders—going near Zanzibar, and unless such prospect becomes imminent I think Mr. Cave had better not approach the Sultan in the matter.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, December 29, 1904.

Mr. Hurst has seen the papers, including the Attorney-General's Minute, and agrees in this view.

W. E. D.

Foreign Office, December 29, 1904.

No question now arises of the use of Zanzibar as a "base of operations," unless possibly by the accompanying colliers if they repeatedly came to the port to fill up for the fleet—this should not be permitted.

The question is whether the fleet en route for the theatre of war should be allowed to coal at Zanzibar.

I do not think it desirable to issue now a new set of coaling rules, professedly general, but really intended to meet this emergency.

There may, however, be strong grounds of policy for advising the Sultan to refuse coaling facilities in this very special case. This is not the case of one vessel asking for the usual hospitality in the matter of coaling, but of a whole fleet engaged in a hostile expedition. It was at one time proposed (in Law Officers' Report of the 6th June last) that this should be dealt with in British ports as a special case to which the ordinary practice as to coaling should not be extended, and it seems to me that the Sultan might be advised to deal with it on this ground, if it is considered expedient so to do.

The question is rather of the terms of admission of the war-vessels and the accompanying colliers to Zanzibar waters than of the rights of trade of Germans or others enjoying extra-territorial jurisdiction in Zanzibar itself.

Questions might no doubt arise with Russia, and also with Germany, as respects German colliers, and the case in the present state of international law as to coaling may give rise to difficulties. But, on the other hand, it might excite just remark if, in a country entirely under British influence, an expedition of this sort were allowed to equip itself with coal so as to reach its striking point in Japanese waters.

R. B. F.

December 26, 1904.

As there would seem to be now little danger of the Baltic fleet putting into Zanzibar, instructions in the sense of these Minutes might be drafted and sent by mail.

F. A. C.

Foreign Office, December 30, 1904.

Draft instructions accordingly and let me see.

L.

Foreign Office, December 31, 1904.

SIAM.

No. 52.

[July 19, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, April 30, 1904.

Rex v. Tilleke and Mong Ong.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the papers as noted in the accompanying list respecting the trial and conviction before Mr. H. P. Wilkinson, Acting Judge of His Majesty's Court for Siam, of Mr. A. F. G. Tilleke, and of one Mong Ong, on a charge of receiving stolen property, and the subsequent quashing of the conviction on appeal by the Supreme Court at Singapore.

Mr. A. F. G. Tilleke is a Congolese gentleman of some prominence in Bangkok, and is the proprietor of the "Siam Observer."

The original trial terminated on the 17th October, 1903, after having lasted eleven days.

At the conclusion of the evidence the Jury returned the following answers to the questions put by the Judge.

In the case of Tilleke:—

1. That he knew the goods were stolen between the 23rd and 28th July, 1903;
2. That he was in constructive possession of the goods taken to his house on the 28th before that date, and in actual possession on and after that date;
3. That it was his intention to pay money for the goods.

In the case of Mong Ong:—

1. That he knew the goods were stolen;
2. That he was in constructive possession of them;
3. That he intended to make profit for himself by their sale.

Mr. Wilkinson treated these answers as equivalent to a verdict of guilty against both prisoners, and he sentenced Tilleke to six months' and Mong Ong to twelve months' imprisonment.

Both Mr. Tilleke and Mong Ong appealed to the Supreme Court at Singapore for a reversal of these Judgments under Article 70 (2) of "The Siam Order in Council, 1903," and difficulties occurred from the outset with regard to the Crown's being represented at Singapore as Mr. Tilleke succeeded in retaining almost the entire bar of the Straits Settlements.

Mr. Wilkinson received the notice of appeal, and telegraphed to Mr. Collyer, the Attorney-General, inquiring whether he would accept a retainer on behalf of the Crown.

Mr. Collyer at first refused to comply with the request, alleging that under the terms of his appointment he was unable to accept private practice.

1904

The appeal being the first to the Supreme Court at Singapore from the Court for Siam, newly constituted and acting under the provisions of a new Order in Council, it was a matter of some special importance that the Crown should be adequately represented, and that all that could be properly said in support of the conviction and of the law, as laid down by Acting Judge Wilkinson, should be placed before the Supreme Court by a competent authority.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies was accordingly requested to instruct Mr. Collyer to appear on behalf of the Crown, and to accept instructions sent to him through His Majesty's Legation at Bangkok. The date fixed for the hearing of the case on appeal was the 22nd February.

It will be seen from Mr. Wilkinson's despatch No. 8 of the 3rd March that on the 13th February the record of the case was posted to the Registrar of the Supreme Court, and a copy to the Attorney-General, Singapore, both being informed by accompanying letters that the appeal papers then sent were not complete as the Judge's observations were not ready, but would be sent as soon as possible. The Attorney-General was at the same time asked to apply, if necessary, for an adjournment. On the 18th February His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Bangkok telegraphed to the Attorney-General of the Straits Settlements that the Judge's observations would be dispatched to the Court and himself on the 21st instant, and he was instructed to take steps to postpone the trial till after their arrival. The observations of the Judge were accordingly posted on the 21st February to the Registrar of the Supreme Court at Singapore for the use of the Judges and copies to the Attorney-General. On the 18th February, Mr. Collyer, with counsel for the defence, applied to the Chief Justice of the Straits Settlements for an adjournment, which was refused. It appears that at the time of such application and refusal the documents dispatched from Bangkok on the 13th February had not arrived at Singapore. On Friday, the 19th February, the documents first dispatched appear to have arrived in Singapore. On the afternoon of Saturday, the 20th February, Mr. Justice Law, one of the Judges forming the Court of Appeal, arrived in Singapore from Penang. On Monday, the 22nd February, the Appeal Court sat, and at once heard the appeal in Rex v. Tilleke, and on the 23rd February, that in Rex v. Mong Ong.

It appears impossible that the documents first dispatched which arrived on Friday, the 19th February, consisting of the record of a trial which had lasted for eleven days, of the application for and grounds of appeal filed, the exhibits and statements of case can have been fully perused by either the Judges of the Court of Appeal or the Attorney-General.

At the time of the hearing, Mr. Wilkinson's observations were, as the Court then knew, on their way to Singapore.

It will be seen from the report furnished by Mr. Collyer that when he applied for a postponement on the 18th February he met with a refusal, no other day but the 22nd being available for the three Judges to sit together. The same day, however, an unfortunate mistake occurred in the decoding of the telegram from Bangkok instructing Mr. Collyer to obtain a postponement of the trial. The telegram was decoded for Mr. Collyer at the Colonial Secretary's office and was there stated to be to the effect that he should "take no steps" to postpone the trial. He subsequently learnt that "take no steps" was an error and that the telegram really ran, "take steps."

Mr. Tilleke's case came on for hearing first, and on the first day the Court decided that the special findings of the Jury in that case did not amount to a verdict of guilty. After hearing further argument, they gave Judgment on the second day to the effect that there was no evidence of a criminal receiving on the part of Mr. Tilleke, either actual or constructive.

In the case of Mong Ong the Court gave Judgment for the Appellant on practically the same grounds as in the Tilleke case, but more particularly on the ground that there was no evidence of "constructive" possession of the goods by Mong Ong nor of criminal receiving.

I am to point out that Article 73 of "The Siam Order in Council, 1903," embodying the general practice of the Judicial Committee on this point, specially provides that there shall be no appeal in a criminal case to His Majesty the King in Council from a decision of the Supreme Court, except by special leave of His Majesty in Council.

Lord Lansdowne is, moreover, aware that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council are not as a rule very ready to grant special leave to the appeal in a criminal matter, especially when the application is made on behalf of the Crown, and that the instances of such appeals being entertained are rare, but His Lordship at the same time considers that in view of the somewhat peculiar circumstances attending the hearing of the appeal at Singapore, and, in particular, the very small amount of study the papers can have received at the hands of the Attorney-General and also of the Judges, and the fact that those papers were not complete, it is desirable that such steps as are possible should be taken to uphold the Judgment of the Court for Siam.

I have the honour to request accordingly that you will take these papers into your consideration and furnish His Lordship with your opinion as to whether, having regard to all the circumstances, the case is one in which an application for special leave to appeal should be made to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and, if so, on what grounds such application can most properly be based. Lord Lansdowne will also be glad to be favoured with any general observations which you may have to offer on the papers submitted herewith.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Acting Judge Wilkinson	(No. 7)	October	26, 1903.
(B.)	Ditto	(No. 2)	January	7, 1904.
(C.)	Acting Judge Wilkinson to Mr. Davidson ..	(Telegraphic)	January	25, ,,
(D.)	To Mr. Paget	(Telegraphic)	February	1, ,,
(E.)	Mr. Paget	(Telegraphic)	February	2, ,,
(F.)	Acting Judge Wilkinson	(No. 6)	February	2, ,,
(G.)	To Colonial Office	..	February	4, ,,
(H.)	To Mr. Paget	(Telegraphic)	February	6, ,,
(I.)	Colonial Office	..	February	20. ,,
(J.)	Acting Judge Wilkinson	(No. 7)	February	22, ,,
(K.)	Mr. Paget	(Telegraphic)	February	24, ,,
(L.)	Ditto	(No. 8. Consular)	March	3, ,,
(M.)	Acting Judge Wilkinson	(No. 8)	March	3, ,,
(N.)	Colonial Office	..	March	4, ,,
(O.)	Mr. Paget	(No. 9 Consular)	March	17, ,,
(P.)	Colonial Office	..	April	7, ,,

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

THE Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs presents his compliments to the Law Officers of the Crown and, with reference to his letter of the 30th ultimo, has the honour to transmit to them, by direction of the Secretary of State, the inclosed further despatch which has been received from Mr. H. P. Wilkinson, Acting Judge of His Majesty's Court for Siam, respecting the case of Rex v. Tilleke and Moung Ong.*

Foreign Office, May 9, 1904.

Report.

This is not a case in which an application should be made for special leave to appeal.

We see no ground for supposing that the decision was wrong and there is an entire absence of any special circumstances to justify such an application by the prosecution in a criminal case.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
July 19, 1904.

---

* Acting Judge Wilkinson, No. 9, March 22, 1904.

TURKEY.

No. 53.

[August 18, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, May 5, 1903.

Gentlemen,

Status of Persons of British origin resident in Turkey.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, a series of papers (in print), dealing with the status of persons of British origin who are permanently resident in the Ottoman Empire.

There have been foreign communities resident in the Turkish dominions ever since the fall of Constantinople, and several British communities of this description have been in existence for a prolonged period. Families which have always regarded themselves as British have been settled in Turkey in some cases for as many as ten generations past, and, though in the great majority of cases the members of these families have been born abroad, they have always in practice been treated as British subjects, and of recent years registered under the Ottoman Orders in Council accordingly.

Returns showing the numbers and names of persons registered as (1) British subjects, and (2) as British-protected persons in the Ottoman dominions, and the grounds upon which they were so registered, were prepared in 1887–89, and will be found in the inclosed volume of Confidential Print (5968). It will be seen that the number of persons thus registered with their families, by reason of their ultimate British descent, is very considerable, and probably amounts to some thousands.

Doubts have from time to time been expressed by his Lordship's predecessors as to the strict legality of this course, and the attention of His Majesty's Ambassador and of the various members of the Consular service in the Levant, called to the provisions of 4 Geo. II, cap. 21, and 13 Geo. III, cap. 21, which limit British nationality to the children and grandchildren, in the paternal line, born abroad of natural-born British subjects, but partly, no doubt, owing to the peculiar conditions of life in the Turkish dominions, it has not been found feasible to exclude from the registers of British subjects persons who are not, strictly speaking, within those two Acts.

The point has again been recently raised, and a considerable feeling of anxiety has been shown by the members of the British communities in Turkey lest Lord Lansdowne might decide that persons in the position indicated above were not entitled to be registered, and that their names (if already upon those registers) must be removed from the registers of British subjects, and no persons registered in future unless they were qualified under the Acts of 1730 and 1773.

An English barrister, Mr. Pears, who is the leader of the local bar at Constantinople, was deputed by two of the largest of these communities to urge the claim that all their members are, in law, and have always been, British subjects, irrespective of the number of generations for which they have been settled in Turkey, Three Memoranda in support of this claim have been submitted by Mr. Pears, and will be found on pp. 26, 31, and 40 of the Confidential Print herewith.

Lord Lansdowne is advised that the arguments put forward by Mr. Pears do not establish the claim of these residents to British nationality, and in this view Sir Kenelm Digby, Permanent Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (see letter No. 22 in the Confidential Print), and Professor Dicey, K.C. (see p. 48 of Print) agree. On the other hand, there seems to be good ground for holding that these residents of British origin could not be claimed as subjects of the Porte, and that, if they be not of British nationality, they are of no nationality at all.

After a consideration of all the circumstances Lord Lansdowne is disposed to think that, should you be of opinion that the descendants of British subjects born in Turkey beyond the third generation are not entitled, in law, to British nationality, it will be desirable to introduce legislation for the purpose of confirming the status of those already registered as British subjects, and to confer that status on their descendants in the male line. If such legislation is to be undertaken, various questions arise upon which Lord Lansdowne desires, for his guidance and assistance, to be furnished with your views.

The first is whether it is possible to confine the scope of the proposed Bill to Turkey. The dominions of the Porte are, so far as is known, the only place where there are British communities of such long standing that more than two successive generations have been born abroad, but except for this there do not seem to be any arguments in favour of limiting the legislation as suggested. Residents in China, and other places where jurisdiction is exercised under the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, would certainly feel aggrieved, and it would seem unreasonable to confer privileges upon British subjects in Turkey which are not shared in those great African Protectorates of His Majesty, which are British Colonies in all but name and technical legal status. It is also most desirable that any such alteration of the law should be made in the manner least likely to attract attention or provoke criticism, and, if it is confined to Turkey, there is a possibility that it might lead to remonstrances by the Porte against what would be represented as the removal of large classes of persons from the jurisdiction of the Sultan.

Lord Lansdowne would therefore prefer that the legislation should extend to all places where His Majesty exercises jurisdiction under the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, and in this view the Secretary of State for the Home Department, to whom these papers have been referred, concurs.

The next question is the nature of the provisions that should be inserted in the Bill.

The great desire of all those upon whose status doubt has been cast is that their British nationality should be recognized as already existing. Any arrangement enabling them to become British subjects by letters of denization, or by naturalization would not be accepted, in any way, as a satisfactory settlement; it would increase the irritation, and the remedial means provided might even be rejected by those whom it was intended to benefit.

Lord Lansdowne therefore proposes that the Bill should provide that the issue of British subjects should, if born within places where His Majesty exercises jurisdiction under the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, themselves be British subjects.

A Bill has already been drafted by the Parliamentary Counsel to the Treasury, a copy of which is inclosed herewith, to codify and amend the Law relating to naturalization and aliens in accordance with the Report of the Inter-Departmental Committee on the Naturalization Acts which was laid before Parliament in 1901. It is understood, however, that the Secretary of State for the Home Department does not propose to proceed with the Bill during the present Session. The question, therefore, arises whether it is better that a short Bill should be introduced at once to carry out the above objects, and efforts made to get it passed this Session, or whether the matter should be allowed to rest until the larger measure is introduced. On the one hand, it would be an advantage to set the matter at rest as soon as possible, but, on the other hand, it is desirable that the question should attract as little attention as may be, and it is thought this latter object would be better achieved by the point being dealt with in the general Bill.

If this alternative be adopted, provisional measures can be taken that will sufficiently prevent any further anxiety being felt among the members of the British communities in Turkey, and that will insure an absence of anything approaching public agitation.

It has been suggested that if the question is dealt with in the general Bill, this should be effected by a slight alteration of the wording of clause 28 (see p. 39 of the Confidential Print).

I am to request that you will be so good as to take the papers transmitted herewith into your early consideration, and will favour Lord Lansdowne with your opinion—

1. Whether persons of British descent in the paternal line born in Turkey, but not within the Acts of 1730 and 1773, are or are not British subjects;
2. If not, whether legislation to confer upon them British nationality should be confined to Turkey, or should extend to all places where His Majesty exercises jurisdiction under the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts;
3. Whether the suggestion that the issue of British subjects should be given British nationality if born in such places is, in your opinion, a desirable method of dealing with the question;
4. Whether the legislation should be enacted by a short Bill to be introduced this Session, or whether it is desirable to wait until the introduction of the larger measure;

1904

5. His Lordship would also be glad to be furnished with any observations of a general character which you may have to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

Confidential Print, "Correspondence relative to the National Status and Registration in the Ottoman Dominions of Persons of British Descent," 1 to 24.
Confidential Print, "Returns of British-protected Subjects in the Ottoman Dominions, 1887–89" (Confidential, No. 5968.)
Draft Bill.
"Ottoman Order in Council, 1899" (Confidential, No. 7171).

Report.

It appears to be clear that persons of British descent in the paternal line born in Turkey, although not within the Acts of 1730 and 1773, are, as between His Majesty and the Ottoman Porte, entitled to the benefit of the Capitulations. There has been a long and unbroken practice to this effect, and we do not think that the Porte could successfully raise any objection to it. It is, moreover, to be noted that the Porte has never raised any such objection, and apparently never will. We do not think that it is necessary in order to bring such persons within the benefit of the Capitulations, that it should be established that for all purposes they are British subjects. It is enough if it appears (as we think it does) that they are British subjects within the meaning of the Capitulations. On this point we agree with Mr. Dicey's opinion, set out at pp. 48 and 49 of the Confidential Print which accompanies the despatch under reply. This view of the case disposes of the point which is by far of the greatest practical importance, viz., the right of these persons to British protection in Turkey.

The question whether such persons are, for all purposes, British subjects does not appear ever to have arisen in the Courts of this country. It might arise under the Foreign Marriages Act, under Lord Kingsdown's Act as to wills, or under the Act as to offences against the person. It might also arise if such persons settled in this country and claimed the franchise.

This last question is, in our opinion, one of difficulty. It is quite clear that the Acts of 1730 and 1773 have no application—the question being, as is pointed out by Sir Kenelm Digby, whether at common law such persons are natural-born subjects. To be a natural-born subject at common law it is necessary to be born within the King's allegiance.

It is clear that in certain cases this condition might be satisfied, although the birth did not take place physically within the King's dominions, as in the case of the children of Ambassadors abroad, and of children of British parents born within the lines of the King's army in foreign parts. An alien is defined by the Court in Calvin's Case (7 Rep. 16 a) as a subject that is born out of the ligeance of the King and under the ligeance of another. We think that the children of British parents born on a desert island belonging to no Sovereign would, even at common law, not be aliens. They would certainly not be born within the allegiance of any other, and as everyone must be either an alien or a subject (7 Rep. 17 a), we think such children would be held to be born within the allegiance, and therefore subjects. We think that the same principle would apply in the case of children of British parents born in British Protectorates, otherwise the extraordinary consequence would follow that the great-grandchild of a man born in England who had settled in, e.g., Rhodesia, where his descendants had remained under English law, would be an alien.

As regards Turkey, it appears that the children in question are not Turkish subjects (see pp. 32–3 of the Confidential Memorandum), Lord Watson (13 A. C., at p. 440) appears to regard them as retaining their nationality as if they had remained in their own country. They appear to us not to be aliens within the definition in Calvin's Case (ubi supra), and to fall under one of the special cases referred to by Lord Coke (ibid., p. 18 a), in which persons may be born within the allegiance of the King though not within his dominions.

We therefore think the true conclusion is that these persons are British subjects at common law.

2, 3, 4, and 5. It is, however, impossible to say that the point is clear. There is a strong body of opinion the other way, and we think it desirable that the question should be settled by a clause in a general Act somewhat in the form suggested by Mr. Hurst, with modifications as proposed by Sir E. O'Malley.

We should deprecate the introduction of a Bill dealing specially with this subject. It would call public attention to the point in a way which might be attended with disastrous results if the Bill failed to pass.

In the meantime, registration should be continued in accordance with the practice that prevailed until this question was unfortunately started by the dispatch of the Consuls to the Foreign Office without communication with the Embassy.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
August 18, 1904.

UNITED STATES.

No. 54.

[October 27, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, August 25, 1904.

Gentlemen,

Supplementary Extradition Convention between Great Britain and the United States.

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the draft of a Supplementary Extradition Convention between Great Britain and the United States (Paper A), which has been prepared with a view to include Bribery and Offences against Bankruptcy Law in the list of offences on account of which extradition may be granted under the Conventions of the 12th July, 1889, and the 13th December, 1900, between the two countries (Papers B and C).

It will be seen from the annexed correspondence that, on the 30th October last, the American Ambassador submitted to his Lordship the draft of a Supplementary Convention between the two countries, making the offence of Bribery extraditable (Paper D).

In referring the matter to the Home Office (Paper E), his Lordship suggested that the opportunity might be taken to include Offences against Bankruptcy Law in the new Convention. The print inclosed in this letter (Paper F) gives (pp. 10–34) correspondence which had taken place in 1901–1902 on the question of concluding an arrangement with the United States in regard to such offences against Bankruptcy Law. The Home Office (Paper G), having pointed out, however, that the offence of bribery could not be included in an extradition Treaty without an amendment of English law to make it an extradition crime, Mr. Choate was so informed (Paper H).

Mr. Choate having requested a reconsideration of the matter (Paper I), further correspondence with the Home Office ensued (Papers J and K), as a result of which his Excellency was informed (Paper L), that his Majesty's Government were prepared to conclude a Convention with regard to bribery, on the clear understanding that it cannot be brought into operation in this country unless and until the sanction of Parliament has been obtained to the necessary alteration of the law; and an amendment was suggested in the draft Convention to provide for its coming into effect at a date subsequently to be agreed upon. It was further suggested to his Excellency that "offences, if made criminal by the laws of both countries, against bankruptcy law" should be included in the scope of the Convention.

Papers M and N refer to subsequent conversations between Lord Lansdowne and Mr. Choate with respect to the necessary action in the matter of the legislative assemblies of both countries, and to his Excellency's views on the definitions of the offences as set forth in the proposed Convention.

1904

I have the honour to request that you will take these papers into your consideration, and that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion whether in the circumstances the terms of the draft Convention are right and proper.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. A. CAMPBELL.

List of Papers.

(A.) Draft of Supplementary Extradition Convention.
(B.) Extradition Convention. [Library No. 849. July 12, 1889.]
(C.) Extradition Convention. [Library No. 1111, December 13, 1900.]
(D.) Mr. Choate to Foreign Office	October 30, 1903.
(E.) Foreign Office to Home Office	November 5, „
(F.) Print containing correspondence. [Library Confidential 7708.]	1900–1902.
(G.) Home Office to Foreign Office	November 28, 1903.
(H.) Foreign Office to Mr. Choate	December 28, „
(I.) Mr. Choate to Foreign Office	February 11, 1904.
(J.) Foreign Office to Home Office	April 27, „
(K.) Home Office to Foreign Office	May 20, „
(L.) Foreign Office to Mr. Choate	June 6, „
(M.) Foreign Office to Sir M. Durand	June 22, „
(N.) Foreign Office to Sir M. Durand	June 29, „
(O.) Home Office to Foreign Office	July 15, „

Report.

In our opinion the terms of the draft Convention as altered in red ink* are right and proper.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
October 27, 1904.

Annex.

Draft of Supplementary Extradition Convention.

THE President of the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, being desirous of enlarging the list of crimes on account of which extradition may be granted under the Conventions concluded between the United States and Great Britain on the 12th July, 1889, and the 13th December, 1900, with a view to the better administration of justice and the prevention of crime in their respective territories and jurisdictions, have resolved to conclude a Supplementary Convention for this purpose and have appointed as their Plenipotentiaries, to wit:—

The President of the United States, ; and
His Britannic Majesty, .

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, which were found to be in due and proper form, have agreed to and concluded the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The following crimes are added to the list of crimes numbered 1 to 10 in the Ist Article of the said Convention of the 12th July, 1889, and to the list of crimes numbered 11 to 13 in Article I of the Supplementary Convention concluded between the United States and Great Britain on the 13th December, 1900, that is to say:

14. Bribery, defined to be the offering, giving, or receiving of bribes made criminal by the laws of both countries.
15. Offences, if made criminal by the laws of both countries, against bankruptcy law.

---

* Italics in print.

ARTICLE II.

The present Convention shall be considered as an integral part of the said Extradition Conventions of the 12th July, 1889, and the 13th December, 1900, and the Ist Article of the said Convention of the 12th July, 1889, shall be read as if the lists of crimes therein contained had originally comprised the additional crimes specified and numbered 14 and 15 in the Ist Article of the present Convention.

The present Convention shall be ratified and the ratifications shall be exchanged either at Washington or London as soon as possible.

It shall come into force at a date subsequently to be agreed upon ~~in conformity with~~ provided that the laws of the High Contracting Parties then in force provide for the granting of extradition in the cases hereinbefore mentioned, and it shall continue and terminate in the same manner as the said Convention of the 12th July, 1889.

In testimony whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention in duplicate and have thereunto affixed their seals.

Done at , this day of .

No. 55.

[November 16, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, November 10, 1904.

Gentlemen,

Supplementary Extradition Convention with U.S.A. As to date of coming into force.

WITH reference to your Report, dated the 27th ultimo, relative to the proposed Supplementary Extradition Convention between this country and the United States, I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to inform you that, on the 8th instant, in the course of conversation with his Lordship, of which a record is inclosed herein,* the American Ambassador took exception to the wording of the penultimate paragraph of Article II of the draft Convention, viz., that the Convention should come into force "at a date subsequently to be agreed upon, provided that the laws of the High Contracting Parties then in force provide for the granting of extradition in the cases hereinbefore mentioned."

Mr. Choate based his objection on the ground that this wording would necessitate a second Agreement with regard to the date, and he urged that it would be preferable that the Article should be so worded as to bring the Convention automatically into force. The usual formula in such cases was, his Excellency said, one under which it was provided that the Convention should come into force days after its publication, in conformity with the laws of the High Contracting Parties. His Excellency expressed the hope that His Majesty's Government would consent to the adoption of this phraseology, which would leave them free to publish the Convention at such time as might be thought necessary.

I am to inclose a copy of the draft Convention as submitted for the consideration of the United States' Government, and to request that you will take the matter into your consideration, and will, at your earliest convenience, favour his Lordship with your opinion as to whether the amendment proposed by Mr. Choate is one to which His Majesty's Government may properly assent.

Should you be of opinion that it would be undesirable for His Majesty's Government to accept the amendment, it will be of great assistance to Lord Lansdowne, in discussing the matter further with Mr. Choate, to be informed of the reasons on which that view is based, and by special reference to which it may be supported.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ELDON GORST.

---

* To Sir M. Durand, No. 28, Telegraphic, November 8, 1904.

1904

Report.

We suggest that the alterations made by us in red ink* might meet the views of the American Ambassador. The formula proposed by the American Ambassador is ambiguous, as the words "in conformity with the laws," &c., might be read as merely referring to publication according to law, and we think it ought to be made clear that His Majesty's Government are not in a position to bring the Convention into force until the necessary Act of Parliament is passed.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
November 16, 1904.

Annex.

Draft of Supplementary Extradition Convention.

THE President of the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, being desirous of enlarging the list of crimes on account of which extradition may be granted under the Conventions concluded between the United States and Great Britain on the 12th July, 1889, and the 13th December, 1900, with a view to the better administration of justice and the prevention of crime in their respective territories and jurisdictions, have resolved to conclude a Supplementary Convention for this purpose, and have appointed as their Plenipotentiaries, to wit:

The President of the United States, ; and

His Britannic Majesty, .

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, which were found to be in due and proper form, have agreed to and concluded the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

The following crimes are added to the list of crimes numbered 1 to 10 in the Ist Article of the said Convention of the 12th July, 1889, and to the list of crimes numbered 11 to 13 in Article I of the Supplementary Convention concluded between the United States and Great Britain on the 13th December, 1900, that is to say:

14. Bribery, defined to be the offering, giving or receiving of bribes made criminal by the laws of both countries.

15. Offences, if made criminal by the laws of both countries, against bankruptcy law.

ARTICLE II.

The present Convention shall be considered as an integral part of the said Extradition Conventions of the 12th July, 1889, and the 13th December, 1900, and the Ist Article of the said Convention of the 12th July, 1889, shall be read as if the lists of crimes therein contained had originally comprised the additional crimes specified and numbered 14 and 15 in the Ist Article of the present Convention.

The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged either at Washington or London as soon as possible.

It shall come into force ~~at a date subsequently to be agreed upon provided that~~ days after the publication of the Treaty by the High Contracting Parties, and such publication shall be made whenever the Laws of the High Contracting Parties then in force provide for the granting of extradition in the cases hereinbefore mentioned, and it shall continue and terminate in the same manner as the said Convention of the 12th July, 1889.

In testimony whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention in duplicate, and have thereunto affixed their seals.

Done at , this day of (Initialled) R. B. F.
E. C.

---

* Italics in print.

VENEZUELA.

No. 56.

[April 29, 1904.]

(No. 1.)

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, January 21, 1904.

Gentlemen,

I HAVE the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the papers noted in the accompanying list relative to the complaint put forward by Julio Baldon, George Green, and Walter Cummings, British subjects employed on board the United States' sloop "Alemania," of ill-treatment suffered on the seizure of the vessel by the Venezuelan gun-boat "Veinte tres de Mayo" on the 12th June, 1903.

Ill-treatment of British subjects on U.S. "Alemania," seized by Venezuelan gun-boat during revolution.

It will be seen from the statements made under oath by these men (Inclosure in Colonial Office of the 12th August—Paper A) that the American sloop "Alemania," 11 tons burden, the property of an American citizen, and sailing under the American flag, left Port of Spain on the 5th June, 1903, for Guiria, viâ Macupo, Pataque, Rio Grande, La Salina, and Taguapara. She was dispatched on the return journey from Guiria to Trinidad, viâ Rio Grande, on Thursday, the 11th June, 1903, and arrived at Rio Grande the same day. Here she took in a cargo of forty-eight and a-half bags of cocoa, and sailed on Friday, the 12th June, about noon.

The Venezuelan gun-boat "Veinte tres de Mayo" hailed her about 2 o'clock on Friday night, ordered the master, Julio Baldon, to come on board the gun-boat and to bring his papers and flag with him, which was done. Whilst the master was detained on board the gun-boat a launch was sent alongside to fetch the seven passengers and then search the vessel and its cargo. In the course of this search the soldiers upset everything on board and emptied the water-casks, which act caused much hardship, as the crew were left without water for three days.

When the launch returned again she took the captain and passengers as prisoners to the sloop, and the master was told that his vessel and cargo were seized on account of his being dispatched from Guiria by the revolutionists.

An armed crew, consisting of one officer and three soldiers, was put in charge. A line was passed from the gun-boat to the sloop, and the latter was taken in tow until Boca Grande was reached, when the sloop was ordered to proceed under her own sail to Carúpano.

Carúpano was reached on the night of Sunday, the 14th, at 11 o'clock, and the officer went on shore, ordering the mate, George Green, to come with him. The officer carried with him the sloop's register, papers, and flag, which were never returned.

The mate was ordered to look for water, and then the party returned on board with three additional armed men, who were sent on shore again on Monday morning.

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon on Monday, the 15th June, all hands were taken on shore under an armed guard and marched to the Magistrate's office to be tried.

Julio Baldon made his declaration to the Judge, and nothing was said to the prisoners at the time, but at 5 o'clock on the same day three passengers were liberated, whilst the master, mate, and four passengers were taken to gaol and kept in prison until the 21st June (Sunday evening). No food was supplied unless paid for, and in order not to die of hunger the master had to sell two gold rings to procure provisions.

The three men were then set at liberty on Sunday evening, and were left destitute in the streets of Carúpano, where they had to beg for bread. Their clothes and personal effects were detained, and have never been returned to them.

A full declaration of the above-mentioned facts was made before the American Consul, who supplied Julio Baldon and George Green with 70 cents for food.

Eventually the men begged a passage to Trinidad from the master of the British sloop "Avail," and they left Carúpano on Saturday, the 27th June, reaching Port of Spain, Trinidad, on Monday, the 29th June, 1903.

1904

Mr. Bax-Ironside, His Majesty's Minister at Carácas, was requested on the 18th August, 1903 (Paper B), to address a note to the Venezuelan Government on the subject, which he accordingly did on the 24th September, and a despatch has been received from him (Paper C) forwarding a note from Señor Sanabria, the Venezuelan Minister for Foreign Affairs, from which it appears that the case was brought before the National Court of Finance at Carúpano on the 15th June, 1903.

The "Alemania" was valued, with her cargo, at 6,449 bol. 56 c., and she was adjudged to be confiscated by the Court for reasons which are given in the judgment which forms Inclosure 4 in Mr. Bax-Ironside's despatch.

The value of the so-called "prize" was awarded in equal portions to the Heads of the Customs at Carúpano, Generals J. H. García Reverón and Francisco José Aquilarte as the accusers, and to Andrés Puriel and Enrique Chirinos as the captors. Baldon, the master, was also condemned to pay certain duties, such as war tax, &c.

The Venezuelan Government also forwarded a copy of a letter addressed by the Commander of the Venezuelan man-of-war "Miranda" to the Commander-in-chief of the National Navy, La Guayra, containing a copy of a communication sent by him to the Collector of Customs at that port, in which he justifies the action of the Venezuelan Government in connection with the seizure of the "Alemania." The Commander of the "Miranda" states that the master of the sloop and her crew were taken to Carúpano to give their evidence in the legal proceedings, and that they did so in accordance with the formalities laid down by law without having been subjected to any molestation or having failed to receive either the consideration due to them on board or the sustenance necessary to support life. It will be observed, however, that the latter statement is in direct conflict with the sworn evidence of the British subjects interested which has been quoted above.

The real reasons for the condemnation of the "Alemania" by the Venezuelan Court appear to be those marked 2 and 4 in the judgment, i.e., that the vessel was trading with a port which was at the time in the hands of the insurgents, and which had been closed by fiscal Decree.

On this point I am to transmit to you, for convenience of reference, the accompanying copies of former Reports furnished by you (Papers D and E), from which it will be seen that it has hitherto been the contention of His Majesty's Government that if the Venezuelan Government wished to close ports in the hands of revolutionaries an effective blockade was the only method that was legitimate.

In these circumstances, Lord Lansdowne requests that, you will take the accompanying papers into your consideration, and favour him with your opinion whether this is a case in which the Decree of the National Court of Finance at Carúpano should be recognized, and whether the Venezuelan Government should be informed that compensation must be paid to the three British subjects concerned, and the sums exacted from Julio Baldon restored.

His Lordship will also be glad to receive any observations of a more general nature which you may be disposed to offer.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Colonial Office		August	12, 1903.
(B.)	To Mr. Bax-Ironside	(No. 9)	August	18, „
(C.)	Mr. Bax-Ironside	(No. 305)	November	27, „
(D.)	Law Officers [Confidential 8022, p. 85]		July	16, 1902
(E.)	Ditto [Confidential 8168, p. 67]		July	1, 1903

(No. 2.)

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Gentlemen, Foreign Office, April 22, 1904.

THE Attorney-General, on the 29th January last, requested, semi-officially, that certain further information might be furnished with regard to the complaint put forward by Julio Baldon, George Green, and Walter Cummings, British subjects employed on board the United States' sloop "Alemania," of ill-treatment suffered on the occasion of the seizure of that vessel by the Venezuelan gun-boat "Veinte tres de Mayo," a matter which was submitted to your consideration in my letter of the 21st January last.

Sir R. Finlay asked that he might be furnished with—

1. A copy of Law XXI of the Venezuelan Code of Finance alluded to in the judgment of the National Court of Finance at Carúpano;
2. The Decree suppressing the customs of Guiria.

He, moreover, desired to be informed—

3. Whether the seizure took place within the territorial waters of Venezuela;
4. Whether any action was being taken by the United States' Government in view of the fact that the "Alemania" was an American vessel.

In answer to these requests for further information I now have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the following documents:—

1. Copy of vol. xxii of the "Collection of Venezuelan Laws and Decrees" (Paper A). On pp. 207 and 208 will be found paragraphs 6 and 10, Article 1, Chapter 1, of Law XXI, on which the judgment of the Court appears to have been based.
2. A despatch from Mr. Bax-Ironside, His Majesty's Minister at Carácas (Paper B), sending translation of the Decree of the 27th May, 1903, suppressing the custom-houses of La Vela de Caro, Guanta, Puerto Sucre, Guiria, Caño Colorado, and Ciudad Bolivar.
3. A further despatch from Mr. Bax-Ironside (Paper C), sending an affidavit by the mate of the "Alemania" to the effect that the vessel was seized while on the high seas.
4. A copy of a telegram from the same source (Paper D), reporting that the United States' Government have instructed their Minister at Carácas to make a representation to the Venezuelan Government relative to the seizure of the "Alemania."

In addition to the documents asked for by the Attorney-General I am to transmit to you, for your further information, a despatch from His Majesty's Minister at Carácas (Paper E), forwarding an opinion which he was instructed to obtain from a Venezuelan lawyer on the case of the "Virginia," in which the main issue involved is similar to that of the "Alemania," viz., that she was seized for infringing the Decree of the 27th May, 1903, which suppressed the custom-house of Guiria, and for trading with a closed port.

The "Virginia" was a Trinidad sloop owned and manned by British subjects, but sailing under the Venezuelan flag. According to the depositions of the master and mate she was cleared on the 6th June, 1903, for Trinidad by the Custom-house officials at the port of Guiria. On the following day, while off the coast of Venezuela, at Ocurrito, and while her crew had gone ashore to get water, the Venezuelan gun-boat "Veinte tres de Mayo" seized and carried her off, leaving the crew ashore. The cargo, which consisted of six bags of cocoa, as well as the wearing apparel, &c., on board the "Virginia," was also seized. The crew of the gun-boat appear to have sold the cargo for their own benefit in the Trinidadian market, for the master states that he traced the empty cocoa bags at Port of Spain. It appears, from information subsequently furnished by the Venezuelan Government, that the "Virginia," like the "Alemania," was brought to Carúpano and confiscated by order of the National Court of Finance at that place. The two men on board the "Virginia" and a passenger eventually worked their way back to Trinidad.

The legal quotations contained in M. Arismendi's opinion have, with one exception, been verified in the "Collection of Venezuelan Laws and Decrees" transmitted herewith, and marginal notes of the references have been inserted. It has been found impossible to trace the provision, quoted as Article 47, Law XXI, of the Code of Finance, to the effect that "ships coming from abroad without papers showing that they have been properly dispatched by the Consul at their start shall be immediately embargoed and proceeded against." In this connection I am to state that it is understood that at the time when the "Virginia" sailed from Port of Spain the Venezuelan Consul at that port had ceased to issue Consular clearances for Guiria because the latter place was at that period frequently and recurrently in the hands of the insurgents. It probably was held by them on the 7th June, the date of the seizure of the "Virginia," for it is known, through the correspondence which has passed relative to the "Alemania," that they held Guiria on the 12th and 13th of that month.

1904

M. Arismendi also alluded to Article I of the Treaty between this country and Venezuela. I am to transmit to you a copy of the Treaty of 1834 (Paper F), Article I of which renews the provisions of the Treaty with Colombia of 1825. In Article II of this latter Treaty, a copy of which is also transmitted (Paper G), will be found the provisions quoted in the opinion.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. VILLIERS.

List of Papers.

(A.)	Vol. xxii, "Collection of Venezuelan Laws and Decrees."	(No. 108)	May	28, 1903.
(B.)	Mr. Bax-Ironside	(No. 53)	March	5, 1904.
(C.)	Ditto	(No. 14, Telegraphic)	April	10, ,,
(D.)	Ditto	(No. 330)	December	24, 1903.
(E.)	Ditto		April	18, 1825.
(F.)	Treaty with Colombia [Library No. 214]		October	29, 1834.
(G.)	Treaty with Venezuela [Library No. 244]

Report.

In our opinion His Majesty's Government should decline to recognize the Decree of the National Court of Finance at Carúpano, and should demand compensation for the British subjects concerned.

We assume that, as is stated in the Decree, the ports closed were in the hands of the insurgents.

In such circumstances the seizure could be justified only for breach of a blockade duly proclaimed and enforced. A condemnation for breach of Customs Regulations in respect of a port not under the control of the Venezuelan Government cannot be recognized.

(Signed) R. B. FINLAY.
EDWARD CARSON.

Royal Courts of Justice,
April 29, 1904.

ZANZIBAR.

No. 57.

[Received April 27, 1904.]

Foreign Office to the Law Officers of the Crown.

Foreign Office, April 20, 1904.

Gentlemen,

Cesser of French extra-territorial jurisdiction in Zanzibar. Jurisdiction over foreigners.

AS a result of the negotiations which have recently taken place between His Majesty's Government and the French Government in regard to the cesser of French extra-territorial jurisdiction within the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, it has been agreed that the jurisdiction of the British Courts in those dominions shall in future extend to all French citizens and French-protected persons in that island and in the Island of Pemba.

It has also been agreed that the following two classes of persons shall be considered as "French-protected persons":—

1. Natives of a French Protectorate.

2. Persons bonâ fide in the employment of French citizens, residing within the Sultan's dominions.

It has further been agreed that persons whose right to be treated as French citizens or as French-protected persons in Zanzibar is disputed by the British or by the Zanzibar Government shall, pending the settlement of their respective cases by the diplomatic channel, be treated as under French protection, and shall accordingly be justiciable by the British Courts.

The competence of the British Courts in Zanzibar is at present defined by the "Zanzibar Order in Council, 1897," a copy of which is inclosed.[*]

In Article 5 (i) of this Order in Council it is stated that the Order "extends to British subjects and to foreigners, with respect to whom the Government whose subjects they are has, by Treaty or otherwise, agreed with Her Majesty for, or consented to, the exercise of power or authority by Her Majesty," and the term "foreigner" is defined as meaning "a subject or citizen of a State in amity with Her Majesty other than Zanzibar."

Protected persons who are not either subjects or citizens of a foreign Power would therefore appear not to be covered by the Order in Council of 1897, and I have the honour, by direction of the Marquess of Lansdowne, to transmit to you the draft of an Order in Council,[†] extending the definition of the word "foreigner" so as to include the individuals in question.

The phrase "claimed as being under the protection" has been added, in view of the French requirement that the dispute shall be settled through the diplomatic channel.

I am to request that you will take this letter and the draft Order in Council into your consideration, and that you will favour his Lordship with your opinion whether the terms of the draft satisfactorily carry out the object desired, or whether they can be advantageously modified or amended, and, if so, in what respects.

I am at the same time to ask that you will be good enough to add any other observations of a general nature which you may desire to make upon the papers submitted to you herewith.

I have, &c.
(Signed) T. H. SANDERSON.

Report.

We would suggest that it would be better to proceed by amending the "Zanzibar Order in Council, 1897," as follows:—

At end of 3 (vii) add: "and any person under or claimed as being under the protection of such State."

In 5 (i) after "whose subjects they are" insert "or under whose protection they are or are claimed as being."

R. B. F.
E. C.

House of Commons,
April , 1904.

o

---

[] Zanzibar Order in Council, July 7, 1897 (Confidential No. 6934).

[†] Draft Zanzibar Order in Council. For text as issued see Order in Council, August 10, 1904 (Confidential No. 8229*).

PROPRIETARY STATEMENT

This film cannot be reproduced in whole or in any substantial part by use of film or microfiche either commercially or for gift without the consent of the publisher, Trans-Media Publishing Company of Dobbs Ferry, New York. Users are free to make reproductions of the decisions for reference use.

Copies of this film may be purchased from Trans-Media Publishing Co.

Trans-Media Publishing Co.
Dobbs Ferry, New York 10522

END